

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

CONDITIONS OF LABOR ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

(For exhibits under this subject see pages 10290 to 10449)

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 4, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh; Commissioners Garretson, Harriman, Weinstock, Lennon, O'Connell, and Aishton.

Chairman WALSH. We will please be in order. I might make an announcement that these hearings will open at 10 o'clock each morning and continue until 12.30; adjourn for luncheon until 2; resume and continue until 4.30. Those hours may be relied upon.

Mr. Perham, take the chair, please.

TESTIMONY OF MR. H. B. PERHAM.

Chairman WALSH. Your name is H. B. Perham?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business, please?

Mr. PERHAM. I am president of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you held that position?

Mr. PERHAM. Since the year 1901.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would sketch briefly your business experience, beginning at the time that you engaged in the telegraph business and down to the present time, assuming that you are a telegrapher.

Mr. PERHAM. I am a telegrapher; yes. I commenced in the telegraph business in 1871 and worked on various railroads throughout the United States and Canada until the year 1895. My positions in the railroad service were from call boy in the train service, as telegrapher, station agent, signalman, and, for a short time, train dispatcher.

Chairman WALSH. Train dispatcher for what railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. For the International & Great Northern Railroad of Texas.

Chairman WALSH. Have you occupied any other position with this labor organization?

Mr. PERHAM. From the year 1889 to 1895 I was general chairman representing the telegraphers on the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. In the year 1897—May, 1897, to be more correct—I was elected grand secretary and treasurer of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, an international position. I held that position until the year 1901, when I was elected as its president.

Chairman WALSH. Are there any other organizations of your calling in the United States? I desire to bring out what connection, if any, you had or have with the commercial telegraphers' organization, a hearing upon which was held in Chicago.

Mr. PERHAM. The commercial telegraphers have a union—an international union—and that organization represents that class.

Chairman WALSH. Well, have you any affiliation with them?

Mr. PERHAM. I am a member of that organization in good standing.

Chairman WALSH. Has your organization any affiliation with them?

Mr. PERHAM. A working agreement; that is, an agreement with several articles in it expressly stating where our jurisdiction begins and ends—that is, for both organizations—and what we shall do under certain circumstances, where we find a commercial telegrapher working in the railroad service or a railroad telegrapher working in the commercial service.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a copy of that agreement?

Mr. PERHAM. I have not with me.

Chairman WALSH. Would you be kind enough to transmit one to us, please, so that we may make it a part of our record?

Mr. PERHAM. I will take pleasure in doing so.

(See Perham Exhibit No. 1 at end of this subject.)

Chairman WALSH. Now, I understand you have prepared a statement on the particular subject of your own organization, Mr. Perham, in writing, which you desire to read.

Mr. PERHAM. That is true.

Chairman WALSH. You may submit it now, then, in your own way; and if there are any questions the commissioners wish to ask you afterwards, they will do so.

Mr. PERHAM (reading):

"The act creating the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, among other matters, provides that the commission shall inquire into existing relations between employers and employees, into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations, and also that it shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation.

"The Order of Railroad Telegraphers, in requesting an investigation of labor conditions on the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie, avers, through its president, that the present attitude of the managers of that company toward its employees and the policies of that company toward organizations of labor constitute a menace to the peace and progress of the people.

"From the great strike of 1887 to the present time, with trouble pending throughout the ranks of the telegraphers, station agents, signalmen, and other classes of employees, its officials have assumed an attitude of arrogance and harshness that inevitably leads to strikes and other disturbances inimical to public welfare and ill befitting a corporation so richly endowed by the people. Reference is made to the Third Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor, 1887, page 1072, and succeeding pages, for an account of the strike that took place in July, 1887, on that company's lines. The arbitrary and unfair actions of the officials at that time brought on the strike and other troubles, and the same attitude is being assumed by them at the present day.

"This company not only controls its own employees in a manner that constantly tends toward strikes and general dissatisfaction, but being one of the foremost companies of its kind in the United States, its example is often followed by other railroads. Its policies not only affect the conditions of the people in the States traversed by it, but they effect the conditions of people in numerous other States who receive and forward freight and travel over its lines.

"The company recognizes members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, but these transportation brotherhoods are the only regular labor organizations thus recognized.

"It does not recognize the regular organizations of the telegraphers, signalmen, signal maintainers, linemen, station agents, section foreman, trackmen, machinists, boiler makers, blacksmiths, car repairers, clerks, and others.

"At one time the Order of Railroad Telegraphers had a certain kind of standing with the company. It succeeded in getting its committees into conference with some of the subordinate officials of the company and in inducing them to formulate and publish general notices governing working conditions.

"These general notices were usually posted at division points where employees could see them, and they were to be considered as a proclamation from headquarters for the guidance of employees. The main objection to the general notices is that the officials of the company were at liberty to cancel or amend them at any time that such action suited their convenience or met with the approval of those higher up. They were not contracts such as usually govern the relation between employees and employer.

"After 1907 the Pennsylvania Railroad refused to meet or have any dealings with the regular telegraphers' organization. In 1909 and again in 1912 there was intense dissatisfaction among the employees of the telegraph department. A strike vote was taken in the latter year after the company had refused to see the general committee of the telegraphers to discuss with them wages and working conditions, and had furthermore discharged from their employ the telegraphers who were regularly elected to serve on this committee.

"Realizing the economic waste caused by strikes, the O. R. T. decided, after its members had voted in favor of going on strike, that they would appeal for mediation under the so-called Erdman Act. This mediation the company refused to accept, and opened a recruiting office in Philadelphia for the employment of telegraphers and also equipped its main-line offices with telephones intending to put inexperienced men in charge of those towers. This procedure would have endangered public safety.

"After the refusal of mediation by the company, the employees still desired if possible to attain their ends by peaceable methods, and as a last resort of that character concluded to place the facts before this honorable commission."

I desire to read for the benefit of the record copies of the general notices mentioned, which were issued by the company and took the place of schedules, wage scales, contracts, and things usually made by employees with employer. This is one of the general notices—No. 232—dated Baltimore, Md., August 24, 1908:

"The following regulations are for the information of all interested officers and employees, and are to govern telephone-block operators:

"1. Ability, fitness, and seniority entitle a telephone-block operator to promotion as opportunity may offer. The superintendent shall decide whether the candidate or applicant is qualified therefor.

"2. New positions and permanent vacancies will be bulletined to the various offices and towers, for a period of 10 days, by circular letter (or by telephone message when it can be done without burdening the wires), and at the expiration of that period given to the telephone-block operator making application in writing, if, in the judgment of the superintendent, he is qualified therefor and eligible by reason of seniority rights.

"3. A telephone-block operator failing to make application for a position forfeits to the man who accepts that position such senior rights as the position may carry with it, but will be given the opportunity to make application for the position when a vacancy occurs.

"4. In reduction of force, the services of the youngest employee (according to his seniority rights) will be dispensed with first; in reemployment, the oldest employee (according to his seniority rights) will be given employment first. Regulation No. 1 to govern in both cases.

"5. Employees transferred from one division to another, at the instance of the company, shall, when a vacancy occurs, be given seniority rights on the division to which transferred. An employee transferred from one division to another, at his own request, shall have seniority rights only from date of transfer.

"6. Employees who have received leave of absence shall not lose their seniority rights.

"G. LATROBE,

"Acting General Agent and Superintendent."

Another such notice, dated Baltimore, Md., April 13, 1910, No. 99, referring to Regulation No. 2 of the general notice for the government of telegraph operators, dated August 12, 1905, which reads as follows:

"New positions and permanent vacancies will be bulletined to the various offices and towers, for a period of 10 days, by circular letter (or by '23' message when it can be done without burdening the wires)—I might explain that a '23' message is a message to all concerned—and at the expiration of that period given to the telegraph operator making application in writing if, in the judgment of the superintendent, he is qualified therefor and eligible by reason of seniority rights."

Because of the fact that operators on some of the divisions have obtained positions through advertisement and in a few days made application for the positions which they had just vacated, the following is issued as a supplement to this regulation:

"An operator can not make application for a position he has just vacated, but if the position is vacated by the man who fills his vacancy he may then make application and his application will be considered."

There are two other such notices, showing amendments to the original notices that are issued, which I would like to file with the commission [reads:]

"BALTIMORE, MD., May 9, 1910.

"GENERAL NOTICE No. 127. .

"The following additions to the regulations for the government of telegraph operators are authorized:

"SUPPLEMENT TO REGULATION NO. 2.

"All temporary and prolonged vacancies (of six months or more duration) will be bulletined in the same manner as new positions and permanent vacancies and filled by the senior operator making application in writing, Regulation No. 1 to govern.

" SUPPLEMENT TO REGULATION NO. 5.

" When an office is closed or a reduction of force is made, seniority on the division entitles the employee affected to ask for any position held by another whose seniority is less than his own; and the employee affected shall have this right regardless of the rate of pay he formerly received or the rate of pay of the position to which his senior rights entitle him—Regulation No. 1 to govern. Such senior rights, however, shall not apply to offices where priority exists."

" BALTIMORE, Md., November 18, 1910.

" GENERAL NOTICE No. 401.

" The following regulation for the government of telephone operators has been authorized:

" Effective December 1, 1910, telephone operators who handle train orders or messages, block or report trains by telephone in lieu of telegraph, will be given equal rights with telegraph operators, based upon the time of their entering the service as either telegraph or telephone operators, and the same regulations as now in effect governing telegraph operators will apply to telephone operators.

" When a telegraph office is changed to a telephone office, it will not be considered a reduction in force and be open to advertisement unless the rate of pay or hours are changed.

" It is understood that in filling new positions and permanent vacancies, either telegraph or telephone, in accordance with present Regulation No. 2, both telegraph and telephone operators will be given an opportunity to make application for such positions. In case no applications for telephone positions are received from either telegraph or telephone operators, such positions to be filled by the selection of the superintendent."

Relating to charges Nos. 1 and 2 in our petition: The company in the last few years has officially recognized the four transportation brotherhoods, as before stated, and has entered into contractual relations with them. It has, however, persistently made war upon all other regular labor organizations for the purpose of breaking up existing organizations and of preventing the establishment of new ones.

In accordance with this policy it broke up the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks by the simple expedient of discharging those members of the brotherhood who would not withdraw from it.

It has persistently discriminated against the members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers by refusing them promotion and by discharging and intimidating its members.

When an attempt was made to organize the shopmen in 1911 it discharged all men as soon as their connection with the new organization was established.

The same thing happened in the attempt to organize the shopmen in 1914. As soon as the organization made any headway the company began its old policy of laying off the men who were interested in the movement. The methods used were not always so crude that the employee was told directly he was laid off on account of his union connections, but the general reason given was slackness of work, but the men affected were, in all cases, those interested with the union movement. In quite a few instances the company foreman very frankly told workmen that they were discharged for their labor activities, although they further told them some technical charge would be given officially as the reason for their dismissal.

In support of this we desire to submit a report from Third Vice President J. F. Riley, covering in detail the discrimination of that company against the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, as follows [reads]:

" Mr. WILBUR BRAGGINS, Grand President:

" I hereby make my report covering the period during which I was assigned to duty on the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburgh and Erie.

" When I commenced work on that system no trouble was anticipated, and so far as I knew no opposition to our organization existed among its officials. In fact, there was no reason to believe that anything but the most amiable and harmonious relations existed between that company and the brotherhood and that they would be perpetuated.

" Early in May I went to Philadelphia and attended an open meeting given under the auspices of Philadelphia Lodge No. 200. A large number of non-member clerks in the employ of the Pennsylvania Co. attended this meeting, as well as representatives from the locals at Jersey City, Trenton, and Camden, N. J., and Wilmington, Del. At this meeting the most earnest enthusiasm prevailed, and the early completion of the work on those lines was freely predicted by members and nonmembers alike. A short time previous to this meeting we had organized Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Md., and Wilmington, Del. After this meeting I remained in Philadelphia and vicinity for a few days attending an open meeting at Wilmington, at which Baltimore and Philadelphia locals were represented. At this meeting, like the one in Philadelphia, much enthusiasm was manifested and the prediction freely indulged in that we were in a position to rapidly complete the work on that system.

"I then went to New York City for the purpose of attending an open meeting arranged by Empire State Lodge No. 189 and of doing other necessary work there and in Jersey City. Shortly after my arrival in New York I received a message to the effect that the agent at Waverly Transfer had notified some of the members in the employ of the P. R. R. at that point that it would be necessary for them to either withdraw their membership from the organization or leave the service of that company. In view of the fact that the brotherhood had been established on the lines of the P. R. R. for some seven or eight years I felt that this was only a local matter and could readily be adjusted. Accordingly I called Organizers Crowe and Sherwood, who were in New York at the time, to my assistance, and with them went to Waverly Transfer and had an interview with the agent, Mr. Consadine. Due courtesy prompts me to say that we found Mr. Consadine a perfect gentleman in the interview which resulted. He refused to say whether this order which had been issued had emanated from him or whether he had been instructed by another to take such action. We felt that if the order had been issued at his instigation that we had so represented matters to him that it would not be enforced; if instructions had been issued by a higher official, that such facts would be demonstrated by like orders being promulgated at other points within a few days. We returned to New York, and some three or four days later I was informed that a similar order had been issued to some of the members at Wilmington, Del. Convinced thereby that the opposition being encountered was more than of a local nature, I telegraphed you for authority to form a general board of adjustment on the P. R. R. in order that all locals might take concerted action in an effort to combat such unwarranted opposition from, as I presumed at the time, the minor officials of that company, hoping thereby to adjust this matter. Such authority being given, I accordingly issued a circular letter to all lodges east of Pittsburgh and Erie on the Pennsylvania lines to send the chairman of their protective committees to Philadelphia on May 17 for the purpose of forming such board. It might be pertinent to remark in this connection that some of the members issued a circular to these locals a day or so later stating that such action was unnecessary and uncalled for, that the trouble was of a local nature and could be adjusted by the local protective committees. The following day an order was issued by the company to these members instructing them to relinquish their membership in the organization. The circular letter which they had issued was therefore withdrawn.

"The chairman of the local protective committees of a majority of the lodges on the P. R. R. east of Pittsburgh and Erie accordingly met in Philadelphia on May 17 and a general board was organized. Brother William Wivel, of Washington, D. C., was elected chairman of this board. The following forenoon a communication signed by this general board was sent by special messenger to General Manager Atterbury's office at Broad Street Station requesting an interview at as early a date as possible, and that a reply be returned by the messenger. In reply a note was received from Mr. Ramsey, of Mr. Atterbury's office, stating that Mr. Atterbury was out of the city, but if the committee would call at the office at 11 o'clock a. m. the following day, the 19th, that Mr. Nichols, an assistant to General Manager Atterbury, would give the board an audience. He was informed that the committee would be on hand at the hour named.

"About 10 o'clock a. m. on the 19th General Chairman Wivel was called to the telephone and informed by Mr. Jones, representing Mr. Atterbury, that Mr. Nichols was ill, that Mr. Atterbury was still absent, and that it would therefore be necessary to postpone the meeting until 10 o'clock a. m. the 20th, at which time both Mr. Atterbury and Mr. Nichols would be present.

"At the appointed time the committee (which had been formed from some of the members of the general board of adjustment, as it was deemed advisable to have the entire board go before the general manager) called at Mr. Atterbury's office and was received by Mr. Jones. He informed this committee that Mr. Nichols was still sick and unable to be at the office, and that it was the invariable rule of General Manager Atterbury not to receive any committee unless Mr. Nichols was present, as he, Mr. Nichols, handled all matters of this character; therefore a further postponement was necessary. It being impossible to say when Mr. Nichols would be able to return to the office, and Mr. Jones agreeing to inform Chairman Wivel when he returned, it was deemed advisable to disband the general board subject to the call of the chairman, which was done. Mr. Jones informed Chairman Wivel that he knew of no discriminatory order having been issued against the members of that organization.

"Some three days after the general board had left Philadelphia I received a telegram from General Chairman Wivel asking me to come to Washington at once. I went there and found that he had been dismissed from the service of the Pennsylvania Co. After going over the matter with him, we hoped, even against the evidence, that the discharge was at the instigation of some minor official in Washington and had not been ordered from the general offices of the company in Philadelphia; that it might therefore be adjusted at a later date through the general board of adjustment when meeting with the general manager. This was based upon the fact that Chairman Wivel's immediate superior, C. E. Wann, had requested him, before going to Philadelphia, not to take any matters to the general manager that could be adjusted locally. It was decided not to take the matter of Chairman Wivel's discharge up with the local officers, but to hold it in abeyance until the general board convened in Philadelphia.

"I returned to New York for the purpose of finishing up some work I had in hand there; visiting Jersey City, Trenton, South Amboy, Atlantic City, Baltimore, Wilmington, York, and other points on the P. R. R. for the purpose of trying to get the members to stand firm and assist in building up the organization to a more effective basis. In the meantime Chairman Wivel was engaged in trying to effect a date of meeting between the general board and General Manager Atterbury without success. It becoming apparent that the management had no intention of carrying out the promises made to the board, through Mr. Jones, I addressed a note to General Manager Atterbury requesting a personal interview. To this note I attached a memorandum giving specific cases of discrimination. As these specific cases should be made a part of this report, a copy of the memorandum sent Mr. Atterbury follows:

"Washington, D. C.—W. W. Bowie, freight agent, has informed his clerks that if any of them are members of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks that it will be necessary for them to withdraw from the organization under penalty of discharge for failure, and that if any nonmember clerk under his jurisdiction affiliates with the organization he will be discharged from the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

"C. E. Wann, yardmaster, has informed his clerks that it is a case of either withdrawing from the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks or losing their positions.

"Baltimore, Md.—Acting Supt. Latrobe (in place of Supt. Capp) has told his men that they either had to get out of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks at once or be dismissed from the service of the company.

"Yardmaster Sapp, at Bay View, has informed the clerks under his jurisdiction to withdraw their membership from the organization under penalty of dismissal, also instructing clerks who are members to file signed statements that they will withdraw from the organization, and those who are not members to file written statements that they will not become members of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks or of any kindred organization.

"York, Pa.—Acting Supt. Latrobe has instructed the members to file written statements that they have withdrawn from the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks and will not in the future join this or any kindred organization.

"Perryville, Pa.—The members have been indirectly informed by Yardmaster Cantwell that it will be necessary for them to withdraw their membership from the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks under penalty of discharge.

"Wilmington, Del.—The clerks in Assistant Engineer Duane's office have been served with written notice to withdraw from the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks under penalty of dismissal from the service. The same has been done in Supt. Bannard's office.

"The clerks in Gen. Supt. Brooks's office have been given a statement to sign to the effect that they have relinquished their membership in the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks and informed that failure to sign it would result in dismissal from the service of the company.

“Camden, N. J.—The clerks at Camden have been instructed to relinquish their membership in the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, being informed that this order came from the management.

“Trenton, N. J.—Freight Agent Morrison is trying to influence his clerks into withdrawing from the brotherhood.

“Jersey City, N. J.—W. H. Vreeland has informed his clerks that they must relinquish their membership in the organization at once, under penalty of dismissal.

“Waverly, N. J.—Yardmaster Wright has informed clerks under his jurisdiction that they must withdraw their membership in the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks at once under penalty of dismissal from the service of the company.

“Waverly Transfer.—Agent Consadine has informed the clerks under his jurisdiction that they must withdraw from the organization at once or be dismissed from the service.

“Sunbury, Pa.—The freight agent has been investigating to ascertain who are and who are not members.

“Renova, Pa.—The master mechanic has advised the clerks in his office to resign from the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, stating that he wished an immediate reply in order that he might report to his superintendent, W. J. Coughlin.

“The date for our convention being near, it was necessary for me to leave the Pennsylvania system and go to Toledo, Ohio. However, up to the time of leaving no reply had been received from General Manager Atterbury, and as none was ever forwarded to me, presume no reply was made.

“From Toledo I returned to the general offices at Kansas City, going back to the Pennsylvania lines in August. One peculiar feature of the actions of the officials of the Pennsylvania Co. was the fact that no antagonism had, up to the time of my leaving these lines, been directed against the members in Philadelphia; the only point of importance on that road east of Pittsburgh and Erie where we had any considerable number of members who had not felt the opposition. Upon my return to Philadelphia, however, I found that Local No. 200, in that city, had been forced to disband, the same tactics having been employed as at other points above enumerated. The futility of any attempt to openly reorganize in Philadelphia under such conditions being apparent, I went to New York City, and beginning there personally interviewed every former member possible between that city and Washington, inclusive. The result was that not only did I succeed in saving part of the organization on the Pennsylvania but succeeded in getting a number of nonmember clerks interested who had heretofore shown but a passive interest in the organization. The organization as it now exists upon those lines is absolutely secret. All lodges have been disbanded, and the membership remaining has been individually transferred to the grand lodge. In this connection it might be pertinent to remark that some of our oldest and most enthusiastic former members have given up their membership in fact as well as in theory.

“Being convinced that further effort toward a settlement at this time would be a waste of energy, I returned to Philadelphia the latter part of September and addressed a note to President McCrea of the P. R. R., transmitting it by special messenger, stating that we were anxious to reestablish the harmonious relations which had existed for a number of years between our members and the officials of that company; that I was then in Philadelphia and would appreciate an interview with him in order to present certain facts which I believed would induce him to modify, at least, the discrimination against our members. I also informed him in this note that the absence of any reply would be construed to mean that the policy of discrimination was to be perpetuated. I received a verbal reply by messenger to the effect that President McCrea was out of the city. I supplemented my note by another to the effect that any reply made would reach me if mailed to general delivery at Hagerstown, Md., where I went from Philadelphia. No reply being received, I presume none was made.

“In closing this report I deem it of interest to touch upon some matters of minor importance. It is said that the Pennsylvania Co. maintains one of the most efficient “secret-service” systems in the world, that of Russia even not excepted. All appearances indicate that a secret system of no small proportions is maintained.

“In Washington a most affable stranger occupied a room opposite the one I occupied for a week. When I left I wrote a fictitious address in the mail-forwarding book, going to York, Pa., instead of Baltimore, as shown in the book. Later I learned he left the hotel the same day that I did, but I did not have the pleasure of meeting him again.

"On board a steamer between Baltimore and Philadelphia I later met a most entertaining gentleman, who attempted to find out all about my affairs, where I was going, etc. Perhaps it was a coincidence that I met him a number of times in Philadelphia and later in Jersey City. Each time I would meet him I could not keep from thinking that when a man lost an arm in legitimate railroad service that there was perhaps always an opening for him if he was willing to fall low enough to become a 'spotter' for some corporation.

"On the Courtland Street Ferry one evening, between Jersey City and New York, I met one of the most blunt strangers that it has ever been my pleasure to meet. I feel indebted to him for the most excellent advice he gave me. He inquired my business and asked other personal questions. Of course, he received little information, but the climax came when he said: 'I thought perhaps you were interfering with the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I just wanted to say to you that there have been several mysterious disappearances of men engaged in that manner, and I wanted to warn you.' I met many other 'affable' gentlemen. In fact, I was hardly ever from under the surveillance of one of them. Yet these cases are sufficient.

"In a certain city several clerks met at the home of one of them to pass a sociable evening. A vigorous investigation was set on foot by officials of the P. R. R. for the purpose of determining what their object was in getting together, and had they not discontinued their visits no doubt this Russianized secret service would have attempted to 'disperse the rebels' by force if necessary. Patrick Henry warned the colonists that they must act 'before a British guard was placed in every house,' yet but a little over a hundred years later, upon the very soil which his ringing appeal caused to be saturated with the blood of our forefathers, we see peaceable assemblages of free American citizens forbidden and almost see a guard stationed in their homes, and by an employing corporation, not by Government authorities.

"Respectfully submitted.

"J. F. RILEY,

"Third Vice Grand President."

Commissioner Aishton. What is the date of that communication, Mr. Perham?
Mr. PERHAM. It is in the letter—April 22, 1912.

In relation to the matter of the discharge of the telegraphers' committee, which is mentioned in my statement, here is a letter [reading]:

ALTOONA, PA., August 29, 1912.

Mr. A. L. REX,
Signalman, B. P.:

I have been directed to dismiss you from the service, effective at once, for absence without permission since July 28, 1912, and insubordination in refusing to return to duty as directed in my letter of July 25, 1912.

W. H. BALSLEY, Division Operator.

By order of the superintendent.

MAPLETON, PA., September 2, 1912.

Mr. W. H. BALSLEY,
Division Operator, Altoona, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I have received your two letters of August 29. In accordance with your request I return herewith "C" Pass No. 14144 and my book of rules. I prefer to retain my R. D. certificate for the reason that I protest against being discharged under the circumstances and for the reasons given in your letter and will now make my discharge one of the grievances against the company to be adjusted by the general committee now in session in Philadelphia.

You were fully advised that I was a member of the general committee then and now in session, and from my point of view there is no good reason for my discharge.

Respectfully, yours,

A. L. REX.

MAPLETON DEPOT, PA., January 11, 1913.

Mr. W. H. BALSLEY,
Division Operator, Altoona, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I wish to advise you that I am now through with general committee work and desire to return to my regular position "B. P." third track.

Awaiting your early action, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

A. L. REX.

CONDITIONS OF LABOR ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. 10077

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD Co.,
Altoona, Pa., January 12, 1913.

Mr. A. L. REX, Mapleton, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of January 11, 1913, would respectfully refer you to our letter of August 29, 1912, which you received and acknowledged receipt of, which is self-explanatory, and there is no further action to be taken in the matter.

Yours, truly,

W. H. BALSLEY, Division Operator.

In relation to the statements regarding men discharged for union affiliations, I desire to read an affidavit made by Mr. A. E. Ireland, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who is a machinist by trade:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Allegheny.

Before me, the subscriber, notary public, in and for Allegheny County, personally appeared A. E. Ireland, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who, being duly sworn, according to law doth depose and say the real cause of the strike that occurred on the Pennsylvania Lines east and west on the 1st day of May, 1911, was brought on by the officials of the company discharging its employees—over 1,000 of them—for their refusal to sever their connections with their labor organizations. The employees had no such thing as a strike in mind. There would have been no strike had it not been for the methods adopted by the company. Officials and members of the several organizations, hundreds of them, were told throughout the Pittsburgh district, in the numerous shops of the P. R. R., that the company had no use whatsoever for the organization of the A. F. of L., and that they were willing for their employees to form a fraternal organization themselves, distinct and apart from that of the A. F. of L., and that the P. R. R. would never allow its employees to connect themselves with the shopmen's federation or any other kind of organizations, no matter what it was, whose object was for the purpose of combining the various trades together, and ultimately make demands upon the company for shorter hours, more wages, and better shop conditions; and further deponent said not.

A. E. IRELAND.

Sworn and subscribed before me, this 21st day of January, 1913.

THOMAS E. MORGAN, Jr.,
Notary Public.

My commission expires March 10, 1913.

I will submit a large list of similar statements from employees without reading, and I would ask that the commission protect the signers of these and other letters that I intend to present from victimization by the companies that now employ some of these men. The men have been discharged in some instances and again hired, and their testimony is here. I hardly think it is necessary to mention the names, but I file it with the commission as evidence to the statements I have made.

(See Perham Exhibit No. 2. A pamphlet entitled "Pennsylvania Railroad System Federation. Headquarters, Monongahela House, Pittsburgh, Pa. Read and be Convinced," and a clipping, "Pennsylvania begins war on unions," New York Call, Nov. 1, 1908, were submitted in printed form.)

Relating to charge No. 3: The company publicly states that its expenditure for police protection as being about $800,000 annually. We believe that this is only a small proportion of the amount really spent as besides the 700 or 800 men on its regular police force there are thousands of spies and spotters in its employ. Many of these men are known as special-duty men, and are supposed to act as instructors or inspectors, but their real function is to keep close tab on all actions of the men and report them to their division officials.

Their system of espionage is reputed to be one of the most efficient in the world—they set one employee to watching another, and oftentimes a third to watch them both. They endeavor through bribery to corrupt members of labor organizations in order that they may be thoroughly informed as to what is happening in their councils.

In time of strike their regular force of men is largely augmented by the employment of thugs and gunmen from large cities and the surrounding country. These men have no interest in the communities into which they are brought and are, through their insolent actions, a constant incentive to violence upon the strikers' part.

These Pennsylvania police, who are commonly known as "bulls," have followed labor organizers through the streets of cities; have spent the night in front of their doors at hotels, have assaulted union men with blackjacks, and have paraded through the streets of peaceful communities in order to incite riots.

Their existence is absolutely unnecessary as they usurp a State function. The officials of the State themselves do not know who they are, or how many there are, and there is no check on them. We believe that they are a menace to the rights and safety of the people and that the company should be prohibited by law from pursuing such practices.

At various times and places when the employees were attempting to organize the company has hired or rented all the available halls or meeting places to thwart them in their purpose. For instance, about the month of June, 1911, the employees attempted to hold meetings, but the company rented all the available halls and places where such meetings could be held in the towns of Altoona, Juniata, Tyrone, Bellwood, Hollidaysburg, Gallitzin, and Cresson, but a picnic place known as Sylvan Lodge at or near Altoona was overlooked, and the company upon discovering this applied for a temporary injunction, which was granted but eventually dissolved after a full hearing.

In Harrisburg in 1914 at a labor meeting company police blocked the door so effectually that no one could either come in or go out and the civic authorities had to be called in to clear a way.

In their process of intimidation these Pennsylvania police do not hesitate to make false arrests of employees or other citizens. A case in point is that of Harry Clark who was employed at Philadelphia and sent to Pitcairn as a strike breaker without his knowledge that a strike was in progress. On finding that such was the case he left the shops and went direct to the paymaster's office, where he turned in his tools and requested his pay. The next day he was arrested charged with larceny of his tools. W. E. Smith, a machinist in the employ of the company at Johnstown, Pa., was acting as doorkeeper at a joint union meeting of shopmen on March 8, 1911. he was induced to leave the meeting hall by a device, and was then and there arrested by a detective in the employ of the Cambria Steel Co., which company was then owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. The charge was interfering with an officer. No one appeared against Smith and the case was dismissed.

In the publication referred to where the cases of policing this company's property is mentioned, I quote from a pamphlet issued by the company's publicity bureau at Philadelphia, dated February 3, 1914. On the eleventh page this item occurs: "There were 20 arrests for depredations involving the safety of trains. It cost approximately $800,000 to maintain and carry on the work of the police department during the year."

Commissioner LENNON. Is that signed by the company or issued by the company?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is that the department that Mr. Lee is connected with?

Mr. PERHAM. I understand so. It is signed by S. C. Long, general manager. I get such copies in almost every mail.

Commissioner AIGHTON. You find them in every coach and sleeping car on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

"I will next read a letter from W. H. Pierce, of the locomotive firemen and enginemen, dated Altoona, Pa., March 9, 1914 [reads]:

"L. A. BROWN,

"Special Investigator, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: This is to advise you of the conditions existing upon the Pennsylvania Railroad as known by me personally regarding the spying system as practised by the said company, but better known as the 'bull' system by the employees.

"These spies, or bulls, gather around the main entrance to the hall and have books in their hands; scrutinize the faces of these employees who attempt to enter; and then make believe they are writing down names in the books they have with them. This, of course, intimidates the men, and in many cases the men refuse to enter the hall, fearing they will be discharged by their superior officers, and I can say truthfully I know cases where these men have been called into the office the next day after attending a meeting for the purpose of trying to organize, and have been told they would be discharged if they attempted to attend any more meetings. These bulls follow labor leaders everywhere they go, not only from one town to another, but go to their hotels, and I saw one by the name of Roddy that was looking at my mail.

"These spies will send out word that they are taking the pictures of the men that attempt to go into a hall where they organize. These bulls are all armed with revolvers and blackjacks, and I know one in Harrisburg by the name of Martin Kane who is not naturalized.

"These bulls will go to a man whose wife is pregnant, and will tell him if he will give him five names of brotherhood men he will be put back to work. They will do the same to men whom they know have sick wives.

"Some of the best mechanics they ever had on this system have been discharged because they joined a labor organization.

"Any further information that you may desire upon this subject I shall be pleased to furnish.

"With best wishes, I remain,

"Very truly, yours,

W. H. PIERCE."

"P. S.—Affidavits can be furnished to substantiate these statements."

Here is an interesting affidavit from Mr. T. E. Fidler, of Lutherville, Md., who, I believe, is a telegrapher employed there. [Reads:]

"On September 1, 1912, while the general committee representing the telegraphers on the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie were in session at Philadelphia, Pa., trying to secure a wage scale and set of working rules for the telegraphers employed on said system, I had been sent back to my division to collect ballots on Wednesday, August 28, 1912, and while at home—Lutherville, Md.—on Sunday, September 1, 1912, a gentleman who gave his name as R. Dunn, but who said that this was not his correct name, called to see me and ask that I consider my position with the Pennsylvania Railroad, also Mr. H. B. Perham, as after the telegraphers' trouble was over that Perham would be through with me, but if I would return to work the company would look out for me.

"On Sunday, November 24, 1912, the same party called at my home again, representing himself to be R. Dunn, General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa., in regard to me returning to my old position with the Pennsylvania Railroad. I asked him if he was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he replied, 'Not directly, but indirectly.' I also asked him if he was a member of the O. R. T. D. A. and S., and he replied, 'No.' I then asked him if the O. R. T. D. A. and S. was a legitimate organization, and he replied, 'No; it is an illegitimate organization.' I then asked him what he wanted me to do. He replied, 'If you do as I ask you I will have you placed in your old position, and you can continue your membership in your organization'—meaning the O. R. T.—'and can attend meetings any place where they are held, with the understanding that you will report to us anything that takes place in the meeting. You can talk strike and anything you wish, but report back to us those who were the most active at said meetings.' I told him that the men on my division had elected me thinking me to be an honest man, and when I could not be honest with myself and them I would drop out of the organization and leave some one else represent them.

'He further stated that I should not talk too hasty, and consider the matter. I told him that I had considered it thoroughly and had no more to say. He then says, 'Keep under your hat about me being here to-day. Don't you tell H. B. Perham or J. F. Miller; if you do they will be suspicious of you.' I told him all right.

"At the close of the conversation he requested me to write him R. Dunn, General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa., as to whether or not I would accept the proposition he offered me.

"T. E. FIDLER."

"Sworn to by T. E. Fidler before me, a notary public of the State of Maryland and for Baltimore County, this 13th day of April, A. D. 1914.

10080 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

More in relation to the gunmen mentioned. Here are some reports from one of our organizers on the subject. I will read the first one. [Reads:]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 16, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Last night, February 15, 1913, City Policeman George Oliver (colored), thirty-ninth district, Philadelphia, Pa., said to me in presence of J. Leven, shoemaker, 3444 North Twentieth Street, Tioga, Philadelphia, that the four men who watched the committee while at 3415 North Twenty-second Street last summer were Pinkerton men and regularly sworn-in special officers, and had their authority on them, so he was told, and that he was told they were all right and therefore he did not molest them when citizens complained of their presence; that he was informed the men received $10 per day for the work, and that he understands the P. R. R. requested the service from the Pinkerton Agency. For your information.

Fraternally,
General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa.

T. E. ELLIS.

(Witness here submitted certain letters. They will be found at the end of this subject, marked "Perham Exhibit No. 4.")

In regard to the assaulting of men mentioned in my statement, I have here an extensive file on the subject, and will read the first affidavit:

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Allegheny, City of Pittsburgh, ss:

John J. Gallagher, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is fourth general vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, and that he resides at No. 20 Prescott Street, Readville, Mass.; that between 12 o'clock midnight and 1 o'clock in the morning of June 25, 1911, in the city of Altoona, Pa., he was murderously assaulted by a special agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. named Charles Luther; a detective named Spangler; Capt. Shafer, of the Pennsylvania Railroad police; and three other Pennsylvania Railroad special agents. Affiant's ribs were broken and he was severely bruised and beaten about the body. He remained unconscious, as the result of being assaulted, for about seven hours. Just prior to the assault affiant was standing outside of Hotel Senate, Altoona, Pa., said hotel being his abiding place at that time. He was watching for one John Schmitt, vice president of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Shipbuilders, whose life he believed to be in jeopardy, as the company detectives and Capt. Shafer, aforesaid, and several other special agents of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. were in the immediate vicinity, and there having been rumors respecting an assault about to be made upon the said John Schmitt, affiant desired to warn him about this.

While conversing with a painter named Robinson, Charles Luther, accompanied by his wife, passed him and stopped a few yards away, evidently waiting for a street car. A few moments afterwards he walked over to where affiant was standing and asked him where John Schmitt was. Affiant told him that he did not know. Luther thereupon called him a liar and said that he did know. Affiant repeated that he did not know. Luther again called him a liar and said that affiant was a tool of Schmitt, and challenged affiant to go with him away from the square to a vacant lot and he would knock his head off. Affiant refused to accept the challenge. Luther insisted, and became more threatening and abusive. Affiant noticing Patrolman John Bockberger walking up the street toward the corner where affiant was standing, went to him and complained of Luther's conduct. Luther, in the presence of said Bockberger, repeated his threats toward affiant and stated that he would like to take affiant out on the hill and lick him, as he could lick six like him. Patrolman Bockberger remonstrated with Luther and said, among other things, that, as Luther was a constable of Juniata, it was his province to keep the peace instead of trying to disturb it. Bockberger advised Luther to take the next car for his home, and Luther thereupon boarded the next car, accompanied by his wife, and Patrolman Bockberger then went over to the Colonade Hotel. A few minutes thereafter affiant saw Luther returning to the place where the previous conversation took place, and affiant thereupon turned to his companion, the said Robinson, and said: "This fellow is evidently bent on making trouble; I guess I will go into the hotel." Affiant then started for the hotel entrance, but did not reach there, because Luther pounced upon him with a weapon and knocked him senseless. Affiant was afterwards informed that the other detectives and special agents rushed from their hiding places to assist in the assault, but the presence of the police officers and others who heard the outcry of people who witnessed the assault foiled their plans and probably had the effect of saving the life of the affiant.

Affiant further states that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the said special agent, Charles Luther, was acting under orders from officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. when he committed the assault aforesaid.

Affiant further states that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the aforesaid company has manufactured and stored away thousands of clubs to be used against employees under certain circumstances.

Affiant further states that he believes the low wages paid employees and the arrogant, harsh, and cruel attitude assumed by the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. will lead to riots and disorders in the near future unless some means be found to regulate their action.

JOHN J. GALLAGHER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of December, A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.]

EVA A. MILNE, Notary Public.

My commission expires February 21, 1915.

Gallagher was vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

I offer for the record the balance of the file pertaining to that case.

(For file so offered by the witness see Perham Exhibit No. 5. Two newspaper clippings submitted, entitled "Organizers are wanted by an irate parent," Altoona Times, July 28, 1911, and "Organizers are accused after leaving city," Altoona Gazette, same date.)

In relation to the injunctions mentioned to prevent the meetings of employees, for the purposes of the record, I will read a court paper in the case [reads]:

"In the court of common pleas of Blair County. Anna W. Baker, plaintiff, against H. H. Barnett, J. W. Crabb, John Gallagher, E. Flood, T. H. Flynn, J. W. Smith, John Doe, and others to the plaintiff unknown, defendants. No. 749, Equity Docket 'E.'

"By the Court:

"Plaintiff filed this bill in equity, accompanied by injunctive affidavits, praying that defendants be enjoined and restrained from assembling upon the land belonging to the plaintiff, located in Logan Township, upon which is erected a building known as Sylvan Lodge, by reason of the fact that her lease with H. H. Barnett, the tenant, provided that the premises should not be sublet except to persons satisfactory to the lessor; that notwithstanding the demise of the premises is for an exclusive purpose the defendants, H. H. Barnett and J. W. Crabb, his sublessee, had leased and sublet, or was about to lease and sublet, the premises to one or more of these defendants without her consent and permission; that the purpose for which the premises were sublet was for the holding of a mass meeting in Sylvan Lodge, which is not adapted to or safe for the accommodation of such an assembly of people, and that if such meeting were held the property would probably be greatly damaged and the lives and limbs of the people attending endangered. Upon these averments we issued a preliminary injunction, which we are now asked to continue.

"The witness for the plaintiff at the preliminary hearing, one of whom was a carpenter, testified to the fact that Sylvan Lodge is not a safe and proper place for a large number of people to collect and congregate.

"This testimony was not denied nor in any way contradicted by the defendants, except one witness testified that on an occasion last summer during the period of a couple of hours a large number of people were accommodated in the building.

"We felt at the time we granted the preliminary injunction, as we do now, that it would be unwise to run the risk of endangering the lives of people who were gathered in Sylvan Lodge innocently believing that the building was safe and strong enough to hold them.

"It seems to us, aside from the fact that the lease of these demised premises prohibits subletting without the consent of the lessor that it is better to temporarily inconvenience the persons interested in holding the alleged meeting than to endanger human life.

"The defendants all testified that Flynn et al. had not leased the premises from the lessees; that they purposed simply to congregate and assemble upon the premises of the plaintiff for the purpose of holding a picnic where speeches would probably have been made. We feel that we are not justified in enjoining such a congregation or assembly of people; that that would be a right and privilege which the lessee could extend to the other defendants without violating the conditions of the lease; the people so assembled would have the right to go in and out of Sylvan Lodge and obtain lunches, etc., in accordance with and under the terms of the lease, to make, deliver, and listen to speeches and addresses upon the premises, except in Sylvan Lodge.

"Now, June 8, 1911, this cause came on to be heard and was argued by counsel, and upon consideration thereof it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the injunction herein granted be, and the same is hereby, dissolved, except that the defendants, H. H. Barnett and J. W. Crabb, their agents, employees, and all other persons, be, and they hereby are, enjoined and restrained, until further order of this court, from assembling, or permitting to assemble, and from holding mass meeting, or any meetings whatsoever, where addresses or speeches are to be made, in the Sylvan Lodge, as we regard that building unsafe and insecure for that purpose.

"THOMAS J. BALDRIGE,
"President Judge."

(For other papers offered by witness at this point see Perham Exhibit No. 6. A "Bill in Equity for Injunction," filed in the court of common pleas of Blair County, Pa., was submitted in printed form.)

With reference to the false arrest of Harry E. Clark, I will read an affidavit:

To whom it may concern:

I, Harry E. Clark, of 854 Ohio Street, Cleveland, Ohio, solemnly declare that I was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in Philadelphia on Tuesday, May 16, 1911, and transported to Pitcairn, Pa. I had no knowledge of the strike at Pitcairn, but was told by Mr. Williard of the railroad company that Pitcairn was an "open shop." As soon as I learned that I was working in the place of a union man who was "out on strike," I demanded my time and was told by the foreman that I could not get it without going to the superintendent's office in Pittsburgh, and as they had used threats to detain me and I had seen them use force to detain others, I slipped out of the yards at the first opportunity, with my electrician tools over my shoulder. I boarded the first trolley car to the paymaster's office and surrendered my tools and demanded my time. He took my identification card and told me to come back the next day, which was Monday, May 22, 1911. I was taken back to the shop against my will, and after I had refused to go back to work was placed under arrest and am now confined to the Wilmerding Borough lockup, presumably for larceny of the tools which I personally surrendered to the paymaster.

HARRY E. CLARK.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 22d day of May, 1911.

[SEAL.]

GEO. B. SNYDER,
Notary Public.

My commission expires February 21, 1915.

In the case of W. E. Smith, who was arrested in Johnstown, Pa., I submit several documents and a court record upon the subject.

I will read one of the documents [reads]:

"W. E. Smith's illegal arrest and imprisonment.

"Smith states that the night he was arrested and imprisoned at Johnstown, Pa., there was being held in the G. A. R. Hall a 'joint union meeting for P. R. R. shopmen'; that he was doorkeeper at front door; that he noticed the light in entry from back side door disappearing and coming on again. To investigate the cause of this, he passed out the front door around to the side-back door; opened it. There was no light, but he could make out three persons in entry. He said, 'Where is the switchboard; I will turn on the light.' Just then Officer A. D. Jones grabbed him; pulled him outside the door. He recognized the other two men. They were P. R. R. Detective Robinson and Chief of Cambria Steel Detective Carney. On the way to the jail Smith asked what such action meant; was given no satisfaction. He asked to be allowed to telephone his friends for bond; not allowed. Then he asked the detectives to telephone for him; not done.

"Smith says there was no quarreling nor harsh words of any kind used before Jones rushed him away from the hall; that in about one hour after he was locked up his stepbrother came to the jail and asked for him. The turnkey said: 'Smith is not here,' when the steward spoke to him, saying, 'There will be trouble about this case; Smith had better be released.' Then a cash bond of $20 was accepted from Smith's stepbrother and Smith released. That he was brought before the mayor, where Jones stated Smith was arrested for interfering with an officer; that for some reason neither Robinson nor Carney, who were present were called on; he was immediately discharged and the $20 returned."

Relating to the charge—No. 4—of low wages paid by the company, we are only able to speak with authority for those employees in the telegraph and signal department. In the year 1906 a pamphlet was issued by the committee representing the telegraphers, showing some increases in wages that had been secured during that period, which became effective on September 1, 1906. That interesting document indicates the wages paid prior to that time and the rate after the increase was granted.

After the increase many of the positions paid as much as $38.50 per month; prior to the increase some of them paid as much as $22 per month; showing the necessity and value of such negotiations. The average wage was in the neighborhood of $50 per month.

In the year 1911 conditions had improved considerably, but the men were not satisfied, and they made a stand for recognition of their organization and an increase in wages. Employees receiving a monthly wage amounting to $44.90 requested that it be made $48.40, an increase amounting to $3.50 per month. In order to make our statement fair, we will say that we have quoted only from the lowest-paid employees; still there is a great number of them, many of them men with families to support, and it is marvelous that the company can get them to stay with it and how the employees manage to support themselves on such a rate of wage. Here we have an instance of a wealthy and powerful corporation, financially able to pay a decent living wage, but which, on the contrary, has hundreds and thousands of its men living on the very brink of poverty.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any further analysis of the wages you mentioned there—you say they were raised from $22 to $38?

Mr. PERHAM. I have some figures.

Chairman WALSH. Give us an idea of how many men worked for the $22 and how many worked for the $38, and what services they were performing.

Mr. PERHAM. I will submit an exhibit covering the case completely.

Chairman WALSH. Where are the exhibits?

Mr. PERHAM. Here. That [handing chairman a pamphlet] is a report of the general committee representing the telegraphers in 1906.

Commissioner AISHTON. May I ask a question right there, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. I would like to ask if that exhibit shows simply what was received from the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. by those men, or included other sources of income received from possibly express companies and from the Western Union Telegraph Co., or other sources of income?

Mr. PERHAM. It simply shows the wage paid by the company and the increase to it.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes; it does not show other sources of income that came with other employment?

Mr. PERHAM. There is no sort of income worthy of mention in that connection. There might be a case where a man would get a dollar and a half a month in commissions, or perhaps, under extraordinary circumstances, he might get up to $2.50—that is, from express commissions and telegraph commissions or from any other source; but assume it is $2.50—that would still make it ridiculously low.

Commissioner AISHTON. Your estimation is that the maximum received from such sources would be $2.50 per month?

Mr. PERHAM. Would not average that much.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made an epitome of this in any way [referring to the pamphlets presented by the witness]?

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read an epitome made from that. (The pamphlet presented by witness is in printed form. It is entitled "Report of General Committee, Showing Increase in Rates of Pay of Telegraphers, Pennsylvania Lines East of Pittsburgh and Erie. Effective Sept. 1, 1906.")

Chairman WALSH. I would like you to take what you might call the typical average, which seems to be $49.50, and tell us how many get that, and how many get each rate. For instance, here are a great many, I notice, who get $60.50.

Mr. PERHAM. Will you allow me to read. I have it right here: Rate per month, $30, one employee; $37.10, one employee; $42.40 per month, three employees; $46.65 per month, one employee; $47.50 per month, one employee; $50.55 per month, one employee; $51, two employees; $51.95 per month, two employees; $57.55 per month, fifty employees; and that was all on the West Jersey & Sea Shore Division that is contained in that document.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are these all telegraphers?

Mr. PERHAM. All telegraphers, and some are station agents as well.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Men or women?

Mr. PERHAM. Both.

Commissioner AIGHTON. Does that include any signalmen of any kind; tower-men or men of that kind.

Mr. PERHAM. I don't know whether the men in those places handle signals or not, but we will have witnesses here that can testify as to that fact. I am not familiar from personal contact with the conditions on the Pennsylvania Railroad. It is just from information furnished me that I got these matters.

Now, on the Delaware division, at $35 per month, there is one employee; at $40.80 there is one employee; at $44.90 per month there are fifteen employees; at $51.30 per month there are five employees.

Now, I claim that at that time that situation was without a parallel in the United States. I am informed by employees that since we made this petition to this commission that those wages have been materially increased; but it is supposed that from the testimony of witnesses who know of the facts from personal contact that they will be able to give the commission exact data as to when those increases in wages were made and what they now are.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr Perham, would any man receive percentages—commissions on express business—except the man that was station agent?

Mr. PERHAM. There are solitary instances here and there where signalmen take express commissions, or a telegraph operator.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But that is just where an occasional package is delivered to a man of that kind?

Mr. PERHAM. An occasional package delivered; and these agents at places located where they get these commissions, they amount to practically nothing—scarcely anything.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Are any ticket commissions paid on the Pennsylvania system?

Mr. PERHAM. Not to my knowledge.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is that company the great original opposer of the payment of commissions on tickets?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe it was the first one to abolish the coupon commissions that were paid about 20 years ago.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Paid to whom, and for what purpose?

Mr. PERHAM. Station agents used to be better off than they are now. Say, a man in San Francisco would sell tickets to Boston. There were a great many routes, and he would make as much as $15 to $20 on each ticket sold. For instance, I have been ticket clerk at Oakland, Sixteenth Street, and I have sold an opera company tickets through to Boston, getting on the train to make out the photograph tickets, and would make as much as $70 by the operation for myself. Well, some years ago the companies cut off all those commissions, and our wages were left the same, and that is a grievance we have never been able to adjust.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What function did you perform to earn that commission?

Mr. PERHAM. Well, say in that particular instance it takes about 10 or 12 minutes to make out a ticket, because you have to describe the passenger by filling out the spaces on the ticket so it will be impossible for him to sell that ticket to another. It is sold at a special rate and must be carried by the purchaser.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Isn't that part of your duty to do that, and isn't that part of the wages—isn't that service supposed to be covered by your wages?

Mr. PERHAM. It certainly was not covered by the wages. My wages as ticket agent were reduced on account of the commissions I was able to earn, and in the same way it is quite general where express commissions are given throughout the United States, that where the agent can make a few dollars as express commission his wages are reduced by the railroad company so as to keep him down to the certain minimum that is in the mind of some official that he thinks is the wage that ought to be paid.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let us understand you. In the beginning as a ticket agent you received a wage as salary and a commission?

Mr. PERHAM. And commission.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And later the salary was minimized by virtue of the fact you were earning certain commissions?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the commission was cut off, but the minimum salary was permitted to remain?

Mr. PERHAM. I would not be able to testify that the minimum wage was allowed to remain. As a matter of fact, the minimum wage has been reduced.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Still further reduced?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that a ticket agent's candle burns at both ends—his commission was cut off at the one end and the wage reduced at the other end?

Mr. PERHAM. That is the trouble. When I first went in the telegraph business, about 40 years ago, I made about $100 a month, but wages have been constantly reduced.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, the telegrapher doing substantially the work that you did 40 years ago at $100 a month, what is he earning to-day, say, at similar work to the work you did earning $100 a month?

Mr. PERHAM. We have been able to keep his wages up by means of organization in the last 10 years to a wonderful degree.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Please answer my question.

Mr. PERHAM. Five or ten dollars per month less now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Where you earned $100 a month 40 years ago he is earning—

Mr. PERHAM. Ninety or ninety-five dollars, and as low as $50 in the interim.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And were you also getting commissions? Of course, the telegrapher operator had nothing to do with the sale of tickets?

Mr. PERHAM. I might say that in 1872 I was day telegrapher, and I had good commissions in selling local tickets.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In addition to your wages as a telegraph operator? Are we to understand that telegraphers' wages have declined in the last 40 years, despite the fact that the cost of living has materially increased during those 40 years?

Mr. PERHAM. Prior to the advent of an active period in this organization that would be true.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How is it now, to-day?

Mr. PERHAM. On the upgrade everywhere.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it so in connection with the Commercial?

Mr. PERHAM. The Commercial Telegraphers show a decrease in the last 25 years; it occurs in the Government report on the subject, written by Charles P. Neill.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That was the testimony in Chicago.

Commissioner LENNON. In getting this commission, was the commission based on some particular routing that you gave them? For instance, if they went by Los Angeles you got a certain commission and by way of Ogden or through that way another commission, or did you get that commission without regard to the routing?

Mr. PERHAM. They attended to that; there was no chance to favor one road against the other, and the commission was always the same, and my memory is that there were 20 routes between Oakland and Boston.

Commissioner AISHTON. The payment of commissions went into the discard with freight rebates?

Mr. PERHAM. It was a long time prior to freight rebates.

Commissioner AISHTON. Not very much, I think; the records will show it was about the same time?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it not a fact that certain companies ceased to pay long before the universal practice was put in effect?

Mr. PERHAM. It is true that certain companies did abolish it on coupon tickets for awhile, but put it back again because they were discriminated against so much that it was not until the general agreement that they were put out of business.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Was it not the underlying object that the ticket agent would influence people to travel by the best route for him? Was that not the underlying object of the commission?

Mr. PERHAM. There were many things done to gain the good will of the ticket agent. I have carried advertising in local papers asking people to come to me when they wanted to go anywhere, and I have paid for that advertising out of my own commission.

With further regard to matters on the Pennsylvania Railroad: This exhibit is the schedule and wage scale asked for by the telegraphers in 1911.

Chairman WALSH. Have you a comparison of the wages paid the telegraphers with other railroads?

Mr. PERHAM. I have not.

Chairman WALSH. In a general way, how do they compare—are they about the same or greater or less?

Mr. PERHAM. On certain parts of the line they are higher; they compare favorably. That is to say, on the main line, where the signal business is so intense, good wages are paid in comparison to branch lines. Now, most of these wages quoted here are unimportant parts of this company's line, but the fact is just the same that the employees have to live on the wages herein quoted.

I desire to be perfectly fair in this presentation of the case.

Commissioner LENNON. Could you furnish us the wages on the main line of the Pennsylvania from New York to Pittsburgh, and on the Lake Shore from New York, say, to Chicago?

Mr. PERHAM. We are not prepared to involve any other railroad in this investigation or controversy.

Commissioner LENNON. All right.

Mr. PERHAM. This exhibit shows precisely the wages that were paid in 1911 and the wages asked for by the committee of employees, and there is no official position or station missing in this document. It shows the complete situation on the Pennsylvania Railway.

Commissioner AISHTON. In 1911?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. You have nothing showing it to-day?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir. This matter has been pending, as you are aware, for some years, and there are some slight changes since this document was written.

Commissioner AISHTON. Has there been any increase—general increase—in the pay since that was written?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe not; only in the very low wages has it been made better.

Chairman WALSH. When you were interrupted with questions you had started to read a document about shop employees' wages?

Mr. PERHAM. There were two affidavits in regard to shop employees. This one from Mr. J. W. Kline, president of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers:

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of Monroe, City of Rochester, ss:

James W. Kline, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the general president of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, and he resides at Kansas City, Mo.

That upon information and belief, in the year 1911, the above organization endeavored to establish a wage scale and secure a contract with the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburg and Erie, but that the same was without success, the committee of employees and the representatives of the said brotherhood failed to get a conference with any of the managing officials; that the wages paid are unsatisfactory to the men, some blacksmiths receiving as low as $2.80 per day, and that some helpers are receiving as low a compensation as 15 cents per hour; that the company has discharged many men on account of their affiliation with the above-named brotherhood.

Deponent further says, upon information and belief, that the above-named company has fostered a rival organization that took in members of our class; that during the strike detectives in the employ of the above-named company were in the habit of shadowing deponent all the time he was on the territory of the Pennsylvania Railroad; that the conditions surrounding blacksmiths and helpers are very unsatisfactory at the present time.

Deponent further says that the source of his knowledge and information was obtained through his connection as general president of said above-named organization and from his personal knowledge of conditions and from information gained from interviews with others through his official position.

COMMISSIONER'S AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

Monroe County Clerk's Office, Rochester, N. Y., ss:

I, James L. Hotchkiss, clerk of the county of Monroe, of the county court of said county, and of the supreme court, both being courts of record, having a common seal, do certify that Emanuel Koveleski, Esq., before whom the foregoing declarations or affidavits were made, was, at the time of taking the same, a commissioner of deeds in and for said city, duly authorized to take the same; that I am well acquainted with his handwriting, and verily believe that the signature to said certificate is his genuine signature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said county and courts this 25th day of November, A. D. 1912.

JAMES L. HOTCHKISS, Clerk.

Another affidavit is from Martin F. Ryan:

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of Monroe, City of Rochester, ss:

Martin F. Ryan, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the general president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, and that he resides in Kansas City, Mo.

That upon information and belief, in the month of May, 1911, the said above-named organization endeavored to establish a wage scale and secure a contract with the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburg and Erie, but that the same was without success, and that the committee of employees and the representatives of said brotherhood endeavored to obtain a conference with the officials of the company, but that all their efforts in this direction failed.

Deponent further says upon information and belief that great numbers of the employees of the said road do not receive what deponent considers living wages and that $1.25 and $1.50 a day are the rates of remuneration that are quite prevalent; that the piecework system with low rates of wages prevail, and the same is in need of equitable adjustment.

That the company fosters a sham rival organization to the above-named organization, which said latter organization is known as the Brotherhood of Car Inspectors, Car Repairers, and Railway Mechanics, and that the same is designed for the purpose of dividing the force of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America; that the said above-named company keeps in its employ armed men who are called detectives, watchmen, and special agents, which same are for the purpose of coercing men from joining the organization of their class, and for the further purpose of instituting a reign of terror generally, and that many men have been assaulted and grievously wounded by said men, and that many others have been threatened in various ways, and on different occasions.

Deponent further alleges on information and belief that the company has had thousands of steel billies and wooden clubs manufactured, and that the same have been stored away for the purpose of being used upon the employees should they go upon strike at any time in the future.

Deponent further says upon information and belief that the conditions now existing can not continue much longer upon that system, and in the opinion of deponent a general uprising such as took place in 1877 is likely to be the result.

[SEAL.]

JAMES L. HOTCHKISS, Clerk.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask a question at this point? That document was signed November, 1912, was it not?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it forecasts trouble if conditions are not altered?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What trouble has taken place since that date?

Mr. PERHAM. Quite numerous strikes have taken place, but they have not received the sanction of officials of the legitimate organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was the writer of that a blacksmith?

Mr. PERHAM. That was a carman, Mr. M. F. Ryan. He is now in Canada on some business that kept him, but we expected him to be here, but he is held up in Canada on important business.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There have been strikes of those departments since November, 1912?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know how many and how serious they were?

Mr. PERHAM. There was one strike on the middle division, W. H. Pierce was the president of the organization. I don't know how many men, several thousand. There was another strike on the Monongahela of enginemen and trainmen. It is quite an ordinary thing for strikes on the Pennsylvania Railroad, but none of them have received the sanction of the international presidents of the organizations. They were not regular strikes, sanctioned by the organizations.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What happens if men go out on strike without the sanction of the proper labor authorities?

Mr. PERHAM. They are not supported by the organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And were not connected with legitimate organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; they were not legitimate.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You spoke about Mr. Pierce, he was attempting to establish an organization for himself on the system of some kind?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In other words, the strikes were not brought by an organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. PERHAM. Not in any instance.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have any strikes taken place on the Pennsylvania Railroad on the part of men who are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. PERHAM. Some shopmen in 1911 were affiliated.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am speaking of since the date of that document, November, 1912?

Mr. PERHAM. Not to my knowledge.

Commissioner AIGHTON. These strikes on the middle division, or this strike, was caused by a man by the name of Pierce?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AIGHTON. The men that he had in his organization were shopmen and blacksmiths?

Mr. PERHAM. Shopmen generally.

Commissioner AIGHTON. Who did not belong to the other organization or who might belong to both organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. They might have belonged, but as a general rule they did not belong to any, for the reason set forth in this statement; they were not allowed to belong.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was not this man Pierce one of the members of the older railway organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. I think he was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was he a member of that organization when he organized this other?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe that he was.

Commissioner AISHTON. You believe that he was?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was he organizing another organization seeking to control, or something of that kind, or was it for personal advantages that he organized this?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; it is an honest desire to find a way out.

Commissioner AISHTON. What did he call this, the brotherhood of federations of all railway employees?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; it had a high-sounding title.

Commissioner AISHTON. A high-sounding title, and quite an extensive membership?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And he undertook to tie the Pennsylvania Railway up?

Mr. PERHAM. I think not; it was not large enough to accomplish that.

Commissioner AISHTON. What was the object of it, then; they would not have started it if they had not thought they could do that?

Mr. PERHAM. These men are in such a condition of mind it is very difficult to control them. I assume that Mr. Pierce's organization would not have brought out a strike at that time if Mr. Pierce or any other man like him was able to control it.

Commissioner AISHTON. But the officials of the regular organization, your organization, for example—the railway telegraphers—they did not support this at all?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; we are absolutely able to control our organization.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it not a fact that the Pierce organization considers any man eligible who is on the pay roll?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And is it not a fact that while Pierce was a member of the locomotive engineers and firemen that his organization was absolutely independent of that, and had not only not had the approval of that organization but was absolutely disavowed by them?

Mr. PERHAM. It was absolutely disavowed; my information is not complete, but it was disavowed by the American Federation of Labor.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is there not a document disavowing it by the Federation of Labor?

Mr. PERHAM. I have not seen it, but it would not surprise me to learn such was the fact.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is Mr. Pierce the man that wrote that document which you just read which forecast trouble?

Mr. PERHAM. I did read one from Mr. Pierce earlier.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Addressed to Mr. Brown, investigator for the commission?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Now, I desire to read one more document in regard to low-paid employees, and this refers to the much-vaunted "redcap" porters for the Pennsylvania Railroad. This is a report by one of my men, Mr. Ellis, of January 15, 1913 [reads]:

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 15, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Last evening I got in conversation with H. H. Jenkins (colored), 1410 Bedford Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., who is one of the "redcap" porters for the P. R. R. at their station here; he said as follows:

That he has been in present position something more than a year; that the porters there are all sore and are hoping some one will take up their case with the Interstate Commerce Commission; that when a porter begins with the company he is given a suit (uniform), thereafter he is compelled to buy them of the company, including caps and overcoats; that suits cost about $9; overcoats, about $15; caps, about $1.50; that about each quarter porters are inspected and usually are compelled to buy new clothes, parts of or whole suits, are told this or that is not fit to wear, and that they can not work until the article is purchased, and they can not get the article or articles anywhere except of the P. R. R. Co.

That in order to keep out of the hands of the I. C. C. the company tells each porter applicant that they will be paid a salary, and on each pay day they sign a pay roll, but the most Jenkins has drawn in any month is $1.80; the least, $1.25, for a month's wages. They are compelled to belong to the voluntary relief, but he does not know what he pays or how the company gets it unless the older porters are taxed for it; those who have worked three years draw, or are supposed to draw, $15 per month, but scarcely ever get more than $13.50 as wages at the end of the month. He says if he should be killed in the company's service his people will get $250, and that the papers he signed when he entered the voluntary relief are fixed so that there is no further redress; that there is no chance to recover through the law; that he did not know this until after he had signed the papers.

That each porter is compelled to be in service three years before he can get the $15 per month wages; that at this time there are about 20 or 21 of these less than three-year men.

That he understands the P. R. R. at New York advertises "free porter service," which makes it that much harder for the men to make a living; that on account of the company's advertisement in time-tables that "redcap" porters are available, many people believe they are paid wages by the company, therefore do not offer them tips; that they are not allowed to make any charges, but always, when asked by those whom they assist as to what the charges are, answer, "Just what you wish to give"; that they are not allowed to go even so far as the Fort Pitt Hotel here, about one and one-half blocks distant; that should they assist a party that far and be reported for it the company would discipline them. He believes this is on account of the taxi line the company is interested in here, which charges patrons of the road 50 cents from the station to the Fort Pitt.

That they are closely watched by "efficiency men" in plain clothes, and if seen sitting are called immediately to the station master's office.

Jenkins says the texture of the uniforms is very poor; for instance, trousers cost $3 to $3.50, and are not worth more than $1 or $1.50.

He was very anxious some white man would intercede for them through the I. C. C. I told him I had a friend who was close to some people in Washington, and that when I met him I would lay the case before him, and that if he (Jenkins) heard from that source it is to be hoped he would give all possible information and get others to do the same. He said they would be sure to do so. He is above the average intelligence in that strata.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

General Delivery, Pittsburgh, Pa.

(For documents filed by witness at this point see Perham Exhibit No. 8.)

Commissioner AISHTON. May I ask Mr. Ellis's connection as an organizer?

Mr. PERHAM. At that time he was employed by me to investigate conditions on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Chairman WALSH. What is his usual employment?

Mr. PERHAM. Telegraph operator.

Chairman WALSH. Prior to this particular investigation, was he an organizer for the O. R. T.?

Mr. PERHAM. He was.

Commissioner AISHTON. And what was the date of this?

Mr. PERHAM. January 15, 1913.

Commissioner AISHTON. He simply saw this colored redcap in the Pittsburgh station and interviewed him and got this information?

Mr. PERHAM. At my direction for the purposes of this commission.

Commissioner AISHTON. And the Pennsylvania people had no knowledge of what he was sent there for?

Mr. PERHAM. None at all, unless some of their men were able to find out.

Commissioner AISHTON. You have no knowledge other than what this negro said about what he received? You have not seen the pay rolls, or have no way of going over them, of course, but you don't know what these redcaps are paid?

Mr. PERHAM. I know nothing about it except what is contained in documents similar to this.

Commissioner AISHTON. The redcap is not ordinarily considered a transportation employee, is he, and—that is not the rule, in purchasing transportation or a ticket to furnish a porter to carry their baggage to the trains?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That rule is a gratuitous service on the part of the railway?

Mr. PERHAM. Service on the part of the railway?

Commissioner AISHTON. They don't have them at all stations?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; only at the larger stations, New York, and so forth.

I submit along with this several reports, some others in relation to the question of porters, also newspaper clippings, and the story is pretty generally set forth in this exhibit. I simply read one to show the tenor of them all.

With reference to charge 5, alleging that the company brings into existence and fosters sham labor organizations.

In the year 1906 there was an organization of railroad employees known as the Brotherhood of Car Inspectors, Car Builders, and Railway Mechanics of America, which was reputed to be fostered and controlled by the Pennsylvania.

Charles W. Stanglen was the supreme chief of that alleged labor organization, and he was accused of attempting to bribe several persons to get them to desist from supporting the telegraphers' eight-hour bill in the Maryland Legislature in March, 1906, offering men as much as $725 apiece to work against the measure.

Since the attempts at bribery were exposed, Stanglen left for parts unknown, and nothing further has been heard of the so-called Brotherhood of Car Inspectors, Car Builders, and Railway Mechanics of America.

In the year of 1911 there was an organization of railroad employees on the Pennsylvania Railroad lines known as the Brotherhood of Railway Mechanics. It came into existence mysteriously about the time of the shopmen's strike in 1911, and the company openly fostered the inauguration of locals at Pitcairn and Altoona. It is not recognized by workingmen as a labor organization.

A man now occupying an official position with the P. R. R. Co. was in 1907 employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. as signalman and was accused of being a special agent and lobbyist for that company. He was a member of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, general chairman for the telegraphers on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and a member of the board of directors. He was expelled from the Order of Railroad Telegraphers for alleged misconduct concerning the telegraphers' eight-hour law in the Maryland Legislature in 1906, said expulsion being finally confirmed and decided in May, 1907, at the Minneapolis convention of that organization.

Immediately thereafter a new organization came into existence, entitled the "Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen."

The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. through its subordinate officials has boosted the so-called Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen at every opportunity, discriminating against those who preferred to continue their allegiance with the Order of Railroad Telegraphers. The higher officials have entertained committees of their own organization, the said O. R. T., D. A. & S., and closed their doors to the committees of employees who are known to be members of the old regular organization, the O. R. T. Recently, as before stated, the company discharged four members of the telegraphers' committee who belonged to the regular organization, because they persisted in their endeavors to represent their constituents.

In support of these averments we desire to file a supplemental report from the board of directors of the Order of Railway Telegraphers covering the subject, and I wish to read an affidavit on page 20 for the purpose of the record, more especially to explain about a Mr. Stanglen who was already mentioned. This is a copy of an article appearing in the Baltimore Sun of Thursday morning, March 22, 1916, and it was headed [reads]: "Was it a sell-out? Queer situation develops over telegraphers' bill. Was money used to defeat it? Senate promptly passes measure, formerly reported unfavorably up to its third reading. (Special dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.)"

"THE SUN BUREAU, Annapolis, March 21.—The motion to substitute the McComas bill for an eight-hour day for telegraphers in block-signal stations for the unfavorable report came up this morning as special order, and Senator Lee moved that consideration be postponed until 8 o'clock to-night. In explanation of this motion, Senator Lee read the following affidavit:

"STATE OF MARYLAND, Anne Arundel County:

"I hereby certify that this 21st day of March, before me the subscriber, a notary public of the State of Maryland in and for said county, personally appeared James Sebastian, of Baltimore City, treasurer and secretary of the legislative committee of Railway Telegraphers, and made oath in due form of law that on the 15th day of March he was approached by C. W. Stanglen, of Baltimore City, and offered by said Stanglen the sum of $725 if he would join him, the said Stanglen, in withdrawing from the consideration of the senate of the State of Maryland the telegraph operators' eight-hour bill, and he said that said money is now locked in a safe in Annapolis, and that said money will be distributed if said bill is defeated. And further makes affidavit that the operators belonging to the Order of Railway Telegraphers are in favor of the passage of the said bill and, but for fear of their dismissal from their positions, they can not take an active interest in promoting the passage of the said bill. That said Charles W. Stanglen is the supreme chief of the Brotherhood of Car Inspectors, Car Builders, and Railway Mechanics of America, and that previous to this offer to the said deponent, as aforesaid, Stanglen was in favor of the eight-hour bill for railway telegraphers, and said deponent further made oath as aforesaid that said Charles W. Stanglen told him (said deponent) that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. was furnishing the money and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. the talent to defeat said bill.

"NANNIE S. STOCKETT,
"Notary Public."

I might state that this Senator Lee mentioned above is now United States Senator Lee from Maryland.

(The document referred to by witness was submitted in printed form. It is entitled "Supplementary Report of the Board of Directors to the Members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.")

I wish to read an affidavit from Mr. Thomas H. Flynn, who is now an organizer for the American Federation of Labor. [Reads:]

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,

County of Allegheny, city of Pittsburgh, ss:

Thomas H. Flynn, general organizer for the American Federation of Labor residing at 408 New Rochelle Street, Mount Oliver, Pittsburgh, Pa., states that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. have formed an organization of employees known as the Brotherhood of Railway Mechanics, and that during the strike of the shopmen in the spring of 1911 they formed and fostered locals of that organization at Pitcairn and Altoona, Pa., and that from that time to this they have carefully fostered that organization in antagonism to the regular organizations that have been recognized on all of the important railroads in the United States; that said organization was formed solely for the purpose of maintaining the company's authority over its employees and to prevent them from going out on strike or in any manner representing their interests in any independent way.

To carry out the policy of the company in this direction the emissaries of the company were ordered to obstruct the regular organizations in the pursuance of their legitimate business by preventing them from hiring halls or meeting places, having automobiles crowded with detectives, special agents, and other armed men to prevent meetings of the regular organizations of employees; also in applying for restraining orders preventing such recognized leaders of men as John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers, and Raymond Robins, the reformer, from speaking in a park which had been hired for that purpose by the representatives of the regular labor organizations. While this was going on the organization formed by the aforesaid company had the privilege of holding its meetings in fire halls and other municipal buildings in the city of Altoona, Pa., and did hold many such meetings without let or hindrance.

Affiant further states that there has been a general reduction in wages and a lowering of prices for piecework since the ending of the strike, and that he believes that a continuance of the arrogant and dictatorial policy of the aforesaid company will lead to riots and disorders in the State of Pennsylvania unless some means be found to make the company change its present policy toward its employees.

THOMAS H. FLYNN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of December, 1912.

[SEAL.]

EVA A. MILNE, Notary Public.

My commission expires February 21, 1915.

Commissioner AISHTON. What strike is that referred to in that affidavit; is that what is known as the Pierce strike?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; this was a shop-organization strike that started in Pittsburgh or vicinity in the spring of 1911.

Commissioner AISHTON. That was prior to the Pierce strike?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

We filed 50 letters from employees relating to the telegraphers' organization, and the discrimination against the members of the regular organization—the Order of Railroad Telegraphers—and the acts in favor of the company organization.

(For said letters see Perham Exhibit No. 9.)

I might say that these 50 letters are selected from about 10,000 in my files at St. Louis.

Again, on the same subject are 25 selected reports from organizers on the same subject.

(For said reports see Perham Exhibit No. 10.)

We have here a copy of circulars for the government of employees of the telegraph department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, effective October 1, 1914.

Commissioner LENNON. Promulgated by whom?

Mr. PERHAM. By the company. This schedule of rules, when sent out, was accompanied by letters. I will read three of the letters in relation to it [reads]:

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO., EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA DIVISION, Harrisburg, Pa., November 9, 1914.

Mr. C. S. MELCHER, R. J.:

I inclose herewith a copy of regulations for the government of employees of the telegraph department, effective October 1, 1914, which were agreed upon after several conferences between the company and a committee of operators representing the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen.

JOS. BROWN, Division Operator.

I might state that a railroad company very seldom advertises a railroad organization in that manner. [Reads:]

PHILADELPHIA, October 27, 1914.

All concerned, telegraphic department, Philadelphia Terminal Division:

We send herewith copy of Regulations for the Government of Employees of the Telegraph Department, effective October 1, 1914.

It is to be understood that these regulations were proposed by the committee of operators who are members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen, and have been agreed to by the company after various conferences with that committee.

H. LOGAN, Division Operator.

WILMINGTON, DEL., November 5, 1914.

All operators, Maryland Division:

We are sending you, under separate cover, a copy of Regulations for the Government of Employees of the Telegraph Department, effective October 1, 1914. These regulations were proposed by the committee of operators who are members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen, and have been agreed to by the company after various conferences with that committee.

C. J. RUDOLPH, Division Operator.

(Witness here submitted printed pamphlet entitled "The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. Regulation for the Government of Employees of the Telegraph Department.")

Commissioner LENNON. Are there any particular sections to which you refer, or do you refer to all of the rules generally?

Mr. PERHAM. This is an amended code of rules, and the point of this exhibit is that when the rules are sent out by the company they state that it is done at the request of a labor organization, but it is the company's own organization and not the regular organization.

A VOICE. Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege; I am president of the O. R. T. & F., and I desire to file with this commission a list of members.

Chairman WALSH. Please see the secretary, Mr. L. K. Brown, 940 Southern Building, in this city.

A VOICE. I have a letter saying that I was to be invited to attend this meeting, but it was overlooked. I am here, and I will state, if you will allow me—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting.) We will not allow you now.

A VOICE. Please excuse me.

Chairman WALSH. We will excuse you, but your matter will be taken up in the regular way.

Mr. PERHAM. I wish to file another production. It is a copy of the by-laws of the Mutual Benefit Association of Pennsylvania Railroad Employees (Inc.). This seems to be the latest labor organization fostered by the company. It has many things to commend it in the way of organization work. I refer to a mutual benefit association proposition contained therein. It also arranges for committees to adjust grievances, and so forth. Among its peculiarities are, "Officers must have been 15 years in the service of the company." That is stated on page 41 of this document. "They must have the indorsement of the executive officers of their various departments." That is stated at page 41 of this document. "They must be at least 35 years of age." And that is stated on page 41. The arrangement for local committees of adjustment is mentioned on page 53 of the document.

(Document referred to was submitted in printed form.)

Commissioner AISHTON. This Mutual Benefit Association that you have just referred to—this organization has nothing to do with the O. R. T. D. & S., or something like that?

Mr. PERHAM. No connection that I know of.

Commissioner AISHTON. So that this age limit, and all that sort of thing, does not apply to the other organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir. This is the latest—the last organization that is supposed to be formed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in behalf of its employees.

Commissioner AISHTON. That has a sick benefit?

Mr. PERHAM. There is a death fund arranged for, but no sick benefit that I can discover.

Chairman WALSH. In its general form, is it a labor organization? Does it provide for the presentation of grievances, and does it have the characteristics of a labor organization, such as those organizations usually have?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. What class of grievances does it provide for?

Mr. PERHAM. They are not specified, and that question is only mentioned in a very indefinite way, but it is there.

Commissioner AISHTON. And it has no connection with the other order of telegraphers that you have talked about?

Mr. PERHAM. No. It is a corporation, and it is different from the others in that—that it is incorporated.

With reference to charge No. 6, respecting the company's refusal to mediate or arbitrate labor disputes: During the years 1908 and 1909 the telegraphers, through their regularly elected committee, attempted to get recognition and a revised wage scale, but the officials declined to do business with the regular committee, and, as a last resort, mediation under the so-called Erdman Act was requested by the employees. The committee consulted with the mediators as to the necessity or advisability of taking a strike vote, and the consensus of opinion was that under the circumstances such a course was not necessary. Upon invitation from the mediators, officials of the company and the committee representing the employees went to Washington, D. C., during the month of February, 1909. The attorneys for the company made the plea that it was necessary, under the law, that trouble should be threatened or pending before the mediators could act. As no strike vote had been taken—and, furthermore, the committee being unwilling that such a vote should be taken—the negotiation was dropped for the time being.

During the months of July, August, and September, 1912, the members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers endeavored again to establish contractual relations with the company. The officials by various devices, such as referring the committee from one official to the other under the pretense that the same were absent on vacation or out of town or on inspection trips, avoided meeting the committee of their employees, and they eventually returned all documents to the committee and declined to have any business with them. The company then prepared for a strike by placing extra employees in the towers and offices, most of whom were totally ignorant of the requirements of the job.

The employees' committee sought mediation under the terms of the Federal law, but the company refused to either mediate or arbitrate the questions at issue.

To substantiate these statements we desire to file for the use of the commission a copy of the Erdman Act and a copy of the Newlands Act, showing the difference between the two statutes.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon. Please resume the stand at that time, Mr. Perham.

(Whereupon the commission took a recess until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Perham, will you please resume the stand? You were finishing something when you were interrupted, and if you will, please, I would like you to finish that; and then, if there is no objection, I would then like to have you retire, so as to put in one other witness, with whom arrangements have been made to testify at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PERHAM. That is quite agreeable.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. Then we will connect it up.

Mr. PERHAM. At the point where we stopped I was on my statement with reference to charge No. 6, and we were about to file exhibits to substantiate the statements made.

Chairman WALSH. If you can finish up on No. 6 I wish you would do so.

Mr. PERHAM. We now file a copy of the Erdman Arbitration Act; a copy of the Newlands Act, which superseded the Erdman Act; a copy of our circular letter dated October 10, 1912, referring to certain questions mediated or arbitrated; the correspondence in relation to our requests for mediation and the replies thereto; correspondence showing that the employees desired to go out on strike, about which their organization for prudential reasons withheld its approval; newspaper clippings indicating how the arrogant attitude of the officials of the company was generally regarded. We have no need to read any of the exhibits in the case, and will file them with your permission. And that concludes our matters in relation to charge No. 6.

(All the foregoing matter was submitted in printed form except strike letters, for which see Perham Exhibit No. 11. The newspaper clippings are as follows: "Bars Knapp and Neill in wage adjustments," Washington Star, Sept. 5, 1912; "Telegraphers ignored," Pittsburgh Dispatch, Sept. 15, 1912; "Pennsylvania declines mediation of dispute with its telegraph operators," Philadelphia Record, Sept. 15, 1912; "Refuses any mediation with its telegraphers," New York Sun, Sept. 15, 1912; "P. R. R. opens recruiting office for telegraphers," Philadelphia Public Ledger, Sept. 26, 1912.)

Chairman WALSH. Then, if you will just retire for the present, we will recall you when we get through with the next witness.

Mr. PERHAM. Thank you.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Lincoln.

(Mr. Robert T. Lincoln was here called as a witness. His testimony will be found under the heading "Pullman Employees.")

TESTIMONY OF MR. H. B. PERHAM—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. May I ask you to take up at the point you left off, and just proceed. I am sorry to have detained you in this manner, but arrangements were made many days ago.

Mr. PERHAM. I expect to be through in a very few minutes.

Chairman WALSH. We must have perfect order in the rear of the house, please.

Mr. PERHAM. With reference to charge No. 7, the voluntary relief department of the P. R. R. is an insurance department of employees with accident, sickness, death, and pensioning benefits. While it is known as a voluntary association, yet in the last few years membership has practically become compulsory.

The objectionable features of this relief department is that an employee loses all equity in it when he leaves the service of the company, either voluntary or through discharge. This is, of course, a powerful weapon in the company's hands, for men who have contributed to this insurance fund for 10 or 20 years are very careful to do nothing which will endanger their position with the company and thereby cause them to lose all that they have paid in.

During the year 1914, 41,412—

Chairman WALSH. How many?

Mr. PERHAM. Forty-one thousand four hundred and twelve men lost their equity in this insurance. The injustice of forcing men to take insurance which can be terminated at the pleasure of the issuing company without any refund being made is too patent to require comment.

Should an employee sue the company, there is a clause in his insurance contract which provides that he automatically forfeits his rights. In spite of the thousands who are forced to give up their savings of years, we know of no case in which a successful suit has been brought against the company to force them to refund money wrongfully retained. When an employee is discharged he has to surrender his relief contract before he will be paid the money due for his labor. The voluntary relief department is in reality employers' liability insurance in which the employee pays the premium.

The twenty-ninth annual report of the company, which is dated December 31, 1913, shows a membership of 134,189. It shows that there were 33,097 accessions to membership, and that 41,412 members left the service of the company. It is not stated what proportion of these men left voluntarily and what proportion were discharged. On the assumption that these men had been members for five years and were members of the second-class relief, which requires a yearly premium of $18, then these 41,412 men would have paid into the company treasury $3,707,080, in which fund they lost all equity.

Chairman WALSH. Has there not been a court ruling on that proposition that they had to refund the premium in cases of discharge?

Mr. PERHAM. Not to our knowledge, we have not been able to discover that.

Chairman WALSH. My attention was called to the alleged fact that the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had such a case under consideration.

Mr. PERHAM. It may be the fact and we are not cognizant of it. Now, in relation to this matter—

Chairman WALSH. Are you aware of any case in which that question was ever tested out as a legal proposition?

Mr. PERHAM. I myself collected a bill of that character from the railroad company without a suit, just on presentation of the facts.

I want to state to make it more clear that this relief to the sick benefit and superannuation fund, both of which are incapable of separation under existing arrangements. There seems to be no complaint in regard to the sick-benefit feature, the complaint being practically upon the superannuation end of it. Now, we desire to file copies of the annual reports of the Pennsylvania Railroad's Voluntary Relief Department for the years ending December 31, 1909, 1910, 1913, and 1914.

Also copies of the regulations governing the Pennsylvania Railroad's Voluntary Relief Department. I wish to call special attention to the part on page 24, which reads (this refers to applications for membership in the relief department): "I also agree that any undue or fraudulent statement made by me to the medical examiner, or any concealment of facts in this application, or resignation from the service of the said company, or my being relieved from employment and pay therein at the pleasure of the company or its proper officers shall forfeit my membership in the aforesaid relief fund and all benefits, rights, or equities arising therefrom, excepting that my leaving the service shall not (in the absence of any of the other foregoing causes of forfeiture) deprive me of any benefits to the payment of which I shall have previously become entitled by reason of accident or sickness occurring while in the service."

(Printed pamphlet, entitled "Regulations Governing the Pennsylvania Railroad Voluntary Relief Department," submitted.)

I point that out to illustrate that the employees give up all their rights by such an agreement.

Now, as an example of the superannuation allowance, I gather from this law that an employee who has been a member, say for 30 years—10 years in first class, 10 years in second, and 10 years in third class, it figures out 10 multiplied by 12 multiplied by 1 is $1.20; 10 multiplied by 12 multiplied by 2 is $2.40; 10 multiplied by 12 multiplied by 3 is $3.60. The monthly allowance would then be $7.20, and that is not guaranteed. The pension allowance, assuming $600 average salary for the first 10 years, then 1 per cent of $600 is $6. Six dollars multiplied by 30 years of service amounts to $180. One hundred and eighty dollars per year divides at $15 per month. The total drawn by employees is $15 and $10.50 from the voluntary relief department makes the total of $22.20 per month. [Reading:]

"The investments of the department are passed on by the advisory committee, whose action, however, is subject to the approval of the directors of the P. R. R. This company, however, is the guarantor of the funds."

Employees are divided into five classes according to their earnings.

Class.	Earnings.	Premium.	Daily accident benefit.	Sick.	Death.	Monthly allowance, 30 years.
1.....	$35.00	$9.00	$0.50	$0.40	$250.00	$3.60
2.....	$35.00 to 55.00	18.00	1.00	0.80	500.00	7.20
3.....	55.00 to 75.00	27.00	1.50	1.20	750.00	10.80
4.....	75.00 to 95.00	36.00	2.00	1.60	1,000.00	14.40
5.....	95.00	45.00	2.50	2.00	1,250.00	18.00

The annuity is not guaranteed. Any surplus from the relief funds is turned over to this superannuation fund at the end of the three-year periods. If there is not enough to pay this rate, then all payments of annuities are scaled down proportionately.

If the employee leaves the service, whether voluntarily or through arbitrary dismissal, he loses all equity in the relief fund. Should he sue the company, he forfeits his equity.

The company pays the cost of maintaining the department and makes good any deficiency in the relief-fund liability account.

Payments to this relief fund are paid monthly in advance, being deducted from the employee's monthly earnings. This payment takes precedence over any other claim against the earnings of an employee.

In the last few years membership in this association is believed to have become compulsory. In any event the company will not employ any man who does not first take and pass the medical examination for this association.

This association works decidedly to the advantage of the P. R. R. It is really employers' liability insurance, except that it is so arranged that the employees pay the premium. Then, too, fear of losing all of the money which they have paid into it keeps the employees steadily at work and is a very effective club in the company's hands in the time of trouble.

I file a large list of letters and statements showing that the department is a misnomer and that the membership is not voluntary.

(See Perham Exhibit No. 12. A clipping from the Evening Journal, Washington, Del., March 4, 1915, entitled "B. & O. is illegal," was also submitted.)

On our part, the objection is because the men do not seem to live long enough to draw any pension or superannuation fund.

Commissioner LENNON. Before leaving that subject, have you a statement as to the accumulation of funds in this department by the company?

Mr. PERHAM. It is shown in the annual report, exhibits I furnished for four years. There are some more interesting matters in this exhibit, as to the condition of telegraphers and signal men, and the reason why. Their names do not appear upon the roll of honor as old employees, and the reasons why are shown in the exhibit.

Chairman WALSH. What are the main reasons?

Mr. PERHAM. The conditions of service are so intense that the men do not live to that age, and insanity among signalmen is one of the most remarkable features of it. A number of the men have broken down from the conditions under which they work; the constant watchfulness in the operation of trains and the movements of signals controlling their movement is of such a strenuous nature that they break down quite frequently.

Chairman WALSH. How are the statistics on that preserved and found?

Mr. PERHAM. We have no statistics on an unorganized road, and this is comparatively an unorganized road. The organization never got a footing here, and never have got into position to make up statistics.

Chairman WALSH. What statistics have you bearing out the statement you have made that a number of the men have been afflicted with insanity because of that?

Mr. PERHAM. Nothing but letters from employees upon the subject.

Commissioner AISHTON. Have you letters submitted to the commission bearing on that subject?

Mr. PERHAM. I have.

Commissioner AISHTON. Pertaining to the Pennsylvania Railroad or to organized railroads?

Mr. PERHAM. Particularly to the Pennsylvania Railroad, and to no other.

(See Perham Exhibit No. 12.)

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. PERHAM. With reference to charge No. 8, and of the company bringing in a large force of armed men during the shopmen's strike in 1911, the Pennsylvania Railroad brought into Altoona between 250 and 300 armed men. These men followed peaceable citizens from place to place, kept an automobile, with its engine constantly running, in order that these men should not escape their espionage, and, on one occasion, had several hundred police, fully armed and dressed as workmen, who mingled with a crowd of strikers.

In the Pitcairn shops, in the same year, they tried practically the same tactics. They brought in hundreds of these armed men and on one occasion they paraded through the streets of Pitcairn with the supposed object of provoking a counter display of force.

During the trainmen's troubles in 1913 the company mobilized between 500 and 700 men at Lucknow, a few miles west of Harrisburg. These men were stationed where they could be seen by all train crews on the north, south, east, and west lines, and they engaged in drills and target practice with riot guns in order to awe the trainmen. It is worth noting that as soon as the trainmen agreed to arbitrate their difficulties with the company, this force of men were dispersed and sent back to their respective stations.

In connection with that subject I desire to read a letter from four different men addressed to Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, dated Altoona, Pa., May 24, 1911:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Replying to your request for a statement of the conditions existing in Altoona at present, beg to state as follows: The Pennsylvania Railroad Co., as you probably know by this time, have about 200 special officers watching the organizers; in addition to this they have two automobiles and a motor cycle at their service, and every act of the labor representatives is closely watched from early in the morning till late at night. We were stopping at the Altament Hotel, but were compelled to leave, as the proprietor of the place feared the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. would remonstrate against his license if he continued to harbor us. We were refused admittance to every hotel in the city with the exception of two. On several occasions we arranged to secure a hall for a meeting, and in every instance the company managed to checkmate our efforts by either buying the property or securing the lease, and as a consequence we were denied the use of the hall. This made our work extremely difficult, and we had to get applications for membership as best we could—on street corners, public places, and wherever we could meet the men, but we are glad to report that we are securing applications very rapidly. When we arrived here public sentiment was rather indifferent, if not against us, but at the present time it is safe to say we have a majority of the business men and about 75 per cent of the workmen in sympathy with our movements. This change in sentiment has been brought about largely by the organizers being willing to stand the abuses of the company's continued shadowing, discrimination by the hotels, attacks by the hostile press, etc., and in addition to this the company has added their share by compelling their employees to sign a petition calling for a mass meeting to protest our presence in this city. We are inclosing you herewith clippings from the press of Altoona, many of which are far from expressing the truth. The opera house in which the meeting was held has a seating capacity of 1,800, and, while the house was comfortably filled, the larger portion of the audience was composed of company clerks, foremen, business men, and other understrappers, together with those drawn there by curiosity. While this meeting was going on fully 1,000 men gathered in front of our hotel and called for addresses from the organizers, which unfortunately could not be complied with, owing to the prohibitory order of the mayor of the city, although Brother Flynn did briefly explain our position. From present indications it is evident that the shops here can be organized, but it will take some time. Public feeling at present is running pretty high, and the company insinuates that more drastic measures will be used to rid the city of our presence. In one of the clippings you will find a part of Brother Flynn's story. This was the first and only statement of our side of the controversy the local press ever contained, and even this would not have appeared had not many of the workingmen canceled their subscriptions. The Pitcairn Express is circulated in this city every week and is eagerly sought after by the public, who are anxious to learn the truth. The foregoing is a brief statement of conditions as they exist here at present.

Trusting in the near future to be in position to keep you more fully posted, we desire to remain,

Fraternally, yours,

F. H. FLYNN,
JOHN J. SWEENEY,
JOHN SCHMITT,
HARRY E. SCHILLING,
Senate Hotel, Altoona, Pa.

Commissioner AISHTON. Who are those men?

Mr. PERHAM. The first one is the organizer for the American Federation of Labor, and I believe Schmitt and Schilling to be members of the Boiler Makers' Union, but I am not quite sure as to that.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is not the Order of Railway Telegraphers? That was another affair?

Mr. PERHAM. That was the shop trades.

Commissioner AISHTON. So that this—was this the Pierce trouble that was referred to a while ago?

Mr. PERHAM. No; that is another one; that is the western district, wherein the Pierce trouble took place.

In addition to that I will file five reports from our representatives as to the bulldozing and terrorizing of the people and the employees in the vicinity of Altoona at that time.

(The reports will be found at the end of this subject, marked "Perham Exhibit No. 13.")

With reference to charge No. 9, the company uses its power to intimidate not only its own employees but also bankers, merchants, hotel keepers, newspapers, and other citizens.

In Altoona in 1911 labor organizers were forced to leave their hotel at the dictation of the company. A restaurant keeper of Juniata named Walker, who was favorable to the strikers, was forced out of business, and after securing a position was discharged through the influence of the company.

Small printing firms in Harrisburg had their business interfered with on account of lending moral support to striking shopmen. Bankers were approached by company officials in the same city—newspapers were requested to discharge reporters who had written stories which the railroads did not approve of; a conference of editors was called to agree to the censoring of news; company employees are forced to sign petitions and write letters in support of measures which the company desires passed. Employees are told how to vote—are forbidden to visit the capitol when legislation affecting them is up, and, in general, surrender their entire freedom in return for a chance to work for a wage which is hardly sufficient to keep the wolf from the door.

With relation to those charges, I desire to read this statement from C. F. Welker:

"To whom concerned:

"I, C. F. Welker, a resident of Juniata, Pa., make the following statement of facts, and will swear to same at any time called upon to do so:

"That at and before this time of the Pennsylvania Railroad Shopmen's strike at Juniata, Pa., I was the proprietor of a restaurant at Second and Fourth Avenue, Juniata, Pa., and had exhibited in my place of business a "union card" and was a sympathizer with the men on strike during this time, at different times. I had arguments with Charles Luther, a Pennsylvania Railroad employee, constable, etc., who misquoted me, and Spangler Blair, county detective, constable, etc., but who mixed actively in the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.'s side of the controversy. On account of these things, I was practically forced out of business.

"After this I applied for and was given a position by Mr. Pennington at Pennington repair yards. This job lasted one and one-half days, when Pennington notified me if I remained there I must furnish references. I applied to Mr. McGibbons, of the middle division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who had employed me prior to the time I entered the restaurant business. Mr. McGibbons gave me a fine recommendation, which I took to Pennington, who then said I would have to have more recommendations. I asked why. I asked him what he had against me. He said, 'I can not tell you that. I must look out for my own position; I can not employ you, anyway.'

"That just before Charles Luther assaulted Organizer Gallagher he (Luther) assaulted a 14-year-old boy named Saterfield and was practically mobbed by citizens of Juanlata because of that act, having injured the boy so that his face was covered with blood. Luther made his escape by catching a street car, jumping off at entrance of Juanlata Pennsylvania Railroad shops and getting inside the inclosure there; that Charles Luther's reputation is very bad; that there is no doubt the Pennsylvania Railroad paid Luther's wages and expenses while he was away on account of the assault upon the person of John Gallagher near the Senate Hotel, Altoona, Pa., in 1911, while, it is reported, Gallagher was under the influence of liquor. That there is no question but that the assaults upon young Saterfield and Gallagher were premeditated for the purpose of creating trouble and excitement, in order to create a condition that would justify the bringing into the situation of deputy sheriffs.

"That it is almost impossible for me to secure work in and around Altoona and Juanlata, Pa., on account of the influences as above stated.

"The Pennsylvania Railroad furnished several automobiles for use of detectives during the strike.

"C. F. WELKER,
"Juanlata (Altoona), Pa."

In closing, allow me to state that while the documentary evidence submitted in support of our averments may be considered voluminous, yet only a few were selected. We have in our possession over 10,000 letters and other documents upon the various subjects that have accumulated in the past five years. The subjects herein mentioned are a matter of vital interest to the men employed upon the Pennsylvania Railroad lines in particular, and they are of more than ordinary interest to every railroad employee in the United States.

The railroad employees generally are in hopes that this honorable commission may be able to make some recommendations that will have the effect of ameliorating conditions that, as far as this company is concerned, may be considered intolerable.

I might add to that that owing to the prestige and importance of the Pennsylvania Railroad there are many railroads in the United States that follow its example in such matters, and that is the reason why the most powerful and the most important of them all was selected as the railroad to be investigated by this commission.

I might add that when this company changes its policy in regard to these matters that other railroads will do the same thing and make it much better for employees throughout a certain district of the country, which notably lies between here and the New England States; and with that I will close my presentation of the case.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Perham, in your last statement, you stated there were other railroads other than the Pennsylvania on which these conditions existed. They are not all confined to New England, are they?

Mr. PERHAM. Not all.

Commissioner AISHTON. In fact a great many railroads west of Chicago, or in the western territory, are included, are they not?

Mr. PERHAM. Probably the worst offender against the people in this country is the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, with the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis closely behind it.

Commissioner AISHTON. And the Atchison, Tokepa & Santa Fe, and a number of roads we could name out in that territory?

Mr. PERHAM. We consider that road a bad actor, but we have not got such serious charges to bring against them.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, about these intolerable conditions you speak of. I understood in one of your statements that as far as the conditions of the Pennsylvania Railroad were concerned, it was not a matter of personal knowledge with you, but a matter that was communicated to you through letters from these people?

Mr. PERHAM. That is partially correct. I might say that as an organizer and representative of labor, I have had considerable experience with the Pennsylvania Railroad employees. Personally I have met thousands of them, but I never worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad and can not speak from an exact knowledge of conditions as an employee can.

Commissioner AISHTON. From your personal knowledge and observation of the employees, it would be confined largely to the employees in the station service, would it not, or telegraph service?

Mr. PERHAM. I am glad you asked that question, because it gives me an opportunity to explain. At the time this grievance arose I was chairman of the railroad employees' department of the American Federation of Labor, and in that capacity I took an interest in the grievances of the shopmen, the trackmen, and the clerks, and organizations that were affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. And I might further add that had it not been for the fact that we had so many men interested in this grievance, that these charges would have been formulated in a more logical manner than they have been presented here. The subject has been made complex because a great number of men have had a hand in making out that petition to the commission.

Commissioner AISHTON. Possibly my misunderstanding arose from this, that this hearing was in the matter of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Order of Railway Telegraphers, and I did not understand that it involved all classes of labor on the Pennsylvania road, as has been indicated by your letters.

Mr. PERHAM. That is a fact, that we have made the charge, but at the time this petition was printed and framed we actually represented all of the other organizations with the exception of the four brotherhoods, who have a federation of their own.

Commissioner AISHTON. So those 10,000 letters that you say are in your office at St. Louis—I think you so stated?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. The 10,000 letters on which you base this are not of station employees or telegraph operators, but are from among the entire employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is true, is it?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. There are only about 3,000 station employees, what you might call station employees, on the Pennsylvania lines?

Mr. PERHAM. My understanding is that there are 5,000 on the lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie, and a large number on the western lines, but this inquiry relates to the lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie.

Commissioner AISHTON. I am going on the report made by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which they classified them, and I think you will find that there are 3,000, as stated in that report. Now, referring, Mr. Perham, to the 1887 strike, and as being prior to that time, as I understand, that you, or the Order of Railway Telegraphers, had not had any particular difficulty in getting meetings or negotiating with officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad, but since that time you had had difficulty. What was that strike in 1887, or did I correctly understand you?

Mr. PERHAM. I referred to that strike as an interesting illustration of what may occur where employees are generally discontented.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was that a strike of station employees at that time?

Mr. PERHAM. It was of all of the employees, everybody was mixed up in that, both trainmen, enginemen, shopmen, trackmen—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). That was 1877.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is what confused me; that was a general strike?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; it is an interesting Government report, and photograph of a very serious trouble.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That should be corrected in the record.

Mr. PERHAM. It should be 1877.

Commissioner AISHTON. 1877?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And at that time all classes of employees just simply quit and laid down their work and also resorted to violence and destroyed considerable property of the railroad company?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And destroyed a roundhouse and other things?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, speaking of your organization, and not others associated with the Federation of Labor, did the organization you represent or yourself seek interviews with the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. I have.

Commissioner AISHTON. With what officers?

Mr. PERHAM. With every one of the managing officers from the superintendent of telegraph to the president of the road.

Commissioner AISHTON. Well, the president of the road doesn't ordinarily handle those matters, but the vice president or the general manager, as a rule, would ordinarily handle such matters?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; and we have applied to each and every one of them.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think you mentioned Mr. Atterbury's name; was Mr. Atterbury vice president at that time or general manager?

Mr. PERHAM. He was vice president at that time, and we also applied to S. C. Long, who was then general manager.

Commissioner AISHTON. What answers did you get from Mr. Long and from Mr. Atterbury?

Mr. PERHAM. They referred us back to the superintendent of telegraph, I believe, and eventually all correspondence and schedules and the letters with relation to it were all returned to Mr. Johnson's office.

Commissioner AISHTON. Were you told by any of those officers that there was a question of whether you represented the men or not?

Mr. PERHAM. I think they pretended they are doing business with the company organization, and they said if there was only three members of that organization they would do business with that preferably to doing business with mine.

Commissioner AISHTON. And that has been the main question involved, or one of the questions involved, as to whether the organization is really what it represents itself to be; a representative organization of the men?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; I think that is a very important question.

Commissioner AISHTON. And is it not particularly the case when there are two or three organizations striving for supremacy on the road?

Mr. PERHAM. There is nothing of that character in this case.

Commissioner AISHTON. I thought there was testimony given that there was another organization on the Pennsylvania lines, and possibly on some other lines, the O. R. T., and the D. S., or something of that kind.

Mr. PERHAM. That refers to the company organization; that is true.

Commissioner AISHTON. I do not know; it was not referred to as a company organization; it was referred to as the O. R. T. and the D. S., or something like that; I don't know just what it is, but anyway they represent some other employees than you claim to represent?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; two or three of them.

Commissioner AISHTON. And was not that the reason given by the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad for declining to enter into contract with you or your officers?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; and it was regarded as a device by us to avoid meeting us.

Commissioner AISHTON. It was so regarded by you, perhaps; but that was the reply of the company; they just gave their reasons why they did not meet with you, didn't they?

Mr. PERHAM. I think that was stated among other things—that they had an organization of their own; that is the way we understood it.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, Mr. Perham, speaking about the Pennsylvania Railroad now, does your organization, the Order of Railway Telegraphers, claim to represent any other class of employees other than employees who handle the telegraph or telephone in their daily line of business?

Mr. PERHAM. We have nine classes of railroad employees in the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

Commissioner AISHTON. Clerks?

Mr. PERHAM. Who telephone; yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Clerks in the freight houses, with the telegraphers?

Mr. PERHAM. The men who handle the train orders, train movements.

Commissioner AISHTON. The clerks who handle the telegraph instruments as a part of their day's work?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Who also handle the phone or telegraph?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And lever men?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Whether they handle the telephone or telegraph or not?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is, if a man handles a lever to throw switches you have him in your organization?

Mr. PERHAM. Oh, yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And signal repair men?

Mr. PERHAM. Not at all.

Commissioner AISHTON. You do not have them?

Mr. PERHAM. No.

Commissioner AISHTON. They have a separate organization, have they not?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; they belong to the Brotherhood of Railway Signalmen.

Commissioner AISHTON. You don't undertake to represent any clerks other than those handling telephones on account of train orders?

Mr. PERHAM. Train orders. I might add to that that we represent train dispatchers and staff men, interlockers, as well as the telephone and telegrapher and the signalman.

Commissioner AISHTON. These organizers, Mr. Perham, that you told about, that had such a time at Altoona; there were several references to that, and all had reference to the trouble that they had in getting a meeting place and in the injunction that was served upon their meeting in Sylvan Park?

Mr. PERHAM. Sylvan Lodge.

Commissioner AISHTON. Sylvan Lodge. It was all the same occurrence?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. These organizers that were there, they were not representing your order? That was in your connection as secretary of the Federation of Labor?

Mr. PERHAM. Or in that direction.

Commissioner AISHTON. You spoke about an organizer being at Pittsburgh interviewing the negro redcaps and people there. How many of those organizers did you have in your organization?

Mr. PERHAM. This was the same man, Mr. Ellis, that I mention so many times in this inquiry. I put him on this job and had him look up all these matters. I might say that I went on the ground myself first to discover whether there was any validity in these charges and rumors of charges and found that there was, and then afterwards put Mr. Ellis on to look it up; and he spent possibly a year in looking it up and reporting to me what he found.

Commissioner AISHTON. He was doing a kind of secret work, going around and getting information and transmitting it to you?

Mr. PERHAM. It must have been secret.

Commissioner AISHTON. He was the only man employed in that capacity by your organization?

Mr. PERHAM. Oh, no; I had quite a number of men during the year or two.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes. Well, do they work and report to you what they find?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; to see if there is anything to these complaints.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, then, these organizers that were down there at Altoona—you read a letter from one of them saying that he had been very successful in getting 75 per cent of the employees on their side. That would indicate that the employees when he went there were not very favorable to this proposition of striking and raising a disturbance, didn't it?

Mr. PERHAM. Well, yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Were those men sent down there particularly for that purpose?

Mr. PERHAM. They were sent there to organize the men. That is our business—to organize men. And these were mostly shopmen that got into that struggle there, and they found that the newspapers were controlled by the employer and that everybody was in terror of the employer. The people along the line of this railroad are enslaved. We desired to free them.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes; I understand that is the attitude and your work; but, now, down here at Altoona this strike was on, as I understand it, when these organizers went down there?

Mr. PERHAM. No; this occurred, I believe, prior to the strike; although I am not sure of that.

Commissioner AISHTON. No; but when this letter was written, however, these four organizers were down there, and, as one of them says, "We have now got 75 per cent of the men," indicating that there was a very much less number when they started in on their work?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; naturally.

Commissioner AISHTON. You say that there were about 200 guards kicking up a disturbance?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And they were these fellows drilling along the track so the trainmen could see them?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And after you had this Altoona disturbance?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; that is my understanding.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, your understanding comes from the organizers—the letters they wrote about it? You were not there?

Mr. PERHAM. I was not there.

Commissioner AISHTON. You have no personal knowledge?

Mr. PERHAM. No personal knowledge of the facts in that matter.

Commissioner AISHTON. No; it is just simply what these organizers and fellows that were around getting information for you picked up and wrote you?

Mr. PERHAM. And from employees not representing me; some hundreds of employees I never met. I have their letters.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes. This information you gave this morning about these "bulls," as you call them—these special agents and spotters and detectives and all that class of fellows—you said J. F. Riley—

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. He is the third vice president of the railway clerks, isn't he?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; that is his position.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is a sort of organizing position, is it, or is that an executive position?

Mr. PERHAM. He holds meetings and organizes men.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes; but all the information you have about this affable gentleman he thought was on his trail wherever he went and followed him around and who met him on trains and on docks and all that kind of thing—all you know about that is just what Riley wrote you?

Mr. PERHAM. Unfortunately, not all I know about it, because I have had the same experience, and every man, I think, that ever went near the Pennsylvania to organize employees has had the same experience.

Commissioner AISHTON. Well, isn't that a common experience or a common feeling, I believe, on the part of not only the officers of labor unions, but also of officers of railroads, that every movement is being watched, and all that kind of thing? It is a kind of mutual feeling and about nine-tenths is "bunk," isn't it?

Mr. PERHAM. Oh, no; labor-organization men are intensely practical. Not one in a hundred labor-organization men at this time is really followed by a detective—everybody knows what he is going to do—except by this company that employs so many of them.

Commissioner AISHTON. Exactly—well, you take the detective racket, it has been worked to death, hasn't it? You have been worked and the railroads have been worked until it looks ridiculous. Yes; until it looks ridiculous; and it is a favored stunt with everybody connected with both sides of the business to make out that they are kind of martyrs and being followed by these detectives, and, as a matter of fact, nobody pays much attention to it.

Mr. PERHAM. If you would just take the guns off of those men, we would not have any complaint; but we can not get on an equality because we can not carry guns. If they would just take the guns away from those men, we don't care.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think you have given some testimony—in fact, turned in a document here published by the Pennsylvania Railroad, that they spent $800,000 last year, was it, for policing?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Eighty thousand?

Mr. PERHAM. Eight hundred thousand.

Commissioner AISHTON. Eight hundred thousand, I think, was the amount named, and that includes, I suppose, the Fort Wayne and the Pennsylvania and the whole system, doesn't it?

Mr. PERHAM. I am not sure about that, but I think closer investigation would show the figure is altogether wrong and that it is not half stated.

Commissioner AISHTON. Well, it comes out over the signatures of the officers of the road, and I should hardly think they would publish anything that is not correct. Let's say it is $800,000, or take any figure you want to set, for the sake of the argument—do you know, or have you any knowledge of the Pennsylvania police force organization and its duties, and what they do?

Mr. PERHAM. No.

Commissioner AISHTON. Your home is in St. Louis?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. The Pennsylvania runs in there over the Vandalla lines, and the Vandalla is included in that figure. Do you know how many policemen they have in St. Louis, and what their duties are?

Mr. PERHAM. I have no idea.

Commissioner AISHTON. Do you know that their police force covers also crossing flagmen who are in uniforms?

Mr. PERHAM. I don't know that.

Commissioner AISHTON. Well, I don't know that, but I have a very shrewd suspicion that they are, and that can be developed on investigation. Do you know how many policemen they have around their passenger station at—well, we will take the Union Station in Chicago? Do you know what their force is there?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not know.

Commissioner AISHTON. Do you know what they pay the men?

Mr. PERHAM. Not at all.

Commissioner AISHTON. Do you know what their duties are?

Mr. PERHAM. I never was—

Commissioner AISHTON (interrupting). Have you ever been in their freight station?

Mr. PERHAM. Never—

Commissioner AISHTON (interrupting). Ever see any of the men in uniform along the Pennsylvania road?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; a great many.

Commissioner AISHTON. You don't know anything about their duties, or how necessary they are in the operation of the road, or in the protection of their passengers or freight, or anything of that kind?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not.

Commissioner AISHTON. So, as far as you know, when you pay the Pennsylvania Railroad at Chicago and Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, and all these large centers of population, you don't know whether it is an unreasonable or a reasonable amount to expend for police protection, or whether they are justified in it or not, do you?

Mr. PERHAM. I think it is right to call the attention of this commission to that fact that this railroad is usurping a State function in the matter of having so many armed men and assuming police powers here that do not belong to a corporation, as I understood it.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think the commission probably will take that into consideration; but what I am trying to get at is that there is possibly two degrees of illegitimate work of policemen; one is the legitimate kind of illegitimacy, and the other is what you are complaining about, the armed thugs, bulls, and all that kind of thing, and people going about with steel billets and guns and things of that kind and terrorizing people. Now, this $800,000 referred to, if it is investigated, I think it will be found largely what might be termed a proper mode of protection?

Mr. PERHAM. That would be a matter of opinion. During the time that this commission was sitting in Chicago, in seven days five men were killed by railroad policemen. Some people might think that that is eminently proper that the railroad should protect itself to that extent; that if they find a man breaking into a car that man should be instantly killed. I believe that some people entertain that view. I do not.

Commissioner AISHTON. Take the other view of that, Mr. Perham; were it not for the protection afforded its trainmen by the police officers, such as I have outlined, in their yards, how many trainmen and enginemen and brakemen and conductors do you suppose would be killed in a year in the city of Chicago?

Mr. PERHAM. I don't know; I think they are capable of taking care of themselves.

Commissioner AISHTON. Well, that is a point of ethics as to where the duty of the city ends and where that of the railroad begins.

Mr. PERHAM. Yes. I have raised that question here for that very purpose of having that line of demarcation set out so that we may understand what a railroad's position is in regard to policing and where the State draws its line.

Commissioner AISHTON. This O. R. T., or this other organization—this company organization that you speak of, who are its officers, Mr. Perham; do you know?

Mr. PERHAM. I know of one. That was Mr. Austin, and I think he has the charge of it, the president, and also secretary of it, and the editor of the magazine.

Commissioner AISHTON. They publish a magazine; do they?

Mr. PERHAM. They publish a monthly magazine.

Commissioner AISHTON. Do you know whether they charge dues and all that kind of thing?

Mr. PERHAM. Well, I don't know. I think sometimes they do and sometimes they do not—

Chairman WALSH. At this point, excuse me, we will adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. Some of the other commissioners have some questions, and we have to recall Mr. Perham.

Mr. PERHAM. All right.

Chairman WALSH. To-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

(Thereupon, at 4.30 p. m., these proceedings were adjourned until the following day, Wednesday, May 5, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Wednesday, May 5, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Weinstock, O'Connell, Lennon, Mrs. Harriman, Garretson, Aishton.

TESTIMONY OF MR. H. B. PERHAM—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Perham, you may resume the stand now.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Perham, I think we closed with what we were discussing at the time, and there is nothing further to say on that, I think.

Mr. PERHAM. I believe that is the case.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Perham, you made some statements about the earnings of a telegraph operator, monthly earnings, when you were so employed; I think you said $100 a month was the pay the telegraph operator received, or that is what yours was?

Mr. PERHAM. I received that much.

Commissioner AISHTON. Since that time there have been changed conditions of work, have there not? You have telegraph operators in the transportation service, at least, that work on an eight-hour-a-day basis now?

Mr. PERHAM. Quite generally that is the case.

Commissioner AISHTON. Quite generally that is the case?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. As the result of legislation on that subject?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. So that any comparison of pay would also take into consideration the hours and conditions of service that go with it?

Mr. PERHAM. All things should be considered.

Commissioner AISHTON. All things should be considered?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. I don't know that this is important, but the record shows, I think, from your testimony, that the Pennsylvania Railroad, as one measure of combating strikes, installed telephones, to the great danger of the public, or something of that kind; I think the record shows that is your testimony?

Mr. PERHAM. I don't remember ever having made such a statement.

Commissioner AISHTON. You would not support such a statement? Possibly I misunderstood you.

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir. We consider the telephone a very valuable adjunct to our business.

Chairman WALSH. That was the statement—it sounded to me like that. I understood it that way, Mr. Perham, that you said they put in the telephone service and something else to the great danger of the public.

Mr. PERHAM. I think that was the time the strike was pending, and many section laborers were put in the signal towers to take the places of signalmen that might go on strike.

Chairman WALSH. That had nothing to do with telephones, then?

Mr. PERHAM. Not at all.

Commissioner AISHTON. If the record so stated, it will be noted that Mr. Perham so corrects it, as far as the telephones are concerned.

Mr. PERHAM. May I explain that my organization admits telephone operators engaged in the handling of trains on the same plane as telegraph operators and train dispatchers? We consider that an improvement on telegraphy.

Commissioner AISHTON. There are some questions, Mr. Perham, raised as to the Pennsylvania Railroad in these notices or rules for the telegraph department that they issued, I think by you. You have a statement contained in that notice that this was arrived at in a conference of the committee, which was a little out of the usual. Was that the way you testified? You read several notices from some division superintendents of different divisions about the rules having been agreed to by a committee?

Mr. PERHAM. I read three letters from as many different division operators that stated that this schedule of rules had been arranged with a committee representing a certain organization, and I said in reference to that that it was a very unusual thing for railroad officials to state that it was made with this organization, because that would be an advertisement for a labor organization, and of course in this case we doubt the authenticity of this particular organization, as my testimony yesterday went to show.

Commissioner AISHTON. In putting out schedules and rules of agreement as between employees and the railroad companies generally, I don't know what the practice is on Pennsylvania Railroad, but did not such schedules ordinarily bear not only the signature of the officers of the company but also the signatures of the officers of the different organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. It is not unusual for the organization to have its committee put its name on the schedule as being parties to the agreement.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes, sir; I think that is the case in a great many of your schedules in the West, for example?

Mr. PERHAM. Quite a number of them.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes, sir; so that really the practice is not particularly an unusual one, except it might be on the Pennsylvania Railroad; I don't know their conditions.

Mr. PERHAM. The letters that I quoted were the only records in my life where such a thing occurred.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think you said, Mr. Perham, in reply to somebody, that this wage schedule that was submitted and put in the record as evidence, where rates of pay were quoted at $38.50, is one I remember—the date of that schedule; what was it? You say 1906?

Mr. PERHAM. 1906.

Commissioner AISHTON. You have no knowledge of what the condition was except as included in that schedule?

Mr. PERHAM. I filed a schedule of wages paid and wages asked for in 1911.

Commissioner AISHTON. Which is a later date?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Do you have any knowledge of what the duties are of these lower-paid men?

Mr. PERHAM. In a general way; yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. What are they—agents and operators?

Mr. PERHAM. The men generally quoted at $44.90 per month were station agents, working from 12 to 13 hours per day.

Commissioner AISHTON. In what territory?

Mr. PERHAM. On the branch lines.

Commissioner AISHTON. Something like the Delaware division.

Mr. PERHAM. I believe some wages were reported on the Delaware division.

Commissioner AISHTON. You don't know whether these agents also have lines of business they perform; for example, a man might run a store and sell tickets. I don't know that is the case on the Pennsylvania, but it is on some roads with very thin traffic.

Mr. PERHAM. I am informed that it is not the case on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Commissioner AISHTON. You have no personal knowledge; that information comes to you?

Mr. PERHAM. Nothing but a statement of the employees.

Commissioner AISHTON. You spoke about regular organizations; that the railroads made agreements with regular organizations. What are considered the regular organizations, Mr. Perham?

Mr. PERHAM. My reference at that time was to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Commissioner AISHTON. They have agreements with those organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. I so understand.

Commissioner AISHTON. They have an agreement, in your knowledge, with this D. S., O. R. T. S. & A., that is referred to, rival organizations to the O. R. T., on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. I assume from the letters read yesterday that they have.

Commissioner AISHTON. These four organizations that have agreements, are they members of the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. PERHAM. They are not.

Commissioner AISHTON. Is this the D. S., O. R. T., T. S. & A.; are they?

Mr. PERHAM. They are not.

Commissioner AISHTON. Is your organization, the O. R. T.?

Mr. PERHAM. It is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and has been since 1899.

Commissioner AISHTON. But that has nothing to do with their being regular or irregular?

Mr. PERHAM. Nothing.

Commissioner AISHTON. The regular part is that the railroad company has seen fit to make an agreement with those organizations; is that it.

Mr. PERHAM. The irregular part is for the railroad company to foster a dual organization to another one; the railroad organization having very few members and the regular organization representing a majority of the men employed.

Commissioner AISHTON. The railroad company, you would not have us understand, fosters the Order of Railway Telegraphers?

Mr. PERHAM. I have no evidence of that, but I have in the case of the other organizations mentioned.

Commissioner AISHTON. That evidence will be presented, will it?

Mr. PERHAM. It was presented in the letters I read.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is the extent of your knowledge of any fostering, is it—those letters read?

Mr. PERHAM. I filed 50 letters from different employees verifying my statement; also 25 reports from organizers verifying that statement, or attempting to do so.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Perham, do you know what rate of wages is paid what are called the shop crafts, say at Altoona, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, per hour?

Mr. PERHAM. Nothing further than the affidavits filed by me yesterday from the chief executives of the labor organizations; it was from the blacksmiths and the carmen.

Commissioner AISHTON. If I remember right, that stated in a general way that the men were working for $1.80 a day, or something of that kind.

Mr. PERHAM. I think it was $1.25 a day, or $1.50 a day for car repairers.

Commissioner AISHTON. Did that give the number of men employed in the different crafts and the rate per hour paid?

Mr. PERHAM. It did not.

Commissioner AISHTON. Is that information obtainable?

Mr. PERHAM. From the company, yes; from the organization, no.

Commissioner AISHTON. Have you any knowledge of the rate per hour paid generally in that territory for that kind of work or how it compares with the rates paid the Pennsylvania men?

Mr. PERHAM. I have no specific knowledge on that subject.

Commissioner AISHTON. You gave some testimony about the work—I think you confined yourself to station employees and telegraph operators—about the nature of the work breaking men down and making the men insane, and that kind of thing, and cited an instance of one man who had gone insane, Mr.

Perham. Do you base that statement on that one man or is that a general proposition with that class of employees?

Mr. PERHAM. It is more prevalent on the Pennsylvania Railroad than any other railroad that I have heard of, and I think it is caused by the density of the traffic and the nervous condition that comes from that tense application to watching trains and their movements.

Commissioner Aishton. Well, now, that might apply in possibly some few places on the Pennsylvania or any other railroad where the traffic was particularly dense, but the Pennsylvania is a pretty large railroad and there are very few of those tense points on it where there is any terrific amount of congestion. What I was trying to find out, and what I think the commission ought to know, is, are these men employed in these capacities where this dense traffic is and where they handle switches and interlocking plants all on the eight-hour bases?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner Aishton. They all work in eight-hour tricks?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner Aishton. Their hours of service are less than any other class of employees in the transportation service, are they not?

Mr. PERHAM. They are; and they must be still reduced. In Germany, for instance, switchmen work six hours a day by the Federal law, and we, in seeking to bring about the eight-hour day generally for such employees, have succeeded so far in getting the eight hours. Now, our next move will be to get a six-hour day for those men.

Commissioner Aishton. And then I suppose five hours or four hours, so as to divide it up in tricks, like they have on shipboard?

Mr. PERHAM. We will continue our efforts along this line until we make it possible for the men to retain their health and work in those positions.

Commissioner Aishton. I think you said there were 5,000 employees on the Pennsylvania road engaged in this class of service yesterday. I questioned that a little as to whether it exceeded 3,000; but we will say 5,000. How many employees—what percentage of the employees—have these strenuous jobs that drive them insane, do you think?

Mr. PERHAM. As I said yesterday, there are nine classes of employees eligible to the organization I represent, and the approximate figure of 5,000 had reference to those who were eligible to the organization.

Commissioner Aishton. That is, clerks?

Mr. PERHAM (interrupting). This tense condition only applies to men in signal towers and the relay telegraph offices.

Commissioner Aishton. And what proportion or how many men would you think the Pennsylvania Railroad had of that character?

Mr. PERHAM. Well, probably 500 or 600, although I do not know. That is just an approximate estimate.

Commissioner Aishton. Now, the New York Central line is the line that would closely approximate the density of traffic and number of employees of that class, would it not, Mr. Perham?

Mr. PERHAM. I think it would; no doubt.

Commissioner Aishton. Do you think the New York Central would have probably 500 to 600 employees in that class?

Mr. PERHAM. On the line between New York and Buffalo it generally applies.

Commissioner Aishton. Now, your statement that the Pennsylvania Railroad lines exceeded in that—the number of people who went insane and were broken down prematurely over other roads—have you any figures to show how the comparison stands as to that class of employees between the New York Central and the Pennsylvania?

Mr. PERHAM. No; but the reason I assign for it is the difference in the management between the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad. These men on the Pennsylvania Railroad seem to be living in a state of terror. They are laid off for some trifling mishap, something that they were not responsible for, and they seemed to be afraid of everybody and everything; and that condition applies wholly and singularly to the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Commissioner Aishton. I think you said yesterday, Mr. Perham, that your personal knowledge of the Pennsylvania Railroad was rather limited, and you depended largely on these letters. Have you letters that support that statement as to employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. No. I would prefer to have that from witnesses who have direct knowledge of the circumstances. In my opening statement yesterday it was to introduce the subject, to be verified later by witnesses that I assume will be called by the commission to testify as to the truth or not of these statements I have made.

Commissioner AISHTON. Oh, pardon me for trying to get that evidence. The witnesses are to be produced. We would like to get some prima facie evidence in regard to that.

Mr. PERHAM. I take it that it is necessary for a man to work on the road to know of the conditions; and, as I stated yesterday, I never have worked on the Pennsylvania lines.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think, Mr. Perham, you are absolutely right about that; and what this commission wants, of course, is facts and not speculation.

About the pension system on the Pennsylvania Railroad, Mr. Perham, I believe you testified that the operators never get pensions?

Mr. PERHAM. Very few of them, in comparison with other classes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, what is the reason of that?

Mr. PERHAM. On account of the tense condition in which they are employed and the vicissitudes of the business not permitting them to live long enough, or to remain in the business long enough to gain a pension.

Commissioner AISHTON. The witnesses here are competent to testify to that feature?

Mr. PERHAM. I hope so.

Commissioner AISHTON. Isn't there another feature also that is responsible for lack of pensions or a proper percentage of pensions among telegraph operators on the Pennsylvania? Isn't it a fact that on the Pennsylvania Railroad, as well as on other transportation companies, that there is a larger percentage of telegraph operators promoted to official positions, to important agencies, and that kind of thing, and isn't it a fact that about 75 per cent of all promotions occur in the telegraphic service? And doesn't that take away, in a large measure, the elderly, or the men who have aged in the service, and who are more competent?

Mr. PERHAM. I don't know that to be a fact.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think, Mr. Perham, I asked you a question or two at Chicago, and possibly this will be a reiteration of it; but this commission, as you know, is endeavoring to find a solution of these difficulties. We are earnestly trying to find them. Now, you take a strike or a tie-up or a lockout, if you please, in railroad service or in the service of a public corporation, it is really a more serious matter, isn't it, than in the ordinary commercial pursuits of a manufacturing industry?

Mr. PERHAM. I have always viewed it that way—

Commissioner AISHTON (interrupting). That has always been your policy?

Mr. PERHAM. That to call a strike on the railroad is a very serious thing; that it interferes with the business of persons who are not directly connected with the troubles that brought on the strike, for instance.

Commissioner AISHTON. And it not only interferes with their business, but affects their lives and the lives of their children and of the whole community?

Mr. PERHAM. Has a bad effect all around on the employees and the employers; in this Pennsylvania Railroad matter we would have called these men out on strike if it had not been for such consideration quite awhile ago. We have been trying to avoid that.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think that is your reputation and, as Mr. Carlton very well said, that has been your attitude always and that has been generally recognized; and I am asking these questions on account of that attitude that you have preserved.

Mr. PERHAM. I am very glad to answer those questions.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes. Now, the authority rests for calling a strike in you as president, doesn't it?

Mr. PERHAM. The rule upon the subject is that two-thirds of the general committee representing the employees, with the approval of the president, may bring on a strike.

Commissioner AISHTON. They can not do it without the approval of the president?

Mr. PERHAM. They can not.

Commissioner AISHTON. There is no so-called vetoing or, rather, overriding of the veto of the president or anything of that kind? They can not go ahead without his approval?

Mr. PERHAM. Not without it; and sometimes the president vetoes a strike anyway after the general committee has authorized it.

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes; I think it is generally understood that you have been brave enough to take that action in some cases where you thought it was not right.

Mr. PERHAM. I have taken that action.

Commissioner AISHTON. Don't you think that in the hands of what you might call improper persons—improper, I don't use that offensively, but a man who has not ripe, matured judgment on those things, and who may be in the position of head of one of these organizations—don't you think that is a mighty dangerous power to put in one man's hands of determining on whether or not the interference with the life of the community will be carried out through the calling of a strike; and don't you think, particularly in railroad or transportation matters, or public utilities where that result comes, that there should be some body or power or something or other devised or recommended by this commission of a nature that would either afford an adjudication of the disputes or such publicity as to the real facts in the matter as would prevent the party who is in the wrong from going into it, or at least to defeat him or defeat either side if they had not public opinion with them?

Mr. PERHAM. Imperfect as our labor organizations may be, I believe that it is better to keep away from the judicial end of it. A court, in the last analysis, is but a man. He has his opinions in regard to these questions, and it depends upon his environment, his make-up generally as to whether the court is any more competent to pass upon the rights of such a matter than the man who has come through all the chairs in a labor organization, and has been tested by the fire of experience in all sorts of ways before he gives this decision on a strike. Every time a labor leader puts his O. K. upon a strike he puts himself in jeopardy. That is well known. Consequently, the men who are in charge of labor organizations work to gain their ends through peaceable means. The great labor leader is not a great labor leader very long. The thing is self-adjusting. If he makes mistakes, if his judgment is not good, he is the one who is generally sacrificed; and that is the check and balance for the entire system that we have developed.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think something was said about a strike that was called on the Pennsylvania Railroad—you called it the Pierce strike, I think—which did not receive the support of the organizations. That is right, isn't it?

Mr. PERHAM. I think that was an uprising of the men, and that is their present disposition.

Commissioner AISHTON. That was a labor organization?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Federation of Railway Employees, or something like that?

Mr. PERHAM. It was forming at the time the strike came on.

Commissioner AISHTON. Of course, in the consideration of this entire subject, with the interruption that comes, and the unrest that comes, we have to consider not only what you might call the old-established organizations, but the menace of an organization of that kind, not only to the public, but to the older organizations; and an affair of that kind is a menace to the entire labor situation, as well as it is to the employers' side of the question, is it not?

Mr. PERHAM. It certainly is; and my contention is that the best plan for the railway company is to make an agreement with its employees in the regular way, and they would be insured industrial peace, which does not come to this railroad because it has strikes every few months, somewhere or other, on account of their not having made contracts with their employees.

Commissioner AISHTON. Well, is that just a fact? They have contracts with their employees; they claim, I believe, I don't know anything about it, I believe you advised that the reason they would not meet with you, as given by Mr. Long and Mr. Atterbury, was that you did not represent the men. Whether that is right or wrong, this commission has no way of judging, but I suppose they will testify why when they are put on the stand.

Mr. PERHAM. That has been their contention right along, but if they have not got the men they can not represent them. Now, we claim to have the organization, that we are the power, and that when our men make a movement to get a wage increase the company meets it by giving it to the other committee, and the committee that we claim is appointed by the officers, not elected by the men.

Commissioner AISHTON. I suppose evidence will be brought out before this commission to show on that?

Mr. PERHAM. I hope so.

Commissioner AISHTON. I take it from what you said about the conditions of courts that there are men that are not competent, or at least what you call a class prejudice, to prevent them making a rule, judicial decision, on questions of this kind?

Mr. PERHAM. I am not in favor of the word "class" prejudice, and I really did not use it.

Commissioner AISHTON. I read it in some pamphlet here yesterday.

Mr. PERHAM. What I said was that the court was a man, and that his environment had much to do with his opinion as to labor and industrial and wage questions. If, for instance, this particular judge had been a lawyer in the pay of the corporation all his life, and his work has been corporation work, naturally he is close to the work that engrossed him. It sways his views. My views have always been on the labor side of this question, and it is impossible for me to depart from it and to separate from it. It is part of my life work, consequently it is the same with corporation counsel; it is their life work, and they can not be separated from it.

Commissioner AISHTON. You and I agree absolutely on that, and yet you, I say you, or men in the organization, that are the heads, are the final court that says whether there will be a strike on the railroad or not, and it is not, and does not that indicate the necessity for somebody in between, the Government or somebody who would be free from your education and labor and your labor affiliations, and the employers being filled up with their side, but to meet in between and say what the right thing to do is?

Mr. PERHAM. It was for that reason that we helped to form the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, and if you will look at our records you will find that since that board has been formed we have invariably referred matters to that body that we could not arrange with the company.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is what is now called the Newlands Act?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; and previously it was the Erdman Act, and we have invoked that.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, in view of what has taken place and can take place, do you think that the Newlands Act goes far enough to avoid strikes?

Mr. PERHAM. The Newlands Act can be extended to cover a wider jurisdiction and more classes of railroad employees.

Commissioner AISHTON. At present it only takes in what are known as the transportation employees?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Your idea is that it should be extended to take in, say, shop crafts and any other crafts of laborers?

Mr. PERHAM. To railroad employees I would have that extended.

Commissioner AISHTON. Would you extend it to public utility employees; employees of water works, gas works, and street car lines, and all that kind of thing?

Mr. PERHAM. I certainly am in favor of another such act to cover other business. The transportation business is peculiar, as this United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation has learned much from the transportation business, and I desire to say, if you will permit me, that I believe mediation to be one of the best things ever devised for the prevention of labor troubles. That we have had much experience with it, and we like it much better than arbitration for many reasons. One is that arbitration leads to ill-feeling, sometimes, between the employer and employee. Mediation never does, for the mediator comes in between the two contesting parties and seeks the point of contact, eliminates the points of difference, and actually brings about the solution of the trouble with good feeling to both parties, which we desire; so that the mediation feature of the work of the board has been the most prominent and the most useful and the most to be desired of the work of that board. Consequently, having found that to be a good thing, and having devised methods for bringing about a peaceable solution of their differences, I believe it should be extended, and I think a conciliation and mediation board should be in each of the judicial districts in the United States, so that their services might be obtained quickly and effectively, so as to nip the trouble in the bud and bring about a solution before ill-feeling arises between the classes.

Commissioner AISHTON. You believe that under the law such mediation and conciliation should be compulsory to both parties?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not. Compulsory features lead to a judicial phase of it, and wherever men have tried that, it has been a failure. I refer particularly to New South Wales and New Zealand, as examples.

Commissioner AISHTON. You think that there being such a law and such a body that neither side would dare go against public opinion in refusing to accept mediation and conciliation?

Mr. PERHAM. That has been our experience.

Commissioner AISHTON. And you think that would follow naturally?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; I do. I think the mediation can be developed so that in the minds of men it will be accepted as the proper thing. I believe in public opinion.

I think you spoke of rebating yesterday, and afterwards the thought occurred to me that there had been an entire change in public sentiment throughout this country on that matter. Say, for instance, 15 years ago that a merchant would come to an agent and ask for a rate on certain commodities, each man seeking to get a lower rate than his neighbor, and it was regarded as a legitimate proposition, and to-day it is known to be wrong by every shipper in the United States and no man seeks a rebate. That has been brought about by publicity, and work of the I. C. C., by showing the iniquities that are concealed in it.

Commissioner AISHTON. Do you believe in this mediation and conciliation idea of yours, that in the features of the Canadian disputes act that they should be introduced by way of publicity of the question?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not favor the Canadian act. Freedom is our goal in this country, and the right to strike, right to quit work, is one of the rights that we prize, although we may not exercise it; still, to know that we have that is a reassuring fact.

Commissioner AISHTON. The Canadian disputes act does not deprive you of that right?

Mr. PERHAM. It does.

Commissioner AISHTON. Only for a certain period, two weeks?

Mr. PERHAM. One minute would be too much.

Commissioner AISHTON. You want to be able to tie it up right away?

Mr. PERHAM. Not to tie anything up; just the right to quit work when we are through.

Commissioner AISHTON. And you determine when you are through?

Mr. PERHAM. The men will; not the man, the employees.

Commissioner AISHTON. In your case, it would be you?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, Mr. Aishton asked you regarding the authority of the president of your organization in connection with strikes. Mr. Aishton, I am of the opinion, has the idea that you have the power to order a strike?

Commissioner AISHTON. After a two-thirds vote.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As I take it, you have the power to veto a strike, but your authority would not order a strike.

Mr. PERHAM. It simply approves.

Commissioner AISHTON. It would approve of a two-thirds vote?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You could not authorize a strike?

Mr. PERHAM. Will you allow me to explain further in regard to that proposition? There is no provision in our laws, rules, or regulations as to a strike vote, but before the president of the organization would put his approval on a strike proposition, he must know that the constituents are going to strike. He must have word from them or find out what the men mean. A strike called otherwise would not do, and that is where the judgment of the president is reached to decide the question. For instance, on a certain road in this vicinity I had a strike vote one time of 98 per cent of the men; I vetoed it.

Commissioner AISHTON. You knew they were wrong, or had not exhausted their other resources?

Mr. PERHAM. They were perfectly right, but they did not have the strength numerically to win the case. It was a small number of men; if I had received such a vote from a large number of men there would have been nothing for me to do but put my approval thereon. In these cases we poll the men, and the president absolutely represents the men in his action; if he does not he will go down, and if he does he will endure.

Commissioner AISHTON. Am I to understand that the only question the president determines in a case of that kind is whether he can deliver the goods? Is that the question? Or is there the question of the right or wrong of the thing? Men are wrong sometimes, and men of experience know it.

Mr. PERHAM. There are many things in relation to that. We have had cases where the men were wrong; we will be frank and will state to you that we had information that the men did not have in regard to the case, and that we failed to indorse the strike proposition because we knew the trouble, and took other methods of adjusting it.

Commissioner AISHTON. I understand, Mr. Perham, from what you said, that you as a representative labor man are absolutely opposed to arbitration differences?

Mr. PERHAM. You do not understand me correctly, because I have been an arbitrator several times on cases and counsel in arbitration cases.

Commissioner AISHTON. I did put it wrong. What I meant was that you object to any legal requirement or any law that would require arbitration of disputes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The compulsory arbitration?

Mr. PERHAM. I am unalterably opposed to that, compulsory arbitration.

Commissioner AISHTON. I am very much obliged, Mr. Walsh, and am sorry to have taken up so much of your time.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. O'Connell has some questions.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. At the time your organization was in an effort to secure a conference with officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad, did you tell us yesterday you had a letter stating that it was inferred that you did not represent the men on the system was the reason why you were not given a contract?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What was the truth of that statement? Did your organization have the membership on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. We represented about one-half of them?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. About 50 per cent?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the organization that the company did meet or make an arrangement with, which you termed a company organization, have you any idea as to what the membership of that organization was?

Mr. PERHAM. We had various reports about it, but it is in such a mixed condition that it is something that we can not get along with. They take in laborers and maintainers and different people, who are not eligible to our organization. And they have a few of our men; I believe it was counted 122 on this railroad that would be eligible to our organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then they had nothing like the membership on the system that your organization represented?

Mr. PERHAM. They never have had.

Commissioner AISHTON. Then from whence did the information come that you did not represent and they did? The officials of the company simply have a misconception of the truth of the situation?

Mr. PERHAM. I think they have been deceived.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You say this other organization takes in a different class of membership from yours? What difference, in what way?

Mr. PERHAM. Signal men, maintainers, mechanics, and machinists.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What are maintainers?

Mr. PERHAM. The men that put in plants and maintain them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You were discussing with Mr. Aishton the question of hours, as one of the methods of compensating men, for the hours of labor on the railway system, and particularly the Pennsylvania Railroad, had been reduced by the company, or has that been brought about largely through legislation?

Mr. PERHAM. Largely through legislation, although the eight-hour day prevailed on this part of the system before the hours of service became effective. Might I explain that this work is of such a tense condition it might be compared to a man watching the pendulum of a clock for eight hours and not missing a motion.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As a general proposition, is the reduction in the hours of telegraphers on railway systems been the result of voluntary contribution on the part of employees or by legislation?

Mr. PERHAM. For over 20 years we tried to get a reduction in hours, and we generally failed until the Federal law was passed. In some States the eight-hour laws were enacted, but most of them were dead letters; but since the Federal law was passed that was made effective, and the eight-hour day was secured under the nine-hour provision.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was that a voluntary contribution of the railroad company or have they opposed it?

Mr. PERHAM. There are thousands of suits each year under that law and decisions made by the Interstate Commerce Commission and protected by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. On the part of the company violating the law?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They have not been, as would be taken from the evidence here—they have not given the hours of labor as a voluntary contribution, but it has been forced from them by legislation against their will; they opposed the legislation to reduce the hours of labor?

Mr. PERHAM. They fought the bill bitterly before it was enacted and after it was enacted.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In the case of the effort to reduce the hours in the State of Maryland, there was a rigid opposition on the part of the railroad representatives there, and the evidence you have handed us would indicate that money was used in the opposition to the legislation, Mr. Perham?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; that came out in the public press, and that is the way our notice was first attracted to it; that people who went there ostensibly in favor of the bill toward the last were working against it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As a general proposition, the hours of labor of the telegraphers have not been reduced voluntarily by employers as a means of compensation to the men for their increased service or greater efficiency, but has been a result of the efforts through legislation?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; through legislation and organization.

Commissioner AISHTON. Let me ask a question here, please. I think you stated that there were thousands of suits brought against railways by the Interstate Commerce Commission for violation of the hours-of-service act in the case of telegraphers?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is, station and telegraph employees?

Mr. PERHAM. That would include the trainmen.

Commissioner AISHTON. They have a different law than the telegraphers.

Mr. PERHAM. It is the same act.

Commissioner AISHTON. But a different provision.

Mr. PERHAM. A different provision because they perform their business by trips, and we work by the day.

Commissioner AISHTON. Coming back to this violation by the railroad, you do not know of any suits having been brought against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. on account of any of these violations of the eight-hour day?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not know.

Commissioner AISHTON. And is it not a fact that the large number of cases that are brought against all of the railroads are not for violation of the eight-hour day, but for technical—lack of a proper interpretation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of how the law applies to the country station?

Mr. PERHAM. There have been violations of all kinds, according to my knowledge of the case. I read the reports pretty closely. The points are quite varied.

Commissioner AISHTON. Of course, it is a matter of record in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I think that this commission, Mr. Chairman, should secure the information in regard to the suits brought in violation of the hours-of-service act and incorporate it in the record.

Chairman WALSH. Will the stenographer please make that memorandum?

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You were discussing yesterday, Mr. Perham, with Commissioner Aishton the question of the source of your information and the men that had furnished this information to you. I got the conception that the men you had sent out were a sort of secret-service men, employed something on the plan that you indicated the company employs men to secure information for them; that is the impression it left on me. The men whom you sent out to secure information for you are men employed regularly by your organization as organizers or vice presidents or members of your board, or something of that kind?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are not taken, for instance, from some detective agency or some agency that furnishes men for special service at so much per day?

Mr. PERHAM. No; they are men who go around seeking applications of employees for membership in the organization, and along the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad they hear many stories and complaints from citizens about what the Pennsylvania Railroad does, and they report that to me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are regularly employed by your organization?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; their business is to get members.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As organizers?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they are supposed to report to the executive of their organization, and in your organization that would be to you?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They would not be supposed to report to anybody else, to some one on the Pennsylvania Railroad or the public?

Mr. PERHAM. Not to anyone but to the man who employed them, which, in the case of my organization, would be myself.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are not authorized to attempt any peculiar or secret methods of getting this information?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They simply get it in their everyday travels, and experience and association with people?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There are no underhanded methods?

Mr. PERHAM. No; just in the way I would get it in visiting a certain town and meeting a citizen and he would tell me something the company had done which he did not like.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have been in Altoona?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Altoona is a city with one large shop; practically the whole community exists upon that fact, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. maintains a large locomotive shop in that city, and there are no other large manufacturing institutions?

Mr. PERHAM. It is what is known as a railroad town.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is a large shop there, and many employees, I do not know how many, but I presume the majority of the population of the town of Altoona are train and engine crews, with their families, and shop employees?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And there are no other, so far as you know, large manufactories in that city?

Mr. PERHAM. Not that I am aware of.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. For instance, if a machinist lost his position in Altoona, he would probably have to move to some other town to secure a job, would he not?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that would apply equally to any workman in that class?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; that is, any workman employed by the railroad.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So that if a workman secured for himself the displeasure of the superintendent, or some one in charge, he would have to leave Altoona; that would be the result?

Mr. PERHAM. And the most of them own their own homes there, and that makes them stand in fear of the officials?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I will get to that in a moment. The employees can buy their own homes?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they have done so, and paid some money on them, say a thousand or fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars on a small house?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And if a workman there, for any reason, should incur the displeasure of some one in charge and should lose his position, he would be forced by conditions and the fact of there being only the one workshop in the city, to seek work elsewhere, and as a result, he not only forfeits his position, but he forfeits the possibility of savings, because he has to sell his home, or the portion he has put into it, at a great sacrifice—it is not always marketable, at its face value, to say nothing of a profit; is not there a great possibility that men being employed under conditions such as that, where their very lives depend on that city, if they are to live there at all, and are subservient to the will and wishes of their employers, not only in their employment, but also in their everyday life, their general make-up, their character and behavior, their family relations, their social relations—in fact every make-up of a human beings life—makes it possible that by the slightest mistake and incurring the displeasure of some one, that their whole life's earnings and savings may be wiped out?

Mr. PERHAM. I found that to be a distinguishing feature of the shopmen employed in Altoona.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And is that not one of the underlying causes of unrest—one of the things that goes to produce unrest and hatred toward employers?

Mr. PERHAM. It certainly does; and to the stranger who goes into Altoona that feeling is apparent a few hours after he gets there.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Let us go a little further: Supposing the employee is dismissed for some purpose, reasonable to the employer, and he starts in some little business in Altoona; what is the probability of him maintaining and keeping up a business in Altoona if he has incurred the displeasure of those in charge of the plant?

Mr. PERHAM. He can absolutely be driven out of business.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it not generally understood and fairly well known that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., or those in charge of its affairs in Altoona, have a sort of censorship over the commercial business of Altoona?

Mr. PERHAM. It is so reported.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You mentioned the fact that some of the organizers of the organization were in Altoona and were invited to leave some of the hotels there?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; that is true.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What pressure would be brought to bear on a hotel man, do you suppose, if he were to incur such displeasure?

Mr. PERHAM. Loss of patronage and also the fear of having his license forfeited.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. interest itself in the matter of who secures licenses and who does not?

Mr. PERHAM. It is so reported.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then the impression prevails that in the city of Altoona, because of its peculiar situation, there being but one large place of employment, that it practically dominates not only the employment of the men and the others who are employed there, but they dominate the business life of the community?

Mr. PERHAM. That is my understanding and my impression from my visits to that city.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you any knowledge, or have you heard, that that thing reaches to the church in Altoona?

Mr. PERHAM. I have not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But it is the impression that it does reach, in some sense, to the police court and the higher courts?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; and the newspapers.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that public assemblage and public speech is impossible against the will of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in Altoona?

Mr. PERHAM. That has been the experience of the employees.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They have succeeded in preventing public gatherings?

Mr. PERHAM. They have.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they have succeeded in preventing men from leasing halls for the purpose of holding public meetings in Altoona?

Mr. PERHAM. That is a part of the case; yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, in order to live in Altoona you must live as the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. wishes you to live; that is the last analysis of the situation, is it?

Mr. PERHAM. That seems to be the situation generally in that vicinity.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You could not well live in Altoona and work for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and advocate some other company; you must be a "Pennsylvanialite," as it were, and not only live in Altoona but be first, last, and all the time for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; it is a clear case of "My company, it is of thee I sing."

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Can you explain why it is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. will meet the officials of the locomotive engineers, the firemen and enginemen, and Order of Railway Conductors, and the railway trainmen in conference to make up schedules governing the employment of various men in those four crafts and will not meet the representatives of the other crafts of men who are as large numerically, if not larger?

Mr. PERHAM. I think it is because of the wonderful position strategically that the train and enginemen have; they are able to tie this company up instantly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The enginemen are?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Would not the telegraphers have a very great effect on tying up things if they all left the Pennsylvania Co.'s service?

Mr. PERHAM. Not so effectively as in the case of others. The telegraphers would only retard the telegraph business and the signal department and possibly the station agents' work. It would disorganize the company's business quite considerably, but it has not the position in strategy occupied by the engineers, firemen, conductors, and trainmen.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know anything of what is known as "On and off" system on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PERHAM. I have heard a great deal of complaint about that, where a man would be required to stay around a shop to wait for work that might be offered him. Piecework is the rule in the shops on the Pennsylvania Railroad, I understand, and certain employees are required to be handy in case extra work comes along, or there is a sufficient amount of work offered to put them all on the job, and they stay around there sometimes for the major part of a day, and would make only one-half or an hour's work, or something like that, and that "On and off" system has been a grievance for many years and affecting all the various classes of shop employees.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The organization that was spoken of, the Pierce organization, which, as I understand, really was no organization, but simply a man assuming to name an organization and name himself as the head of it, and men simply going out on strike without apparent understanding, that strike being an independent one, and died out almost as soon as it was started, but prior to that time there was a strike in 1911 on the Pennsylvania system of shopmen which involved a large number of people in and around Pittsburgh, principally, and later on an organizer went to Altoona, as was asked you about yesterday by Commissioner Aishton. Now, there was no strike at Altoona when the organizers went there, or for some time after, but later on some men were called out on a strike. Have you knowledge as to the real cause of that strike of the shopmen?

Mr. PERHAM. The original cause was dissatisfaction with wages and an attempt to organize, and the organizing led to the discharge of all of the men that took part in it, and that brought on more trouble.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it not a fact that at—

Mr. PERHAM (interrupting). Pitcairn?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No, not Pitcairn; that the men had organized and there was an overwhelming discharge of men, sufficiently large in number, so that they would be sure to get the union men? That there were 100 more discharged than had joined the union, in order to be sure that the union men would be caught in the dragnet; that great numbers were discharged for that purpose?

Mr. PERHAM. That is my understanding of the case.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the strike that resulted later was a protest against the discharge of men who had joined the union, and a vigorous protest on the part of the men who had no associations with the union at all, for which they were discriminated against because some had joined the union that they had not joined?

Mr. PERHAM. Had taken no part in the organization of the union, and yet were discharged on suspicion that they were.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Your knowledge therefore is that, so far as you know, there is no recognition on the part of the company or its officials of the shop trades at all, but, on the contrary, there has been a persistent and everlasting discrimination against them for attempting to join the legitimate organizations of labor?

Mr. PERHAM. Constant warfare against that proposition of allowing the men to join the regular organizations of labor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock has some questions he would like to ask you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As I understood the discussion between yourself and Mr. Aishton, Mr. Perham, you, as the president of the telegraphers, have the veto power when it comes to the matter of a strike, but you have no power of initiation?

Mr. PERHAM. That is true. I can not initiate a strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, you on your own act could not initiate a strike?

Mr. PERHAM. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. All you could do would be to veto a strike if, in your judgment, it was unwise and unwarranted?

Mr. PERHAM. That is true.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The power then of declaring a strike is vested in a group of men rather than in one man?

Mr. PERHAM. By the rule of our organization that power is vested in what is called the "general committee." May I explain just how the general committee is constituted? On each division superintendent's territory the telegraphers elect one of their men to present their grievances, and he is called "chairman of the local board of adjustment." He, by virtue of his office, is a member of the general committee; and so each division superintendent's district is represented on this board by that man. There are other variants to that. In this case it would make such a large general committee that they generally select a lesser body. In this case there are five—I believe either five or seven; I am not sure—general superintendent's districts and these men elect an assistant general chairman to form the general committee, which puts it down to a workable body of, say, seven men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many railway telegraphers in the country, Mr. Perham?

Mr. PERHAM. It has been agreed by the railroad officials and this organization that there are about 53,000.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Fifty-three thousand. Of course, your objective as an organizer would be to get those 53,000 men organized as a union, would it not?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That would be the ideal?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes. We have 45,000 now—a little over 45,000—and are reaching out for others naturally.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, if you could get those 53,000 men to act as a unit, and you had grievances, and these grievances were submitted to the railway managers, and the railway managers refused to consider them or refused to make the concessions that you demanded, and you had no other recourse, I presume the last step would be the strike?

Mr. PERHAM. That is the last step.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, if these 53,000 men were in one organization acting collectively and struck they would paralyze the railway industry of the Nation, wouldn't they, while they were striking?

Mr. PERHAM. Well, I would not go as far as that to say that it would paralyze the railway industry. The fact is, that to those who are acquainted with the business, and most of these railway company officials are acquainted with the business, they can manage without the telegraph operator. There was a time when the railroads were run without the telegraph men—that is, by time-card rights trains could proceed.

Commissioner AISHTON. May I ask a question, Mr. Commissioner?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. In your organization, however, that 53,000 contemplates what you call lever men, men who throw switches and interlocking plants?

Mr. PERHAM. No; this applies particularly to telegraphers, telephoners, and station agents. I might say that came up through a discrepancy in the figures furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission where they seemed to have a larger number of men than I could account for; by an old-fashioned system of compilation they put telegraph operators and train dispatchers under one head and station agents under another; and on making inquiry I found some of the operators were classed as station agents and that there was a duplication in the report. That accounts for why we made some inquiry into this to find out just how many men there were employed as telegraphers, telephoners, and station agents—and we came to that conclusion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Evidently there is a slight difference of opinion, Mr. Perham, between yourself and Mr. Aishton, as to the effect that a strike would have on railways, if it should be a collective strike of all the telegraphers. While Mr. O'Connell was questioning you I sent this note to Mr. Aishton—a note for information: "Could or could not all railroad telegraphers acting as a unit paralyze the railway system?" To which he answered, "Yes; could paralyze the station service, stop the receiving of freight and the handling of passengers."

Now, do you agree with Mr. Aishton on that?

Mr. PERHAM. Quite generally, yes; but I would like to say here that the possibilities of such a strike are exceedingly remote, and, in my opinion, never can happen in this country.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, a few moments ago I understood you to say, Mr. Perham, that if the telegraphers were a unit and if they had real or imaginary grievances and they presented these grievances to the railway managers and the railway managers either refused to consider them, or, considering them, declined to comply with the demands of the telegraphers and they had no other recourse they would then strike?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; of course, I had our own rules in mind which probably you will not be familiar with—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). But probably there would be a strike?

Mr. PERHAM. On a railroad or group of railroads owned by the same individuals.

Commissioner AISHTON. How about a group in the same territory?

Mr. PERHAM. We do not go into concerted action. It is not part of our law. But it is permissible to take a group of railroads owned by the same persons and bring it on at the same time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, I think you will agree with me, Mr. Perham, that whatever is possible may happen. We have seen practically a universal railway strike in this country before, and in 1894, during the Pullman strike, the railway system of the country was paralyzed.

Mr. PERHAM. That was one of the lessons we learned. We took it to heart quite seriously.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, 53,000 telegraphers represent, as nearly as I can estimate it here, about one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the people of this Nation—of the hundred million of people. You say that you are opposed to the Canadian system, known as the public-inquiry act, which, as you know, provides that in the event of a dispute there shall be no strike, and there shall be no lockout until the State has had an opportunity of intervening in the hope of bringing about an adjustment. You say you are opposed to that because you are opposed to anything that will compel anybody—a railway worker especially—to continue to work for one minute if he does not choose to work for that one minute?

Mr. PERHAM. I said that; and at the same time had the Constitution of the United States in mind.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, do you think that the rights of one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the people are paramount to those of 100 per cent of the people? Do you think that one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the people should have it within their power, the possibility of paralyzing the trade and industry of the whole Nation?

Mr. PERHAM. Do you think we should have that power?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; I say, do you think you should have that power?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes; if necessary.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You then would consider the interests of a twentieth of 1 per cent greater than the interests of all?

Mr. PERHAM. No; I am willing to trust those 100,000,000 of people, mostly American citizens, who understand what our people are striving for, and that their idea of justice and of freedom will not permit my small class to be condemned to involuntary servitude because 100,000,000 of people wanted it; and I firmly believe they will not permit that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If you have faith, Mr. Perham, in the hundred million of people, if you have faith that the consensus of opinion of the hundred million of people will not stand anything that is unfair, unjust, and inequitable, then what risk do you run in following the Canadian system, and leaving the State to see if it can not adjudicate the differences?

Mr. PERHAM. The risk of getting into the hands and the control of a narrow-minded man, who does not understand the case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you do not run that risk under the Canadian system, Mr. Perham, and I suppose you are as familiar with that as I am, working under it, as I know—that under the Canadian system after an organization has voted to strike, it is not permitted to strike until the State, through a board of inquiry, chosen by both sides, with an umpire chosen by the two, and in the event of the two being unable to agree on an umpire, the State selects an umpire. You know this commission investigates into the causes and makes recommendations to both sides, and that neither side is obliged to accept the recommendations. If the recommendations are not acceptable to one side or to the other, then they can legally strike or legally lockout. Now, the Canadian experience, as I recall it from the last figures published, is that it has saved somewhere around 98 per cent of what otherwise, in all likelihood, would have been strikes; and if this board of inquiry should be unfair and unjust and make recommendations that were not equitable, and the men on the one hand should reject them and go out on a strike, or the employers on the other hand should reject them and create a lockout, you would have your hundred million of people standing behind you for equity; and no strike, if it was unjust, or no lockout, if it was unjust, could succeed in the face of this investigating committee. Now, with those facts in mind, Mr. Perham, isn't it wiser for the twentieth of 1 per cent of the people to be willing to submit their case to the people rather than to take the power in their own hands and seriously injure the welfare of the entire Nation?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not agree with you, Mr. Commissioner. It would not be wiser to give up the right to quit your employment at any time you saw fit for any kind of an advantage that might be offered by the Government or the administration or the people. The 30-day provision in the Lemieux Act is what we object to. It did not originate under American ideas of freedom. It may be good enough for those who desire to worship a king. It is not good enough for an American citizen.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know, do you not, Mr. Perham, that there are to-day under our laws instances where men must continue to work whether they wish to or not; and that if they refuse to, it is a crime? You know that the sailor on board a ship must continue to work when that vessel is out on the ocean? You know that the engineer on a train must continue and take that train into a station before he can quit his work?

Mr. PERHAM. I have in mind the Adair decision in the Supreme Court of the United States where the opinion leading up to the decision is to the contrary—that it being the law that a man could quit when he chose, it should also be the law that the man could be discharged without a reason. That is the law, if the Supreme Court of the United States is declaring the law. I might say that at this same time I am aware that in 19 States of the Union the engineer may not quit his engine after he has left the terminal. I understand that; but that case has never been brought up to the Supreme Court of the United States to decide upon its constitutional features. It has rested on the State statutes, and no one has interfered with it since it was enacted by the legislatures of the 19 different States.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, forgetting law, Mr. Perham, and dealing with good ethics and as a man of equity, do you think if you or I had the power to paralyze the industries and trade of this Nation that we would be justified in doing so for some real or imaginary grievance that we might have?

Mr. PERHAM. I do not worship business, I worship freedom.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well; has not the public also a right to freedom, has not the public a right to travel when they want to travel?

Mr. PERHAM. I think I am now contending for freedom for the public.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, is the right of one individual paramount to the rights of society as a whole?

Mr. PERHAM. You and I will not agree upon a conclusion until we have agreed on the premise. I disagree with you on the premise. That is, that I was in no position to paralyze the business of the United States.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know, and I know, that if this country was in danger that all the people would have the right, regardless of your conceptions or my conceptions of freedom, to take you or me by the back of the neck and put us in the ranks and put a gun in my hands, and I would have to shoot and obey orders. I could take the ground under those circumstances that I was robbed of my freedom and right as an individual citizen, yet I would have to submit to the demands of all of the people, because it was in the interests of all of the people that I should sacrifice at least temporarily my freedom?

Mr. PERHAM. And the companies would like to do that to the telegraph operators now, but there is an encouraging feature in it that the telegraph operator will be heard from before he loses his liberty.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Lennon has some questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you remember that Abraham Lincoln said at one time that he thanked God that in this Nation workmen can strike when conditions become intolerable?

Mr. PERHAM. I have that in mind, and I have often thought of it.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you agree with that idea?

Mr. PERHAM. I absolutely do.

Commissioner LENNON. In the cessation of work that has taken place among the members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, has it been more often caused by the stubbornness and incompetency of the officials and members of the railroad telegraphers than it has been caused by the lack of good judgment on the part of the representatives of the corporations?

Mr. PERHAM. It has always been my experience that such trouble was brought on by unfairness; by men who do not know right from wrong, that happen to be on the employers' side. You will notice that imaginary grievances have been mentioned here. I never had anything to do with an imaginary grievance in all the years I have been in the business, but I have had a good deal to do with grievances that were very real, indeed.

Commissioner LENNON. I would like to have you, because of testimony that was submitted regarding a relief plan for the Pennsylvania Railroad system, I would like to have you state for the record, for the information of the commission, what features of benefits the Order of Railroad Telegraphers have as to insurance or taking care of injured or sick, and what, if anything, do you do for their families?

Mr. PERHAM. The national organization has a mutual benefit department which is by some people called life insurance, but might more truthfully be stated as a methodical method of passing the hat. We have an assessment on the members of 20, 30, and 60 cents per month, and upon the death of a member we pay his beneficiary $300, $500, or $1,000, according to the series in which he paid assessments. This department was started in 1898, and wide open to anyone to join or not that was then in the organization, but under the provisions made after a certain date—in the near future—every member that joined would have to participate in the mutual benefit department. I have not the figures at hand to show what has been done, but considerably over $1,000,000 have been paid out in that short time to the beneficiaries of members, and at the present time it has a surplus of considerably over half a million dollars to pay claims in the future. The matter of sick benefits is handled by the local unions. They make their own rules in regard to that, and it is no unusual thing to have a sick benefit that costs 50 cents a month. That is in the nature of an assessment upon the members, and when a man has been sick three days, or such a matter, upon application he is paid $5 a week for the time that he is away, for a period not exceeding six months.

Commissioner LENNON. Supposing a member of your organization pays for his insurance a number of years and ceases to be an operator and goes into the grocery business or something else; is he immediately cut off from all possibility of any participation in that benefit?

Mr. PERHAM. No; he pays his dues and his assessments regularly, notwithstanding that he has left the business. The last time I had occasion to look up that matter I found 68 bank cashiers who were members of our organization and were carrying the insurance, about 200 county treasurers and county clerks, and about 200 railroad officials still carrying their membership in this mutual benefit department. You will understand from the fact that we charge $7.20 per year per thousand for the so-called insurance, and that the dues are $8, it amounts to about what insurance would cost in an old-line company.

Commissioner LENNON. What, in your judgment, has been the influence of your organization as to morals and character on the telegraphers of this country.

Mr. PERHAM. We have been in business since June 9, 1886. We re-formed our organization after the great strike in August, 1883, and along new lines—along class lines, I would call it—and from that time, with our business methods instituted in the new organization, we have been quite successful in raising the wages and bettering the conditions of the employees and also in improving the morals of the class. At one time it was quite an ordinary matter for a telegraph operator to travel with some other people, you know, in different trades, in what is called a side-door Pullman—that is, a box car—and have a bottle of whisky along, but the whisky business has almost completely been eliminated from the telegraph business. It is no longer characterized as it used to be, and in addition to that the seniority clause in our schedules provided that the oldest men in the service shall be given a show for promotion has kept the men on the road, and there has been not so much of this wanderlust business as there used to be, so that the man has a sort of interest in the company with which he is employed, knowing that if he stays there every year adds to his chances for promotion. I take it that the seniority clause in these contracts has been the most valuable thing in the way of uplift that was ever devised by our craft, and it has resulted in giving our men a standing in the community and in the country and absolutely changed the thing around so they are not wanderers any longer, but respectable citizens, and, as I have stated, so many were elected to office that it shows they have the respect of their neighbors and the people they live among.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Perham, in your contact with unorganized labor, which must be very considerable, do you believe if intimidations of all characters were removed from the organization that the people that are not in your organization who are eligible would become members?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe every man would join the organization of his craft, and that applies not only to telegraphers but to everyone employed on railroads.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Weinstock has another question.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it that you discovered in your dealings with railroad managers that sometimes they make mistakes; that they are not always right?

Mr. PERHAM. Not always, but they average up pretty well with the rest of the people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, if the managers on one hand are liable to err in judgment, are not the workers on the other hand liable to err also in judgment?

Mr. PERHAM. They are, and they do; but the organization takes care of them, and they have experienced men in the organization to advise them and show them where they are in error, and the employer never hears of those kind of cases; they are killed in the organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not speaking of individuals, but of the organization. Take the railway managers as a unit, acting collectively, as I take it they sometimes do; they collectively make their mistakes, do they not; their judgment is not always perfect?

Mr. PERHAM. I can not recall a case in our organization that I would classify that way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Among the railway managers; have they always been right?

Mr. PERHAM. Oh, I thought you spoke of the employees. There can be various reasons why a railroad official might make a decision that is wrong.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not talking of the individual making decisions, but the association collectively.

Mr. PERHAM. I am scarcely able to judge about the general managers of railroads.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me put it in this form: You know that railroad managers collectively deal with railroad employees collectively?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In your judgment, has their decision arrived at by the railway managers collectively been always wise and just and a proper decision?

Mr. PERHAM. I can not recall any one that I would take objections to.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then we are to take it that the railway managers collectively are wise and are just and are equitable?

Mr. PERHAM. As a general thing that may be stated as true.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, if they are wise and just and equitable, how can your workers have any grievance?

Mr. PERHAM. They do on account of the failure of an individual, not as a group. Now, you are speaking of general managers as a group?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir. As I understood it, take in the transportation branch of the business, an individual does not deal with an individual. The four great rules of the railway men for these organizations, and the railway managers have their organizations, and they deal collectively, do they not?

Mr. PERHAM. I have always understood so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir; very well. Now, if it is a fact that the railway managers have always been wise and always been just and equitable in their collective decisions, where is there room for grievances?

Mr. PERHAM. We never had a grievance against them as a group.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You never have?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And where lies the issue?

Mr. PERHAM. With the individual. The one man out of many men who does not know right from wrong.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I don't understand your method of procedure, Mr. Perham. Has your organization differentiated from the other railroad men's organizations? Don't you deal collectively with the managers as well as the other organizations?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; we do not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You deal with each individual manager?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the telegraphers on the North Western Railroad would deal with Mr. Aishton, for example?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; we always have, and got along very well, and that does not mix up the New York Central or any other railroad.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In that way your organization is different from Mr. Garretson's?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Garretson, representing his organization, would deal with a group of managers?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you given any thought to the question of workmen's compensations as applied in the various States of the Union?

Mr. PERHAM. In a rather indefinite way; yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know that the laws provide, where they have compensation laws, that those injured workmen shall receive a certain compensation if he is injured, and that his beneficiaries shall receive a certain compensation in case of his death?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This commission, I am sure, would like to have your opinion as to the wisdom of advocating a Federal compensation act to apply to workmen engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. PERHAM. It is a very complex question, and on that even the labor men have not been able to come to an agreement. We have many divergent views and have not yet had sufficient experience with the business to become crystallized about it. My personal view in the matter is that injury and death to the employee should be charged to the cost of production.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the philosophy of workmen's compensation, that the industry shall bear the burden; the industry, not the individual or the employer, but that it should be put upon the industry; that is the underlying principle of workmen's compensation?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; that is my view of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, in view of that being your philosophy, which is the general philosophy on the subject, do you think it would be a good thing for this commission to recommend to Congress that it shall enact a Federal workmen's compensation act that will deal with workmen engaged in interstate commerce, precisely as the States in the Union—many of them—deal with the workmen engaged within their borders? To illustrate: Here are two telegraphers working in the State of California, one engaged in interstate commerce and one in domestic or State business. Both meet with an accident or death, are killed, and that the California State law provides that the workers engaged in domestic service, his family, would be provided for; but in the absence of a Federal similar law the beneficiaries of the worker engaged in interstate commerce would be thrown upon society; and does it now seem that both should be taken care of and the industry bear the burden of both losses?

Mr. PERHAM. I think so. On that subject I would like to make a little statement. We are feeling our way out with these various State enactments, and eventually we will discover just what we do want. We do not seem to favor the idea that exists in Germany about these things, nor the English proposition, but out of these various State laws we expect to be able to select one that we can indorse. It is difficult to frame a statute and to surmise just how it will work out. It is only by court action that we discover the defects in the statutes. The court decisions, for instance, often point out a salient feature that we should have met in the first place, but did not. Now, after these State enactments have gone through the courts we may look them over and discover something that would do very nicely for a Federal act. That has been our attitude. Now, I could not commit my organization to this question without at the present moment treading upon the toes of some other organizations that hold a different view.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The point I want to get at is this: If this commission in its judgment would see fit, as one of its recommendations to Congress, to advocate the enactment of an interstate workmen's compensation act, would your organization, for example, look upon it with friendly eyes?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe it would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And if it was a just and equitable law you would be prepared to support it?

Mr. PERHAM. You will understand that is because I represent a class of preferred risks in the insurance term. Men that are not working in dangerous employments. That is, as a general thing, now and then a man loses his nerve and loses out, but, as a general proposition, we are a preferred risk and are necessarily segregated from the brakeman on the train or the engineer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That regulates itself, Mr. Perham, by the difference in the rate charged for the insurance—charged by the insurance carrier—by virtue of the different kinds of employment?

Mr. PERHAM. But that feature is the cause of my attitude in regard to this Federal enactment for liability. That is why I speak for my organization, knowing that is the situation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman has a question.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. Perham, in speaking of universal strike, you said such a strike could not happen in this country. What do you mean by that? Do you consider labor conditions not as good in other countries as ours?

Mr. PERHAM. I mean by that that we have had our fingers burned in those attempts and don't intend to have them burned again. The men who are running the labor organizations, who have been in the business a number of years, have had their experience with Nation-wide strikes and sympathetic strikes and are not in favor of those things, and the chances are it will not occur again in the United States.

Commissioner WALSH. Mr. Garretson has some questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You were asked about the working of the Canadian act, Mr. Perham. I think you have been "Lemiuxed" about as often as anybody?

Mr. PERHAM. I think so.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you ever seen any possibilities come from the act in Canada greater than come from the proceedings in an ordinary arbitration board in this country?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; about the same.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The ordinary status?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir; about the same.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you seen this period within which action, in which the law says action can not take place, that the employee can not strike nor the employer can not lock him out—have you ever seen that time utilized by the employer to reinforce himself ready to defend a strike if they did not accept?

Mr. PERHAM. It has caused me to put men at every port of entry in Canada to keep their men out.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In defiance of the law, they were acting?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They were changing the status? And is it not a fact that the employer has repudiated—I am applying this solely to transportation organizations—is it not a fact that the employer has repudiated the verdict oftener than the employee has?

Mr. PERHAM. That is my impression; I couldn't definitely state that is so, but I believe that is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it not a fact also that the provisions of the act are regularly disregarded, both by employer and employee, outside of the railway service?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe that is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And you are speaking from a knowledge based on former Canadian citizenship?

Mr. PERHAM. I never was a citizen of Canada.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You lived in that country?

Mr. PERHAM. I lived there for a while.

Commissioner GARRETSON. A question was asked you a moment ago about a deadly injury being done to a great body by a fraction of 1 per cent of its membership. Is it not a fact that the actual principle upon which the question put to you was based applies to fifteen-twentieths of the people of the Republic instead of a fraction of 1 per cent? In your membership it is a fraction of 1 per cent, but the same idea applies to all laboring men whether union or non-union?

Mr. PERHAM. The same idea would apply. What per cent did you say?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I said three-fourths, fifteen-twentieths instead of one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. PERHAM. I think that is more near the correct proportion of those affected.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is there any good reason—because the question could not by any system of reasoning be narrowed to the operators—is there any good reason why the 5,000,000 of this 100,000,000 population who serve the railways, and that is conservative in number taking their families, should be nailed to the cross for the benefit of the other 95,000,000?

Mr. PERHAM. I never could see any good reason for it; I don't believe the people of the United States would indorse such a view.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Then, the withdrawal of the right to quit on the part of any laboring man would in itself be a form of involuntary service?

Mr. PERHAM. I so understand it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In regard to the Government taking a man up and putting him in the trenches with a gun in his hand, and making him shoot, is it your opinion that that might be something like leading the horse to water?

Mr. PERHAM. It would be in my case.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You would decide yourself which way you were going to shoot?

Mr. PERHAM. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I suppose also you will decide whether you will work the key or not in the case of emergency?

Mr. PERHAM. I intend to have the disposal in my hand whether I use it or not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. We talk about this 50,000 men, and about the power of the operators in a universal strike to paralyze the traffic of the company. Is it not a fact that there is a reserve force of about that many men in the way of promoted officers and retired operators available that would, or at any rate always have been, called in when the Government was confronted with a matter of that character?

Mr. PERHAM. It is true that they have been able to get along in strikes by putting on men to run the business, and in some sort of way run it, but as to the telegraphers who have left the business on account of finding the conditions intolerable, they could not get them back.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The bulk of them, that is true; but if there was one in there like railroads, like railway men, they might be available?

Mr. PERHAM. They might be.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Your definition of a legal organization simply means an organization that is tacitly recognized by the labor world?

Mr. PERHAM. By the two or three million that are organized we recognize the other organizations as part of them. For instance, although the brotherhoods are not members of the American Federation of Labor, we are very close to them in every respect. We have their legislators represented here in Washington, and we work with them throughout the various States of the Union. We are in close contact with the brotherhoods all of the time.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all—just a minute.

Commissioner AIGHTON. What was the date of your last visit to Altoona?

Mr. PERHAM. I would not be able to give you that. The last time I stopped off there might have been about 18 months ago.

Commissioner AISHTON. How long were you there at that time?

Mr. PERHAM. Probably a week.

Commissioner AISHTON. Your opinion that you gave as to conditions at Altoona was from your personal knowledge of the situation?

Mr. PERHAM. Prior to that time I organized a great number of section laborers at Altoona. They were foreigners. At their meeting I would have an Italian on one side and a Hungarian on the other translating my speech to their men; and inside of a couple of weeks we organized about a thousand men, but the organization was scattered by the company putting guards at the bunk houses and preventing the men from coming into the town and tried to prevent me from going on their right of way to organize these men.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all. I thank you.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Atterbury.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. W. ATTERBURY.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. ATTERBURY. W. W. Atterbury.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business, please?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please give your connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad—your official connections?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I started about 30 years ago as an apprentice to the machinists' trade, and I have been in the service of the company continually since that time as assistant road foreman of engines and assistant engineer and master mechanic, superintendent of motive power, and general superintendent of motive power, and general manager and vice president in charge of operation.

Chairman WALSH. That is the position that you are holding at the present time?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I have been advised, Mr. Atterbury, that you prefer to make the statement that you have to make from written memoranda. If so, you may make any statement that you desire to make.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Mr. Walsh, I rather gathered from the newspapers the trend of the discussion and preferred that what we might have to say be presented in rather a formal way. I have it here, and the summary, if you will permit me, I will read.

Chairman WALSH. We will be very glad to have it.

Mr. ATTERBURY (reading): The Pennsylvania Railroad has presented to the United States Commission on Industrial Relations a statement of its policies toward its employees, of which the following is a summary:

The management of the Pennsylvania Railroad believes that the company's greatest asset is the loyalty and efficiency of its men. Its labor policies may be generally described, therefore, as an effort to protect that asset.

The Pennsylvania Railroad early realized the importance of training its own officers. This, of course, carried with it the training of its own men. To make the service attractive it was essential that employment, as far as possible, be permanent. The result is that at present the average term of service on the Pennsylvania Railroad is exceptionally high.

The majority of those who enter the service continue in the service until they die or are pensioned. The consequence has been the establishment of sympathy, affection, and understanding between the officers and the men, which has done much to bring about the success of the company.

The company believes that railroad employees should be paid liberal wages, and it believes there should be every feasible safeguard to provide for the personal safety of both employees and patrons.

The management frankly recognizes the propriety of the men organizing for the purpose of bettering their condition, subject only to such restriction as may protect the elemental essential of safe and continuous operation. It sometimes happens that the management itself would be glad to do more in the direction of additional compensation of the men if economic conditions made it possible.

It should be understood that the Pennsylvania Railroad has always paid moderate dividends, believing that the safety and permanence of a moderate dividend afforded the greatest insurance for the continuing credit of the company. Only by maintaining a credit of the highest character could the company expect to obtain on reasonable terms the capital necessary to provide the public service demanded by the growing needs of the communities along its lines.

The stock of this company has always been well distributed, and the officers have been trustees rather than controlling owners. No one financial interest has ever undertaken to dominate the company's policies.

In dealing with organizations among its employees, the company has felt that the employees themselves were the best judges of the forms of organization into which they desired to go. Therefore there has been no interference in the employee's liberty of choice in this matter.

The company has always recognized the right of any man to labor upon whatever terms he and his employer may agree, whether he belongs to a labor organization or not. Employees have always been given full opportunity to redress their grievances whether associated with labor organizations or not.

The foregoing statement, however, must be qualified in this respect:

1. The company owes a supreme duty to its patrons and employees to take all possible measures to insure safety of operation. Such safety can not be secured without the most careful adherence to orders. The management has, therefore, felt that it should resist firmly all activities of employees' organizations which might tend in the least to undermine discipline.

2. The management is also responsible to the public for maintaining continuity of operation. This has made necessary a policy of opposition to such labor organizations as might interrupt that continuity, because of disputes with which neither this company nor its employees had any direct relation.

The company is opposed, therefore, to employees affiliating themselves with an organization which might call a sympathetic strike. If there is to be any strike on this railroad, the management believes that it should be the result of the choice of its own employees, and because of some difference between this company and its own men, and for no other reason.

The company believes that men should be employed without regard to the labor organizations of which they are members, and that every man should be free to join an organization or to remain entirely independent. The company believes, therefore, that all its operation should constitute an "open shop."

In normal times the Pennsylvania system has 250,000 employees. The company has always paid the highest prevailing rate of wages paid to railroad employees in the territory in which it operates. But more than that: The policy of the Pennsylvania Railroad has been to insure that all its relations with its men should be characterized by fairness and friendliness.

The management of the Pennsylvania Railroad believes that the best test of the sincerity of its interests in the welfare of its men is the fact that so large a percentage of its employees have made the service of this company their life work.

The rules governing the "organization" of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. include everyone in the service, from the board of directors to the laboring man of the track. Now, the fundamental principle of that organization is that responsibility is properly placed, from the board of directors and the president down to the lowest man, and regulations or rules have gradually been adopted and recorded which describe the various duties.

The company's officers now believe that the experience embodied in its present form of organization is the surest guarantee of efficient and economical performance of the company's public service.

Chairman WALSH. We have some questions prepared which really contain questions to be asked of Mr. Long, Mr. Atterbury. I understand that Mr. Long is here also?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir. I think perhaps, Mr. Walsh, that I can answer some of those questions, perhaps being more familiar with them.

Chairman WALSH. Very good; I will run through the questions. What is the general attitude of your company toward national labor unions? I think that is intended to elicit as to whether or not you have any particular objection to the affiliated ones; that is, the American Federation of Labor, and so forth.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Mr. Walsh, I attempted to describe that in my summary. There are three parties interested in the transportation problem—the employee, the stockholder, and the public, and the public has the paramount right. The flag that we have nailed to our mast is that of running our trains. That is the one thing we must do, and in my experience of 30 years we have never missed a train schedule because of any labor trouble whatever. Even going back as far as the A. R. U. strike, in 1894, in which I happened to be mixed up, we did not miss a schedule out of Chicago. Of course they were somewhat late, but we still represented every passenger schedule, and that is what we are in business for. Now, any organization that takes out of the hands of its employers their right of action is inimicable to the interests of the public and was what we considered our paramount duty to the public. I will give two instances of what I mean.

We had a trolley strike in Philadelphia. You would think it was a long, long distance from a trolley strike to a painters' strike in a railroad shop, but such a thing happened. As it turned out a sympathetic strike was called, and some 137 painters in our shop in West Philadelphia left our service in sympathy with the strike of the trolley employees. Now, imagine a situation where the operation of a road depends immediately upon those 137 painters. The other side of the picture is that the labor organizations with which we do business and have done business with for 30 or 40 years take quite a different position. We had an unauthorized strike on the Monongahela division. Although the men who were on that division belonged to the train organization, they left their employment; that is, the members left with comparatively little preliminary notice. The organization immediately disowned them and properly disciplined them, and the organization maintained their obligation to the railroad company. That has been repeatedly shown in the so-called train organizations. The same thing was shown and exemplified in the strike of the subway employees some years ago in New York. The strikers belonged to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and, in defiance of the wishes of the organization's leaders, the men left the service of the company, and they were afterwards dismissed from the brotherhood. There is quite a distinction between a good organization and one in the interests of the traveling public and a bad organization, one against the interests of the traveling public.

Chairman WALSH. What machinery, if any, do you have in your company for dealing with grievances of organized employees?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have—each shop has, in a large way, its own grievance committee; but I think, Mr. Walsh, that the shop conditions are materially different from the road conditions, because the master mechanic in his shop knows his employees, can know them; they are centered in a concentrated area, and he can know his men better than a road man knows his employees, because it is not an uncommon saying on most every railroad that a superintendent never sees his good men; it is only the bad men that come before him for discipline that he knows.

Chairman WALSH. What contractual relations are existing now between employees and the company in your service?

Mr. ATTERBURY. None whatever.

Chairman WALSH. How do you operate with those organizations that you have been dealing with?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We are working under findings of arbitration boards in every case of our train employees. My recollection is they have all expired, although they are continued under 30-day clause.

Chairman WALSH. With how many organizations have you such arrangements?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have four; and, if my memory serves me correctly, there is some arrangement between the operators and the managers.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have what is called a labor board on your railroad?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have.

Chairman WALSH. Please describe its organization; that is, the personnel, its duties, powers, and all about it.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Under the organization the general manager is the final court of appeal on labor matters. Now, of course, you can recognize that with the lapse of time the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. has grown until it has reached such an extent that the general manager finds it impossible to deal personally with every case that may come before him. Therefore, much of the preliminary work is thrashed out by a board consisting of the superintendent of telegraph and two or three of the general superintendents, who deal with those organizations; but every question finally comes to the general manager for settlement if there is any appeal from the decision of the superintendent, the general superintendent, or the board itself.

Chairman WALSH. What is the attitude of your company toward mediation and conciliation where disputes arise between yourself and organizations of employees?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Our attitude has been rather in favor of some form of mediation, because both Mr. Garretson and myself were down before the Newlands committee on the change from the old Erdman Act to the Newlands bill. We advocated at that time the present arrangement, and while not entirely satisfactory, and in the nature of a compromise, it was, I think, the best we could get at the time, and reasonably satisfactory to both interested parties, but it will probably have to be modified as time goes on.

Chairman WALSH. Then, as I take it, as a general proposition, you are in favor of conciliation and mediation?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We are.

Chairman WALSH. State, please, as specifically as you can and still speak generally, what methods you adopt to prevent the organization of the men into those organizations that you conceive to be inimical to the proper conduct of your business.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Any necessary thing to keep the flag flying, to keep the railroad running, and keep the trains running. I was rather interested to hear what Mr. Perham had to say, that he would like to have authority to stop work in a minute. Now, the business of a railroad officer is to know in advance what is going to happen, and we keep ourselves very thoroughly posted as to what is going on. We have a very efficient police organization, and we know in advance everything that is going on, just exactly as the organizations themselves know what is going on with us. We have emissaries in our ranks, just as the organizations have emissaries in their ranks.

Chairman WALSH. How are these men operated; under whose specific charge would these men be that are put into their ranks; through what department of your company?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Let me say that we have two methods of information. We have our own employees who may volunteer information, and we employ the Pinkerton service. We do not know ourselves who the men are in the Pinkerton service.

Chairman WALSH. Who does that, do you, or the general manager?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is done under the superintendent of telegraph.

Chairman WALSH. That just applies to the telegraphers?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Oh, no; the superintendent of telegraph is on the staff of the general manager, and he is the man that handles most of the labor matters for the general manager.

Chairman WALSH. What does the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. pay its section hands?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Our section hands are paid, except under certain conditions, the ruling labor wage.

Chairman WALSH. What is that at the present time?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Perhaps it may be $1.40 or $1.50; I do not know. For some of our service we pay as high as $1.60 or $1.70.

Chairman WALSH. Is it $1.50 or under for the majority of the men?

A VOICE. Mr. Long says it is $1.76.

Chairman WALSH. Maybe I better leave that for Mr. Long.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Whatever it is, it is the ruling wage.

Chairman WALSH. How do you ascertain that—by what is the wage paid by other railroad companies?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No; it is what you can hire laboring men for. Section men are laboring men, pure and simple. They are not like boiler makers or machinists; they have no classified trade.

Chairman WALSH. You are speaking about men you use to gather information. Do you have private detective staffs of your own, or a detective staff—

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have no private detective staff, as you understand the description—

Chairman WALSH. Please describe what it is.

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have our police organization, with captain, lieutenants, and everything of that sort.

Chairman WALSH. Uniformed men?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Some are and some are not. And then we utilize our crossing watchmen and utilize our shop watchmen. Altogether we have a force of some 400 men that are in our regular police department.

Chairman WALSH. Are you in a state of preparedness at all times for any state of warfare? That is, have you arms on hand and cars prepared and clubs made and stored, and all that? You heard what was said here.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know that I have heard, but I am quite prepared to say, Mr. Walsh, that we are prepared for anything that the other fellow is getting ready for.

Chairman WALSH. About how many rifles do you keep on hand, usually?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know that we keep any.

Chairman WALSH. I just want you to analyze a little your statement there.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I haven't the details; but we prepare everything that we can, nor do we leave anything undone, Mr. Walsh, to keep the railroad running that is lawful, legal, and proper.

(The details referred to are mentioned in a letter which is printed among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Atterbury Exhibit.")

Chairman WALSH. And that would consist, in your conception, in having arms on hand and ammunition?

Mr. ATTERBURY. If that was necessary; and anything else that was proper and lawful for us to do; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know as to that detail whether or not you have on hand arms and ammunition at the present?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, I do not know; but I assume Mr. Johnson or whoever may come here—Mr. Harper, perhaps, may follow—will be prepared to give details.

Chairman WALSH. There may have been some statements made as to the alleged policy of your company with reference to the use of the men in formulating public opinion or influencing legislative action, for instance, such as signing petitions against the full-crew law, and such things as that; and the statement has been made that men have been displaced for refusal to do so. Have you any knowledge—

Mr. ATTERBURY (interrupting). I have not any knowledge of that; but I have knowledge of the organizations disciplining their men for attempting to assist us in the repeal of such legislation.

Chairman WALSH. Well, if you will, kindly briefly give us the details of those attempts.

Mr. ATTERBURY. In other words, the organizations which advocate such laws as the full-crew law and the headlight law have a clause in their organization which subjects any man—anyone of their organization appearing before a legislative committee or in any way interfering with the dictum of the head of the organization—to discipline; may be disciplined and may lose all of his insurance and all the things that he has for many years subscribed to.

Chairman WALSH. And so you have no information of any cases wherein the company has undertaken to discipline an employee for refusal to sign?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I have not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Chairman, I have just a question there.

Chairman WALSH. Very well.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Just in regard to that last reply of yours, Mr. Atterbury, to get your record straight. Do those clauses of all those organizations read, "Disobeying the dictum of the head of the organization," or "Disobeying the decision of the legislative committee of the State"?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, whichever it is, Mr. Garretson, the effect is that an employee who testifies for a railroad company is subjected to discipline, and may lose his membership in the organization.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If he goes against his associates, and not against his chief? That is the point I want to make clear.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, the effect upon the railroad company is that if he testifies for the railroad company he is subjected to discipline?

Mr. GARRETSON. Yes.

Mr. ATTERBURY. And that may mean the loss of his insurance or pension, and everything of that sort?

Commissioner GARRETSON. What I was looking at in the question, was only the effect it had on me.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, I was looking at it from the effect it had on the railroad.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You are aware of the fact that the real dictum he interferes with is that of his associates and not of his chief?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, I know that at any rate he can not give an unbiased expression of his own opinion.

Commissioner GARRETTSON. That is not my question.

Chairman WALSH. Upon yesterday, Mr. Perham, referring to one of your publications distributed on the cars, one of your bulletins, in which it was stated that the expenditure of your company last year for police protection, or for the police force, was $800,000; I wish you would describe generally of what that expense consisted.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, of course. I can not give the detail of that expense, Mr. Walsh, but I should say that $400,000 of that was probably the expense of the direct police force.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Now, that may or may not have been the year when we had our unauthorized strike on the Monongahela division, and which continued for a long time. We maintained bunk rooms, and everything of that sort, and I have no doubt at all but what the cost of conducting that strike has been included in that sum, as well as the charges that are against the other cases that might be called police protection, for instance, crossing watchmen that we use for preventing trespassing, and things of that sort, because we consider the trespassing probably the most serious part of our police work, the prevention of trespassing.

Chairman WALSH. The intention being to protect the lives of the passengers, the employees, and the trespassers themselves?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Right.

Chairman WALSH. Now, there has been much discussion before this commission on the question of violence, as you have probably noticed; and I would like to ask you for your opinion upon the proposition that the control of an armed force is strictly or ought to be strictly a State function. What do you believe about that? That is, that the State ought to furnish you protection to your property, protection to your passengers, so far as policing is concerned, and protection to all the interests involving property and life. Is it feasible to do that, and if it is, why should not that be the case?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Theoretically, you are quite right; there is no question about it. Practically, I doubt if under our republican form of government you are ever going to arrive at that very happy condition.

Chairman WALSH. Now, for what reasons?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Because I think there has been so much opposition to it. We have in the State of Pennsylvania to-day, what I believe is the finest body of men in the United States, and that is our mounted constabulary; and yet that—I have forgotten how many members there are on the force—perhaps 250; and yet every labor organization, so far as I know, is bitterly opposed to it. I believe it is the best body of men in this country.

Chairman WALSH. Well, regardless of opposition, how is it for efficacy? Does it do the job?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It does the trick.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, why should not the State go to whatever expense necessary, and regardless of opposition, to furnish proper protection—for instance, to furnish the same protection to the individual that you seem to be compelled to spend a very large proportion of your earnings to secure—

Mr. ATTERBURY. Why, Mr. Walsh, we can not get in any State we run through a proper police protection against trespassing. Do you realize that we kill from three to five hundred men a year on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Chairman WALSH. That is, trespassers?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Trespassers.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, the reason—the practical reason—is that the States through which the railroad runs do not function properly in that direction—in the police direction?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think there are local reasons that make it difficult to do that. And I think—I hope you are not—but I am afraid you are dreaming of a millennium if you expect them to, with the political winds that are constantly blowing our legislators. I wish we could get it.

Chairman WALSH. Well, do you think, have you observed—I will ask you from a practical standpoint—that the officials have been influenced by political and other consideration in giving or withholding police protection to your property or to the lives of your people?

Mr. ATTERBURY. At times, I should say; yes.

Chairman WALSH. When last?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It is liable to work the other way, Mr. Walsh, because the pendulum that swings one way is going to swing the other; and if it militates against us at times, it also helps us at times.

Chairman WALSH. That is, you have the force sometimes, and they have the force sometimes?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Exactly—

Chairman WALSH. The armed force. Now, what do you think of a proposition of the armed force being in the hands of the side that is economically able to have it, just simply to buy the arms and keep them? Wouldn't that make for a condition to break down law?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Perhaps I do not understand that question.

Chairman WALSH. You say the idea is this, that if you leave it to the State sometimes the State authorities or police authorities will use the power in their hands for your side, or in other instances for the side, you might say, of the workers in the industrial dispute. It works both ways; but what is being used is force in either event. Now, if that is true, if it is more dangerous to place that power, that armed power, in the hands of the one side that is economically powerful enough to have it—that is, in this case, your company; you are able to buy or provide for a million dollars' worth of men and ammunition while the other side perhaps is not so situated; do you not think, no matter what the difficulties might be, that the State is the one to do that?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I quite agree with you that the State is the one to do that, if it would do it.

Chairman WALSH. Isn't it dangerous to have it in the hands of either side? Suppose you were not so situated that you could have these arms, or spend this $800,000, would—what would you think of the situation if the American Federation of Labor organized a police force upon which they could spend a very large sum of money and keep arms and ammunition on hand? Would you not be in danger, and would not the unprotected public, the innocent bystander, and the State, be in danger also?

Mr. ATTERBURY. If the State would properly patrol our property and protect us against robbery and all of the other things that we are subjected to, I think that such would be the ideal situation. I think that is the proper place to put it, Mr. Walsh. Theoretically, we ought not to be attending to the police business of the State, and yet we are forced to do so.

Chairman WALSH. Has attention been given to that matter seriously now and specifically by the officers of the company taking it up with the legislative power or legislative authority of the States through which the road runs?

Mr. ATTERBURY. The most evident form and the simplest one of all to handle is that of trespassers. We can get little or no action on the question of trespassers, notwithstanding it is in the hands of the local magistrates.

Chairman WALSH. You have undertaken to do that specifically?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have endeavored to use the laws which existed, and have endeavored to have the laws enforced, and the local conditions almost universally prevent it.

Chairman WALSH. Could you separate the question of protection of the lives and the protection of property on account of the trespassing evil from the balance for which you think you need police protection?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Perhaps I do not understand that question, Mr. Walsh.

Chairman WALSH. You say that you have been absolutely unable to get proper protection from the evil of trespassing. Now, as I take it, it does not call for a very high order of police duty, or a very great amount of ammunition, or anything of that sort to protect you from trespassers, and what I was trying to ascertain was whether or not you could not draw the dividing line between taking care of the trespassers, for instance, yourself, and all the other police duty to be taken care of by the State?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We do not know, Mr. Walsh, when a man comes upon our premises whether he might be what I would call an innocent trespasser or a malignant trespasser. In other words, we do not have any way of knowing whether a man intends to do some other wrong besides trespassing. We do not see how we are going to differentiate between one proper function of the State and another proper function of the State that we unfortunately have to perform for the State.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is only one of the purposes of this $800,000 expenditure. Does that also cover the Pinkerton expenditure?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Where does Pinkerton recruit his operatives; from the ranks of your employees?

Mr. ATTERBURY. As far as I know, he does not; but I do not know anything about it, Mr. Garretson, except in this way, that I take it it must take some time for a Pinkerton man to get in a position where he has knowledge of what is going on.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, I judge, with your system of information, you are perfectly familiar with the fact that at regular intervals the committees on your road present the evidence they have with reference to one of their members, who fold their tents and fly.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And you are familiar with the fact that it is invariably stated that they were Pinkerton men? That, I am saying, comes to you in the way of common rumor?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And you have no knowledge yourself in regard to that system of recruiting?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is the system of recruiting—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). Yes.

Mr. ATTERBURY. No; I have not; and I doubt if any officer of our company does.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Nor you have no knowledge as to whether there is any combination of the form of payment of those men, first, for their services as employees, and, secondly, for their services as operatives?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Oh, yes; I do; because we pay them for their services as operatives and deduct from them the wages they draw as employees.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Or, the wage as an operative is less than their wage as an employee, the deduction is the other way?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know that any such case exists. I should doubt that it did.

Mr. GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you some questions about the relief department, Mr. Atterbury, but they will be more or less of a technical and detailed nature, and I would ask you, please, to allow our investigator to have access to the records of that relief department.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Our Mr. Hunt, superintendent of relief department, is here, Mr. Walsh, and here for the purpose of giving you all the information you may desire.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. That is all I desire.

Mr. ATTERBURY (continuing). And the same is true of all of our officers who are here. We are entirely in sympathy with the work of this commission. We have industrial problems of our own that we would like to have solved for us, if you can help us, and we would like to be of assistance, real assistance, if we can.

Chairman WALSH. Very well, thank you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have a few questions.

Chairman WALSH. We will adjourn at this point until 2 o'clock. Please resume the stand at that time.

(Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m. of this Wednesday, May 5, 1915.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. The house will please be in perfect order. Mr. Atterbury, please resume the stand. I neglected to ask you if there was any supplemental statement you desired to make outside of the written statement?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not think there is anything additional I desire to say, Mr. Walsh, unless there are some questions you want to ask. I want you to feel perfectly free to ask any questions.

Chairman WALSH. I have been.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Because we are much interested in this, as I tried to say before, in the successful conclusion of your labors. We have 250,000 employees, and we want a satisfied set of men, and if you can help us in our problems, we welcome your assistance.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have some questions to ask, Mr. Garretson?

Commissioner GARRETSON. No further questions.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock has some questions, Mr. Atterbury.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have seen this petition to the Commission on Industrial Relations from the Order of Railway Telegraphers, of which Mr. Perham is the president?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I have.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you know he states therein that there are eight specific charges against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.? It seems to me that in fairness to the railroad company, the opportunity ought to be afforded you, if you care to exercise it, to answer specifically the charges named therein.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think we have already answered it somewhat in detail in the memorandum we submitted, Mr. Weinstock. I thought perhaps I could facilitate the work by presenting it as a whole.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This document is rather voluminous.

Mr. ATTERBURY. It is.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it would take up a great deal of our time to go through it analytically; and for the matter of the record it seems to me that if you can briefly answer them, as I take them up seriatim, it would cover the ground more satisfactorily. You notice the charge first made is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. denies the right of organization to all of its employees, except those engaged directly in transportation.

Mr. ATTERBURY. That of course is denied.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your contention is that the employees are given the right to do that?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Under certain restrictive conditions that we believe essential to the continuous and safe operation of our property.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you state just what those specific charges are?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is that the men shall be under their own control; shall not submit themselves to any association or affiliation which will bring about a cessation of their operation on a question in which they are not directly interested.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your thought, I take it, in doing that is to prevent a sympathetic strike and tying up of your road?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Quite right; I might also say that if the attention of this commission has not been brought to it that such is the position of the United States Government with relation to its railway-mail clerks—and I have before me a letter, if you will just allow me to read an abstract from it, dated March 13, 1911, by the Second Assistant Postmaster General:

"All clerks, when they enter the service, take oath to well and faithfully discharge the duties of their office," etc.

"It is incompatible, with their obligation to the department, that they should assume another oath of a secret organization, while in the service, which may at any time interfere with their obligation which they have assumed upon entering the service."

Then later, I think Congress passed a law to much the same effect, and the wording of that law is:

"Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike or personally to assist in any strike."

In other words, the position of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., in connection with its employees and as a public carrier, with a public duty to perform, for the past 25 or 30 years has been exactly the position the Government itself has assumed in the last three or four years.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are your engineers, firemen, conductors, and brakemen affiliated with national organizations?

Mr. ATTERBURY. On some of the roads in the country they are working under what I believe, as I remember, is called the Cedar Rapids agreement. I think I am right, Mr. Garretson?

Commissioner GARRETSON. The Cedar Rapids plan of federation.

Mr. ATTERBURY. But even then, before any action can be taken, the vote of the men themselves must be obtained; and on our railroad, for instance, where they are not affiliated, if the conductors went on a strike the engineers are under obligation to continue manning their engines, and can not be drawn into the controversy at all unless we foolishly ask them to perform the duties of the workmen who are out on the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But if the conductors on some other road would go on a strike could they call out your men?

Mr. ATTERBURY. They could not. That is, Mr. Garretson—I am speaking for Mr. Garretson, as I understand it—could not call out the conductors on the Pennsylvania Railroad without the conductors themselves having a voice.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see; so that to that degree you are protected against a sympathetic strike?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We are.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Even with those engaged in the railroad business?

Mr. ATTERBURY. In the railroad train service there is no such thing as a sympathetic strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The second charge is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. makes a practice of discharging men for the reason that they have joined a labor organization; also that it coerces and intimidates men who are suspected of having joined a labor organization, and habitually discriminates against men who endeavor to exercise their right to organize?

Mr. ATTERBURY. In a measure that is correct, in this way: If we have knowledge—and, as I explained before, it is our business to have knowledge of just those things—that an organization is already in existence which emphasizes the practice of things that we object to, or attempts to organize on our lines, we take steps to prevent it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, outside of men engaged in transportation, Mr. Atterbury, about what proportion, as far as you can estimate, of your employees are organized in any form?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Of course, I have no means of knowing how many organizations, such as the Elks and like organizations.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am speaking of labor organizations.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Out of 135,000 men that we normally have on the lines east there may be 30,000 in the train service, and of the men in the train service perhaps 25,000 are organized, and the rest of them are what we call nonunion men. Now, of the 108,000 or 110,000 not in the train service I doubt if any of them are organized, except as they may have come into our service, having been members of an organization which it was necessary for them to belong to in order for them to secure employment at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is a question put to an applicant for a position whether or not he is a member of a union?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It is not; and we do not bother him unless we have reason to believe he is going to bother us.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, he can take the initiative?

Mr. ATTERBURY. He does. We are acting on the defensive at all times and at no time on the offensive.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The third point is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. maintains at an immense expense a force of undesirable characters to intimidate and spy upon its men for the purpose of effectuating its policy of preventing organization among its employees; also, that it uses force and violence and has made false arrests to intimidate employees and to coerce them and keep them from joining their organization or continuing their membership therein. Also, that when the employees have attempted to hold meetings for the purpose of discussing the matter of organizing, the company has in some instances leased all the available halls and meeting places to prevent such meetings being held; in other instances injunctions have been obtained by devious methods to prevent such meetings.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Of course, that is a pretty general proposition, and it is difficult to answer it except in detail. As a general proposition I would say that is incorrect. I have explained the functions of our police force, and to some extent—perhaps not to the extent Mr. Walsh would like—but we have representatives here that can go into it more in detail. In regard to the situation at Altoona, I hope you will listen to Mr. Creighton, who is in charge of our property in Altoona, as I think he can enlighten you as to the trouble there in 1912.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Going back a minute, I judge from what you said, so far as the 100,000 employees are concerned, you practice what is known as individual bargaining, rather than collective bargaining? You make a bargain with an individual employee?

Mr. ATTERBURY. As a matter of fact, the larger part of our work in the shop is piecework. It has been until the last two years, when we have begun bargaining with our train employees collectively, in common with all of the other roads in the eastern territory; our practice in the past to adjust the wages of the shop employees and the wages of all our service, practically on the same plane, by a 10 per cent increase or a 6 per cent increase, depending on the general conditions of the country, and in that way all of the employees have profited with the company in its prosperity.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The next point is, that in the unorganized branches of its service its rate of wages is below that required by a decent standard of living and is contrary to public policy.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I take it that is a matter of public records, and any statement on my part would be superfluous; that is, the I. O. C. has prepared reports, and my recollection is that our average wages are above others, not only of our competing friends, but also of the general territory which we serve; that the wages on the Pennsylvania are higher and not lower. However, that is a matter of record and need not be a matter of assumption or guess.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. brings into existence and fosters sham labor organizations for its employees, which are labor organizations only in name and are merely formal organizations and the subservient tools of the management and designed to obstruct the progress of legitimate labor organizations.

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is incorrect; inasmuch as the Pennsylvania Railroad has never fostered any labor organization. If our employees desire to establish a labor organization we would welcome it, if it is along reasonable lines.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Sixth, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. refused to mediate or arbitrate its recent difficulties with its telegraphers and deliberately arranged its affairs to meet a strike by placing inexperienced men in readiness to take charge of its signal towers without regard to public safety.

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is rather a long history, and yet I think it is of interest. If you will permit me, I would like to read a statement that I made to the United States Board of Mediation, in which I refused to submit the question to mediation. When I came to Pittsburgh as general manager in 1903 I found a conservative committee of some 20 members representing the telegraph employees of the lines east of Pittsburgh. The chairman was Mr. L. K. Marr, who had been for seven years prior to that time chairman of the committee, with many of the original members still on the committee. For three years the relations between the committee and myself were satisfactory. At no time, either prior to 1903 or subsequent to 1903 until 1906, did any question of organization enter into our intercourse. The committee represented the employees and appeared before me as representing all the employees of the telegraph department. I knew that the organization existed and that the committee were members of the organization, but by no act or word at any time did I object to the organization.

In 1905 we commenced to rapidly extend the block signal system, requiring a large number of additional operators. It was then brought to my attention that the practice differed on several divisions as to the question of students. Some divisions I found with ample men to draw from to expand the block system. Other divisions I found unquestionably short. I at once gave instructions that the division not having students were to see that an adequate supply was at once employed. I might say that the company is as anxious to educate its own telegraph operators as it is its own engineers, conductors, and all of its officers, and following this thought, in addition to the number of student operators, it has organized schools of telegraphy at two points on its line. At one of the meetings of the committee I myself introduced for the first time the question of organization, it having come to my attention, what had heretofore escaped me, that there was a clause in the ritual of the Order of Railway Telegraphers to the effect that no operator could take a student without first obtaining the permission of the head of the organization. This was the reason for my introducing the subject of organization to the committee.

I explained to the committee the necessity for an increased number of students and advised them fully to the effect that any operators refusing to accept a student would be guilty of insubordination and would be dealt with accordingly. I requested the committee to at once take up with the employees whom it represented this matter of teaching students and explained to them my position. My full understanding was that no man would refuse to accept a student; that if there were any objections to his taking a student the matter would be brought to the attention of the committee, and the committee would bring it to my attention, as all other matters were, in a regular, orderly, and dignified way. This the committee agreed to do. Shortly following this three operators refused to accept students and were discharged. They appealed their cases to the committee and the committee, realizing that the men in question had taken a stand at variance with my instructions and the instructions of the committee, refused to handle their cases of appeal. They then took up the matter, I understand, with the head of the organization. What happened between the committee and the head of the organization I am not familiar with other than in September, 1906, at which time the committee was in session, and following an increase granted to the committee for the benefit of the telegraphers amounting to about $80,000 a year, my understanding is that the head of the organization appeared and endeavored to explain to the committee how it should best conduct its various matters with the railroad. The committee felt that as employees it had acted in a proper manner toward the employees that it represented, and seriously objected to the criticism of the head of the organization. The objections were so strong that by a vote of 24 out of 25 of the committee he was requested to withdraw from the conference. Following this, as head of the organization, he disciplined the committee by suspension and subsequent expulsion from the organization.

A number of the employees, members of the organization, feeling that the committee had been most unfairly treated, also withdrew from the organization, and these men, I understand, have formed an organization of their own. At the present time, and to the best of my knowledge, the original organization has a membership not to exceed 1,000. The new organization has a membership of between 600 and 700. As the total number of employees in the telegraph department of the lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie is over 3,900, it will be seen that there are at least 2,300 employees in the telegraph department not members of any organization.

Following the action previously described, the head of the organization wrote me requesting the reinstatement of the men who were dismissed for insubordination. I quote from my reply of December 22, 1906:

"I might state that these men were dismissed for insubordination in refusing to comply with the instructions of their immediately superior officer, this refusal being accentuated by an attitude which totally ignored the interests of the company. The attitude taken by these men and the disposition shown by them without first making known to their immediately superior officer any complaint which they had to make, and without appealing to their superintendent, were in themselves factors of sufficient moment to warrant their dismissal as their action was incompatible with the maintenance of discipline."

To this I received a reply under date of December 28, 1906, a quotation from which is as follows:

"If it is to be the future policy of the company that telegraph operators now in its employ will be required as a condition for remaining in the service to teach their trade to others, there are certain indications of a definite character that a large number of your experienced telegraphers will seek service elsewhere while conditions are favorable, rather than wait for the students to force them out."

Last fall a committee claiming to represent the employees in the telegraph department, whom I later learned were members of the original organization, desired to conduct business with me as representing the telegraphers of the lines east of Pittsburgh. During 1906 and 1907, notwithstanding the totally unjust treatment that the original committeemen had received at the hands of the organization, they continued to do business with me in their usual orderly way, the numerous concessions and increases in wages in detail and by classes were granted. I could see no good reason why I should refuse to receive a committee that I had been doing business with for some seven years, and my predecessor for seven years prior to that time had also been doing business with, and to conduct my business with a committee whom I believed did not represent the best element among our employees, nor will I now receive them as representing the employees in the telegraph department.

I would like to call your attention to the clause of the Erdman Act, under which you have requested me to come to Washington to interview yourself and Commissioner Neill. This clause reads as follows:

"That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between a carrier subject to this act and the employees of such carrier, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor shall, upon the request of either party to the controversy, with practicable expedition, put themselves in communication with the parties to such controversy, and shall use their best efforts, by meditation and conciliation, to amicably settle the same."

I would like to state positively and distinctly that there is no controversy between the employees in the telegraph department of the Pennsylvania Railroad which threatens to interrupt, nor can interrupt, the business of the carrier. The Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburgh and Erie has in its service not less than 2,300 men who are not interested in any controversy. Seven hundred men who are opposed to such employees, as I understand, are represented before the mediation board. In addition, all telegraph towers, offices, etc., are equipped with telephones, with men ready and willing to man them prepared to meet any emergency that may arise if, following the threat covered in the quotation from the letter of December 28, 1906, referred to, a number of its employees should see fit to leave the service. I would, of course, regret to see this number of men leave the service, as many of them are employees who have served the railroad company a number of years. The regret would be for the men themselves. So far as the company is concerned, such withdrawal, if necessary, would be welcomed as eliminating from its service a discordant element oath bound to action inimical to the best interest of the employees and the company and its patrons.

I have made this full statement that you may thoroughly understand the situation, and appreciate why I now say that the clause of the Erdman Act referred to has no application, and can have no application, in the existing situations.

Now, that explains in detail our attitude toward the Order of Railway Telegraphers, and that situation largely exists to-day.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The next point was that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. compels its employees to contribute to and largely support the so-called voluntary relief association, so organized and operated as to intimidate and defraud employees.

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have a voluntary relief association. I have before me our March 31, 1915, statement. Of 134,157 employees there are 124,121 that belong, or over 10,000 employees in the service do not belong to the voluntary relief department.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is not compulsory, then?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It was not compulsory originally, but it might be said to be compulsory to-day; and yet it really is not, Mr. Weinstock. I think you will appreciate the necessity which exists to-day of careful and physical examination of the employees as they enter the service. Particularly is that true in the train service, where existence of Bright's disease or epilepsy or similar diseases which are liable to carry a man off in a moment would jeopardize not only his own life, but that of employees and of the public. So we make it a practice to require physical examination of employees before they enter the service. Now, our experience in the past has been that owing, perhaps, as a natural feeling, one I think we have all gone through, if we are considering taking life insurance out at all, we put it off because we object to a physical examination. Having taken the physical examination the worst hurdle is over, and the men then go into the relief department because they recognize, as well as we do, the value of the relief department.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is the monthly contribution of your employees to that fund?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Mr. Hunt can give you the details; but there are five classes, and my recollection is it is 50 cents for one class and then 50 cents or something additional death benefit. I think my contribution perhaps to the fund is $5. I think I have $2,500 death benefit.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Does that cover sickness as well as accident?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That covers sickness as well as accident.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Does the company itself make any contribution to the fund at all?

Mr. ATTERBURY. The company itself contributes the cost of operation and, in the earlier days, guaranteed certain funds, you see. The relief department grew in strength and the last few years the company has not contributed to the integrity of those funds.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, who manages the fund?

Mr. ATTERBURY. An advisory board, which consists of eight of the officers and eight of the employees. This is a joint arrangement between the various companies and the employees. It is not an incorporated fund at all. That is one of the reasons why we do not care to continue the insurance of the men that leave the service. We doubt our legal position in the matter. The advisory board consists of eight officers of the company and eight employees, and the general manager is chairman ex officio of the advisory committee. The eight employees are elected by the employees themselves, and as the moneys are accumulated they are invested on the recommendation of the advisory committee.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, out of this fund, I suppose are paid all sick benefits and all funeral expenses and all compensation in the event of injury?

Mr. ATTERBURY. There are no funeral expenses paid out of the fund. There are certain provisions made for such a contingency in the event of the employee dying without money available for the purpose; but if any of our employees are killed, the company generally pays the funeral expenses itself.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see.

Mr. ATTERBURY. That has nothing to do with the relief fund.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see; but in the absence—well, what might be called accident compensation, that comes out of that fund?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It does.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, in the absence of any such fund, what claim, if any, would the injured worker have upon the company in law?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That would depend on whether he is working in New York State, New Jersey, or Pennsylvania, or whether he is working in interstate travel. The whole thing is very badly mixed up, so far as compensation for accident is concerned, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Take Pennsylvania, for instance; in the absence of any such fund, if the worker is injured while engaged in work, what redress, if any, would he have under the law?

Mr. ATTERBURY. The common law remedy.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He can bring suit for damages?

Mr. ATTERBURY. At present he can bring suit for damages. The present session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, I have no doubt, and will be glad to see, will put in effect a proper compensation act. I only wish it were Federal.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you in favor of a Federal compensation act?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I am, most certainly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The eighth statement here is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. have in collusion with certain local officials brought into some communities not only an array of unnecessary police, but also illegal and unwarranted forces of men selected and employed by it for the purpose of endeavoring to provoke a counter display of force and create disorder in peaceful communities. Also that it habitually keeps in its employ thousands of spies, detectives, and armed men for the purpose of spying out the actions of men with respect to organization and for browbeating and bulldozing purposes generally.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, I think I have already outlined the scope and extent of our police organization; and as I say, I think our officers would be very derelict in their duty if they did not anticipate what was going to happen. That is what we are there for.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Both sides, Mr. Perham on one side and yourself on the other side, have frankly stated you have spies in each other's ranks?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, it would be of interest to this commission to know, if possible to know, which is the cause and which the effect. That is, are you obliged to hire spies because the other side initiated it, and therefore you found yourself in a position to do this thing as a matter of self protection, or did you initiate it, and were they obliged to meet the situation by hiring their spies, as protection to them? In other words, which was the cause and which the effect?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Mr. Weinstock, the oldest problem in the world is that of the egg and the owl—whether the owl came first or whether the egg came first. I think your question is very much like that, probably. I think it is one of those conditions that has gradually evolved.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was there a system of that kind in operation when you first went into the railroad service?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Always has been so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Always has been so?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir; always has been so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Antedates your experience?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On both sides?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes; and a perfectly natural human thing to do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What would be the effect if both sides dismissed their spies?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Why they would each start in organizing again.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You don't think an understanding could be arrived at whereby there would be an armistice or a disarmament as it were—a mutual disarmament?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think before such an understanding was in operation a month one side would be accused of playing unfair and would accuse the other side of playing unfair.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, you regard as mutual the employment of spies as a permanent condition?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Until some more proper way of handling the so-called labor question is evolved by just such a commission as is sitting to-day on the subject.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, this commission, of course, is made up of men who have been taken from different walks of life, and while I have all due respect for my fellow commissioners, I do not know of anyone of them who is in a position to evolve the best possible plan from their inner consciousness; I know I can not, and I possibly have had as much experience as my associates have, and we are largely dependent on the suggestions and hints we get from practical men, such as yourself, who have come up against the real thing and who can help to guide and direct us, and we welcome and invite suggestions from those whose suggestions are worth listening to, and we should be very glad, indeed, if, while you are here, you can give us the benefit of your long and broad experience.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I can not help but think, Mr. Weinstock, that you must recognize from your own experience that the last 8 or 10 years has developed a code of morals totally different from that of 20 or 25 years ago. Now, that covers not only business relations but it covers your personal relation in life; it covers your relations with your employees. I think the old—and I do not use it politically—but the old reactionary is a thing of the past. I think our fathers did things and our predecessors in our business did things that would not for one moment be considered proper and right to-day. I think the whole thing has changed; I think conditions are very materially improved; and I think our employees are 100 per cent better to-day than they were 15 or 20 years ago.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean more efficient?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think there is less drunkenness; I think there is less immorality; they are very much better citizens than they were; I know that ours are, as they have come up from the ranks. I want you to realize that on the Pennsylvania Railroad all of us have come up from the service. There is no distinction between officers and men, because the man of to-day is the officer of to-morrow, and we are all one big family. We do have our rows among ourselves, naturally, but we try to avoid interference from outside sources; that is all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So, summing up, Mr. Atterbury, wherein lies the hope of the spreading of this spirit?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think the general regeneration of the people that is going on is going to bring about an improved condition affecting labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you look forward to a higher or a lower degree of industrial peace in the immediate future, say for the next 5 or 10 years, as compared with the past?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I should be very much surprised if I saw a great railroad strike to-day. I think Mr. Garretson and some of the rest of us are largely responsible for that position as of to-day. I do not think you will ever see a great railroad strike again.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A repetition of the experiences of 1894 in connection with the Pullman troubles, you think, if not impossible, is highly improbable?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I will not say it is impossible or improbable, because, in the first place, that was not a real organization, although its effects were very real; it was not what I would call a real strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, do you think in railroad circles, and I suppose naturally you talk from a railroad point of view primarily, do you think in the railroad world in this country that the employer and the worker are in closer touch with each other to-day than ever before?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think they understand each other better than ever before?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think, as a matter of principle, yes. I think, unfortunately, however, in all classes of employment, the old days when the shoemaker had two or three men working around him is past, or where the division superintendent knew every man on his division, and when there was a baby born on the division he knew all about it, and probably the baby was named after the superintendent, I think probably that day has passed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you believe, Mr. Atterbury, that this mediation and conciliation board that has been created to deal with railroad labor troubles could be successfully broadened to take in all industries of important character?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think it could.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you favor it?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I have already favored it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, the creation of a permanent board of mediation and conciliation to deal with large problems of that nature?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I made that statement before the Senate, Newlands's committee, some two years ago. As far as the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. is concerned, we would be glad to see the Newlands bill so drawn as to cover all classes of employees.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Please give us the benefit of your opinion on the Canadian public inquiry act; is it good or bad, as you see it?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, perhaps you are going to ask the next question, and I am going to answer the next question first; that is, I am opposed to compulsory arbitration.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know that is not compulsory arbitration?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I know it is not, but I expected you to ask it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I would not ask about compulsory arbitration, because I am at one with you on that. That is compulsory, but compulsory only so far as the inquiry is concerned. The Canadian law does not compel either side to accept the decision.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I understand that. The Canadian law has this advantage, that it gives the Government an opportunity to go in and investigate the situation by an impartial commission and advise the public of what they find; that is, assuming that the two parties themselves can not agree on a published statement. That gives the public, then, some 30 days to get a fair knowledge of the situation, and I think that has many advantages. We might well try it and experiment with it. I think the present Newlands Act, and perhaps Mr. Garretson will agree with me, perhaps not—but the present Newlands Act was a great step in the right direction. It can be amplified. The present plan puts too many arbitrators on the board that are not impartial. I have been on two arbitrations, one under the Erdman Act and one under the Newlands Act. In one case there was one intermediate arbitrator with two end men, and in another case there were two intermediate arbitrators with four end men. My own opinion is that had there been a larger proportion of impartial arbitrators on the boards than one-third, which was, in effect, the result of the Newlands Act and the Erdman Act—only one-third are impartial and the others are not impartial arbitrators, and under the circumstances they can not be impartial arbitrators; they are partial. My feeling has always been that the Newlands Act was defective in that respect, and that it should have a very much larger proportion of absolutely neutral and impartial arbitrators. However, the Newlands Act was the best we could compromise on, and while both sides had some objections to it it was a compromise step in the right direction.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Under the Newlands Act, if I understand it correctly, there are two representatives of the employers, two representatives of the employees, and two neutrals.

Mr. ATTERBURY. It can be three, six, or nine.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Three, six, or nine?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes; that is my recollection of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If there are six, there is liable to be a hung jury, is there not?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It might be; but you always have your two neutrals, and they are generally for one side or the other.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But even then you might have a hung jury.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes; but my experience with Hon. Seth Low and with President Finley, the head of the New York University, was that there was never a case of any split; they always worked together. I think of all the votes that were taken there was but one case where there was any difference, and later on that vote was changed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The final charge made by Mr. Perham is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. appears to exercise so complete a domination over all affairs, industrial and governmental, over a large area of this country that it is sufficient to overthrow legal and constitutional rights of persons not favorable to its domination; that within the area of the domination of this company liberty exists not under law, but only to the limited extent of the company's authorization. Its men have no rights as men, but merely such rights as it permits.

Mr. ATTERBURY. My answer to that, Mr. Weinstock, is that the railroads, and the Pennsylvania Railroad particularly, if that statement were correct, would not be fighting tooth and nail in New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania to repeal the full-crew bill if they politically controlled those States. If you could see the antagonistic legislation that is constantly being passed by the legislators of those States you would appreciate what a farce such a statement was.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask, in passing, are there railroad commissions in these various States, State commissions?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir; there is a railroad commission in each one of those States.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have they broad powers?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Very broad powers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are they elected by the people or appointed by the governors?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think in each of those cases they are appointed by the governors.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Here is a question that was submitted to the commission to ask you, Mr. Atterbury:

"Mr. Atterbury states that the chief interests of the company is to run their trains; is not really the chief interest of the company to make money just as the chief interest of the workers is to make wages, and is not the running of the trains, which is the public's interest, merely incidental to these two?"

Mr. ATTERBURY. We can not make money if we do not run our trains.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon would like to ask some questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Atterbury, is it a condition of employment when telegraphers are taken on that they shall teach others their crafts, for instance, or some one else?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Mr. Lennon, so far as I know, there is no such written obligation on the part of any employee, no matter in what branch of the service, but we all know that it is our obligation to keep some one coming on to take our places in case anything happens to us. That applies to every craft; it applies to every officer, and it is a very bad officer who does not have a lieutenant that can run his job quite as well, if not better, than he can himself.

Commissioner LENNON. I intended to ask another question in connection with that. Is it generally understood that when an employee comes into the service of the company that this policy prevails; that is, a general understanding sufficient to be a notice to a man that he is expected to teach an apprentice telegraphy as required?

Mr. ATTERBURY. In our crafts—that is, in our boiler shops, blacksmith shops, machine shops, and everything of that sort—the large proportion of the apprentices are our own employees, and it is only in the case of an emergency—that is, where we have to expand very, very rapidly—that we hire members of those crafts. That is, we try to educate our men just as we educate our own engineers and our own conductors and our own operators; we educate our own machinists and boiler makers. It is a very common practice on many of the roads, and it is covered in their agreements, to employ a certain number of conductors and engineers, but we have never done that at all. We promote the subordinate men and train them up and educate them and promote them.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to know whether I understand your position as to the danger of sympathy strikes. You say the telegraphers were all on strike on the New York Central lines from Buffalo to New York; do you understand that the general organizations would have power to order the telegraphers raphers of the Pennsylvania Railroad on strike without a vote of the Pennsylvania telegraphers?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No; I do not understand so, and if I conveyed any such statement you misunderstood me. My objection to the Order of Railway Telegraphers is that the employees are responsible to the heads of their organization and not to the proper officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

Commissioner LENNON. In regard to the continuance of employment?

Mr. ATTERBURY. In regard to the students.

Commissioner LENNON. Leaving the student matter out of the question; I think you have answered that; take the matter of the sympathetic strike; you say you object to these organizations because of the danger of sympathetic strikes, Mr. Atterbury.

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is right; certain organizations.

Commissioner LENNON. That is; it would interfere with the operation of the road?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you understand that the telegraphers of the Pennsylvania Railroad, under any circumstances, could be called out on strike by the telegraphers' organization without their own consent and without their own vote?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I know the painters in the shops went out without any vote of themselves and by the orders of a man not in our service.

Commissioner LENNON. Did they go out by order of their own organization; do you know that?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know; I know they left our service because there was a strike in the city of Philadelphia.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you any idea as to whether the American Federation of Labor has any power to order sympathetic strikes, or any other kind of strikes, for instance?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No.

Commissioner LENNON. You think they have not?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No; I say I do not know. I thought you asked me if I knew, and I said no.

Commissioner LENNON. You say you do not know whether they do or not?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No.

Commissioner LENNON. What, in your opinion, has been the result as to the human uplift of the existence of labor organizations?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think it has been very beneficial.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner O'Connell wishes to ask some questions.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Atterbury, have you some one coming on the stand who is solely familiar with this matter of the employment of secret-service men?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We have. We have our superintendent of telegraph, and also our superintendent of police. I think Mr. Walsh has subpoenaed both of them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you some one who is thoroughly familiar with the situation at Altoona?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes; our general superintendent, Mr. Creighton.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want a little information in connection with this matter of the alleged secret-service men on both sides. You say that the Pinkerton Agency furnished the men to secure information in connection with the affairs on the system and that you believe the organizations have their own men who furnish them information in connection with the affairs of the company. In what way might the organization have men in your service that could furnish information as to the officers of your company?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Why, every man in the organization is furnishing information to the heads of the organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How would they be able to secure the information, for instance, in your own office, as having charge as vice president of the company?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, they get it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Would they be able to put a man in your office?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know whether they would or not, but they get in. I mean there is no secret about it. I know they know, and they know I know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The men in the employ of the mechanical end of the service, in the shop department, and so on; such information as they might secure would be the information of men in everyday employment; you say, for instance, they would have a man in the master mechanic's office who would be unfaithful to the company, as it might be?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Quite possible.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You believe that to be true?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And for that reason you employ through an outside concern, not part of your own company—the Pinkerton Detective Agency, their service, and in return for which they put men into the various labor organizations for the purpose of securing the things going on inside of that organization?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir; I take it rather that they are men already in the labor organizations, who may have union cards and have been employed somewhere else. They are necessarily traveling around a great deal. We ask the Pinkerton company to assign a certain number of operatives to our service; we do not know who they are; they come along in the natural course of events and we then get reports. We never act on those reports in any way, except as it may give us a lead to follow. We never act on a private report in any way to the detriment of any man, unless we have the information confirmed from some other source.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In connection with the matter of mediation and conciliation in connection with the Erdman Act, now the Newlands Act, I understand you to say that you are in sympathy with the extension of that act to apply to all shop employees?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I so stated, and I think I am on record. My recollection is, Mr. O'Connell, that one of the chief objectors to the Newlands Act was Secretary Wilson. I think I am right, Mr. Garretson, and at that time I made the statement that if the Secretary wanted to and could prevail upon the committee to include the other branches of the service under the Newlands Act, I was perfectly satisfied.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There was a misunderstanding at the time as to just what the organization wanted themselves in connection with the matter. I was somewhat interested. You have been on two arbitrations, you stated. I suppose in connection with railroad affairs under the act, and you have some idea, therefore, what one of these general arbitrations cost. For instance, what would you estimate the cost of the arbitration that took place on the Eastern, the case between the firemen, and so forth?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I would rather not guess at that, but I would like to submit a statement of the actual cost to the railroads; we can do that, and I have no doubt that Mr. Garretson can submit it as for the employees. I know it is a matter of record with us. We had a separate organization to run it; and if the commission desires to have that, we will be glad to submit that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to get an idea at this time, if you could give it to me, in order to bring up another matter.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Frankly, I have no idea.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Your idea is it would cost $200,000 or $300,000?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Mr. Miller, can you give me any facts on that; do you remember what it cost us for the conductors and trainmen, what it cost all of the 52 railroads. Pardon the informality of that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Certainly, we are glad to have it.

Mr. MILLER. About $300,000.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you estimate it would cost the other side, if they were to gather full information, about the same sum?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It did not cost us that much money, quite; we maintained a larger staff, but spent much less money in dollars.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. $200,000?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I would judge fully that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then in order to carry on an arbitration case under the Erdman Act, or now the Newlands Act, as it was carried on in that case would cost $500,000, roughly estimated?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir. You have to understand there were ninety-odd thousand employees interested. How many were included in that, Mr. Garretson?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Eighty-two thousand.

Mr. ATTERBURY. And that it involved something like ninety million a year; that is, it would run over $1,000 for each individual who was engaged in the arbitration.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The point I want to get at is, whether if this act is extended and the men in the railroad system and in the shops are unorganized, and with no method of having funds like the Order of Railroad Conductors, what possibility they would have to raise the money or prepare themselves to go into arbitration with an organized company like the Pennsylvania system, and present case, like the transportation men, with their large organization and large funds at hand, what show the shop men would have under conditions of that kind?

Mr. ATTERBURY. The only show they have, Mr. O'Connell, is the protection of the officers themselves; and that, in turn, depends altogether upon the financial condition of the company and the relations of the standard of wages of the employees of the company to the standard of outside employment.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They would have been unable, if it cost as it does these transportation organizations in cases of arbitration? It costs them immense sums of money to gather data and statistics and to fortify themselves in an arbitration case—

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (continuing). That the shopmen, unorganized and unassociated together in any way, would certainly not be prepared to come in and fortify themselves with this great expense under any kind of an act. So that the extension of the Erdman Act might not carry with it the same relief to the unorganized men as it might to the organized men who are prepared to appoint boards—

Mr. ATTERBURY (interrupting). I think, perhaps, that is true.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the mere fact of your saying that that would be a good thing to put in effect does not mean so much to the men who are not organized?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You were acquainted with the troubles that occurred in and around Pittsburgh in 1911 in the shop trades?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I was.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you recall what was the beginning of that trouble?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, I can not specifically recall the details that started it, Mr. O'Connell.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were there not at that time a large number of discharges took place?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think there were; all of that, however, Mr. Long, our general manager, who was on the ground at the time, can testify to.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He is familiar with it?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes; he was on the ground at the time and in charge.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As I understand it—and, by the way, I was at one time in the employ of the Pennsylvania, years ago.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I did not know that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. On two or three occasions I worked for the old W. M. & Y., and the Central, and others about the time you worked in the shop, and at the same trade; the wages and hours and conditions under which the men were to work were set in the shops; as suggested by the commissioner, Mr. Weinstock, that you made individual deals individually with them; in other words, that you made with them an individual arrangement. I take it that the company, the officials of the company, or the officers who have it in charge, simply set the rates of wages, the piecework prices—it is largely piecework—and set the hours of labor, and set the conditions of employment, and that the workman who comes along simply accepts that or declines to accede to it, as the case may be.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think that is true.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And he has nothing to say with it, one way or the other.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I would not say that he has nothing to do with it. Take a place like Renovo, Elmira, Williamsport, or Sunbury; there the master mechanic is very familiar with the individuals in the shop. The shop is not so large but what the master mechanic can know everybody in it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But, take an outlying point, say Renovo, and the master mechanic would not be empowered to put into effect in the shops an eight-hour day in Renovo, without the approval of the general officers of the company?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Oh, no; no.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He would not have the right to change the general conditions of work?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And a man comes along there, he works and accepts that rate that is provided, and he works under the conditions that are provided. And I understood a while ago you said there was an advance of 10 per cent all along the line. Now, the workmen were not taken into consideration or consultation in that at all?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir; not at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Not in any way.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Nor the trainmen. Do not forget that our treatment of the trainmen organization in that respect, until the last year, has been absolutely the same.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But if there were discharges of trainmen, or they were laid off and men were held up, or were given a suspension, or anything of that kind, you would meet the officials or representatives or committees of the trainmen or the conductors for the purpose of adjustment?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes; and many—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). In that case you recognize them as an organization?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, we recognize them as representing their particular trade. Now, in some of our shops we have the same sort of committees. Just how far that exists, I do not know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But in so far as the setting of the rates of wages, my experience of many, many years, and my observation of things having had to do with the machinists' organization, as you may know, for many, many years, the Pennsylvania Co. simply set the rate of wages, or their officers do, their officials probably, at the various points, the rates for piecework, prices, etc., and how the man shall work, and the hours they shall work, and the men are not brought into consultation in any way about it, or individually, but the company simply posts notices or puts it in the book of rules that these are the conditions?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the prices and all that?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the man who goes to work has to accept the conditions under which he shall work.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir. Now, of course, the number of hours the shop works is altogether dependent on the amount of work that there is. That is one of the subjects—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Now, then, there follows with that what is commonly called the "on and off" system.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not know what you mean.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, a man is laid off, it is commonly called—where he works to-day and is off to-morrow, or he works to-day a half day and is off in the afternoon.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think that is an exception rather than the rule, Mr. O'Connell. The work is laid out in a somewhat different way. That is, the master mechanic knows in advance what work he has ahead of him in the shop and knows how many hours he is going to work, and I question if there is very much of that sort of thing going on. I rather imagine that is exaggerated, rather than the rule.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, do you feel, Mr. Atterbury, that if there was a closer relationship between the employees, speaking now of the shop trades, with which I am more familiar, and the company officials, that it would have a tendency to appease industrial unrest, if there be industrial unrest?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I would welcome it, Mr. O'Connell, if it could be done under proper auspices. I would welcome and more than welcome an organization of the Pennsylvania employees among themselves.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Without any outside entangling alliances, as it were?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Absolutely. That would be ideal, if it could be accomplished.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You think that would be a good thing, then, good for the Pennsylvania; and if it was, it would be good for all other roads alike?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Not only good for the railroad, but it would be good for the men, because anything that is good for the railroad is good for the men; and, vice versa, anything that is good for the men is good for the railroad.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have in view principally in that the possibility of preventing—I say “preventing”; I don't recall just the word to use—but, anyhow, the interference of outside influences with the employees of the company?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Anything that would produce a greater condition of harmony between the employees and the railroad company would be very, very good for the railroad company, and it would mean more efficient work. It means more willing work and more loyal work.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I will ask you this question of a general character: This commission is authorized to investigate and ascertain, if possible, what are the underlying causes of industrial unrest. In a broad sense there is industrial unrest. There are strikes and disturbances and all sorts of turmoil breaking out here and there; and you, as a man of large experience, and having to do with a great corporation and many thousands of workmen—what, in your opinion, is the cause of industrial unrest?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Well, there are two kinds of industrial unrest: One is the commercial and the other is the sociological. Now, my own opinion is that unrest is a good thing.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Of course, I would not expect to do away with industrial unrest—a healthy unrest.

Mr. ATTERBURY. My opinion is that it is a perfectly normal thing—unrest. There is no progress going to be made in the world unless there is unrest. Rather an interesting sidelight on the situation was the statement of a coal man as made to the effect that the miner of to-day wanted a wife of his own and wanted a house with a bathroom; and 5 or 10 years ago he was willing to live 10 or 12 in one community with one woman and one big room, and never took a bath. Now, that sort of unrest is a good thing for the world, and the more of it the better we will be as a United States.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, that is a healthy unrest. Now, there is another unrest.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Now, the commercial unrest, from my standpoint—the responsibility for that is largely due to our commercial conditions. For instance, at one time we may be working our full force of 135,000 men on the lines east—working them full time and, maybe, overtime; and six months after that we haven't got business enough to keep two-thirds of them busy. Now, under those circumstances, I do not see how you are going to avoid social unrest so long as your social conditions are such as to bring about that situation. My own judgment is that we will have to put ourselves commercially as a country in a position where we have our peak load 365 days in the year, and then unload on our neighbors what we have to spare.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then the irregularity of employment—

Mr. ATTERBURY (interrupting). I think irregularity of employment is the most serious thing we have got to contend with.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And added to that the seasonal employment?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes. That is all a part of it. One of the witnesses testified about our men owning their own homes. That is true. We encourage and advocate building and loan associations in all of the towns that we have any representation in; and the men are gradually paying for their own homes, and it is a good thing, and it is a good thing for the country. Yet these men are dependent on their monthly earnings for the payments in the building and loan association, and they will pay along for three or four years, and then comes a bad year and they are not able to keep up those payments. I think that is one of the largest causes for industrial unrest—is the irregularity of employment. I think a man is always happier when he has got his regular employment and regular hours. At least that has been my experience.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you do not think a man may feel dissatisfied because he is not taken into a sort of partnership, as it were, to deal with the employer as to his conditions of life and as to his wage-earning capacity?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Why, I think that if there were any proper way of profit sharing or stock ownership in the railroads—in our railroad—I would be very keen in advocating it. I wish our employees were interested in our company. Many of them are stockholders to-day, but not to the extent to which I would like to see them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, I do not mean so much the stock ownership or profit sharing; may they not feel that they have a right to, and that the company should want them to, come in and sit down at the round table and argue out the questions of wages they are to receive, and questions of hours they are to work, and conditions under which they are to work, and that they should be taken into confidence to that extent by a great corporation like the Pennsylvania Railroad? Now, it seems to me, they feel, particularly the shop trade of the company, that they are not given any consideration at all; that their sole dependence is based upon the good will of the officials of the company who carry these things into effect for them without consultation or advice at all. Don't you think that that might—that an arrangement might be made whereby these workmen would be taken into advice and counsel? That they might feel that they had a greater share and participation in the affairs of the company, and by that means bring them closer to the company and have a higher opinion and interest in the company than if they are kept isolated?

Mr. ATTERBURY. You can not do that without an effective organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is the point I am getting at, Mr. Atterbury. So then there ought to be, instead of an attitude of discouraging organization, an attitude of encouraging organization.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I think I have already stated that we will be glad to see proper organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, of course, the term "proper"—your interpretation of proper and what the men themselves might think proper as men might differ very materially.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I grant that.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Any other questions?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Just a question or two.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Very well.

Commissioner GARRETSON. One moment ago, Mr. Atterbury, you asked for confirmation on a question. That was in regard to the attitude of Secretary Wilson. I know your attitude is exactly that of myself. You would not want to be understood as doing—I mean you would not want to allow your answer to do him any injustice. He favored all the principles that are embodied in the Newlands bill, but it was as to who should be responsible that he differed with us on.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He desired to have it under the Labor Department.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Sure. That is the point I want to make clear. He did not differ from us on the essence of the bill, but he differed from us as to the machinery.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Thank you for correcting me, Mr. Garretson. I am very glad to hear it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, I knew that would be your attitude, Mr. Atterbury. Now, as to this question of unrest, Mr. Atterbury, which you have described under two different heads—that is, legitimate unrest which is desirable, and what you first referred to under the name of commercial unrest and then followed up with the term "social unrest," meaning either the unrest or its outcome, do you believe this, assuming merely for the purposes of an expression that there are localities in your line like Altoona, for instance, for I am taking a typical company-governed town, or what is alleged to be a company-governed town, that if there were a large number of men, employees of the company, no matter how long, who do feel that they are being deprived of the free exercise or what they hold to be their constitutional privilege, could there be any greater agency to create unrest of the latter class than that—social unrest?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I did not follow that as closely—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). A man deprived of what he believes to be his constitutional privilege either as a citizen or as an employee, would that be a great influence to create an undesirable unrest?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Oh, I think it perfectly natural. I know I feel so myself at times. If I am deprived of what I think is my just dues, I have a grudge against somebody. That is perfectly natural.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is the human side of it?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Certainly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, I want to ask you a question, because I heard it referred to in that locality very many times. It is only an indication. Have you ever heard how many copies of the Appeal to Reason were received in Altoona prior to 1911—probable circulation?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If it was an exceedingly large number, would it be an indication in that community they did feel that they had been circumscribed?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That would largely depend; could only affect my judgment if I knew something of the propaganda that had preceded this large distribution.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If that circulation had continued during a very considerable time?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not hesitate to say that I think it would be a very bad sign.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You never had any data on that subject?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No; I never have. If the Appeal to Reason was voluntarily received and read in Altoona——

Commissioner GARRETSON. And paid for.

Mr. ATTERBURY. And paid for; I would say it would be a very bad sign.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You referred to the fact that transportation organizations upon some lines were federated under what is known as the Cedar Rapids plan?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I only attempted to differentiate between that situation and the situation as it existed on the Pennsylvania, in answer to some question asked me.

Commissioner GARRETSON. All I intended to ask you was as to whether or not at least three of the organizations were not federated on the Pennsylvania lines east, at the present time under that plan?

Mr. ATTERBURY. If they are, I am not aware of it. I do not think the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers are—perhaps the others are. My recollection is that the old Cedar Rapids agreement took in the Order of Telegraphers.

Commissioner GARRETSON. At one time, and later on did not; they were parties to its original formation.

Mr. ATTERBURY. That was my recollection.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I have a weakness for eggs; I want to go back to the owl and the eggs. In this question of which was first, espionage by the company or espionage by the men, is it not a fact, predating your own day with the company, that the company had espionage before there was any organization, and that when organizations began to come into existence that that was when its espionage in regard to the spirit of the men was extended by the company?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I take it for granted you remember the old story of the conductor, the money that he threw up and stuck on the bell rope went to the company and what fell went into his pocket?

Commissioner GARRETSON. That was a Federal bell cord?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I suppose espionage went back to other days.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But you have no reason to believe anything to the contrary, that espionage did precede organization?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No; I have no reason to believe—all I know is the situation as it exists. That is troublesome enough without wondering as to the cause of it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You don't know of any time that the company did not exercise espionage?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you any remembrance of when the organization did not exist?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I have not. Some of my oldest friends were members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Order of Railway Conductors, and some of my best friends.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I will take the one I know best. Voluntary increases never ceased in the train service on the Pennsylvania road until 1910?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Not until we first joined with the other lines, following a consolidation of the engineers on the line east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio; that is my recollection of the first time.

Commissioner GARRETSON. No; was it not when the first concerted attempts were presented to the companies, and they acted singly about that time, in 1910?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is as I remember it; however, you are more familiar with it than I am; but my recollection is that followed the application of the New York Central award, followed the statement by Mr. Myers that we would do as well as anyone else did.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is the time I referred to as the last so-called voluntary increase. Has the increase since that time been granted to the train-service department been accompanied by corresponding increases to the other organizations, as they used to be in what we call the voluntary days?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I regret to say they were not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In regard to the Lemieux Act, the Canadian act.

Mr. ATTERBURY. I call that the Mackenzie King Act.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did you pay any attention to its workings in 1910?

Mr. ATTERBURY. At the time of the Grand Trunk strike?

Commissioner GARRETSON. At the time it culminated in the Grand Trunk strike.

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did you compare the amount of time that was consumed in disposing of 71 properties on this side and 3 on the other, or 3 on this side under the Erdman Act—71 on this side and 3 on the other, in working under the Erdman Act and under the Lemieux; did you ever check up the comparative time that was used?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I have not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You are aware that the Grand Trunk strike took place the same day that settlement was reached on the Pennsylvania, the last of the properties on this side of the line?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I did not know that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Under the Lemieux Act, the same amount of time was used for 3 companies that was used for the 71 on this side?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I do not think the Lemieux Act has any application to the train-service employees. I think I have already said that we doubt if we will ever again have a big strike; that before that we would probably come to terms among ourselves under some form of arbitration.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In regard to your ideal form of organization, if I do not misunderstand you, it was to the effect that you would welcome an organization composed wholly of Pennsylvania employees with no outside entanglements?

Mr. ATTERBURY. That is right.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In the conduct of the company's business, has it any entangling alliances with other railroad companies?

Mr. ATTERBURY. It did not have until the employees themselves took up outside coalitions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Outside of wage conditions altogether? For instance, the I. C. C. legislation, and otherwise, you have such alliance with all of the other companies that obtain between the other companies, and they are parties to it.

Mr. ATTERBURY. If you remember, Mr. Garretson, there was a general managers' association in the East, the Pennsylvania Railroad was never a party to that, and never dealt collectively in any way, shape, or form and did not do so until our engineers decided and desired themselves to collectively bargain. It was not until then that we went into the general managers' association and became a part of it. We have always, as you know, endeavored to deal with our own employees, and largely prided ourselves upon it, and I can not help but think it was a sad day for the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad when they went into that collective bargaining, and put themselves on a par with employees of the other railroads of the eastern country.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You belonged to the American Railway Association all these years?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You belong to an association which was represented by a committee on legislation?

Mr. ATTERBURY. I don't think we belong to that. I have always objected to it. Now, we belong to the Master Car Builders' Association and the Master Mechanics' Association, and have our representative in the Signal Officers' Association, and the Maintenance and Engineers' Association, and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and the American Society of Civil Engineers, we have our representatives in all those organizations.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is because you believe your interests are better conserved by working in company with them, having a common interest? If that is true of your company, is it not also true of your employees?

Mr. ATTERBURY. We can easily conceive of the employees condition of the other railroads being materially improved by having an alliance with the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad, but I think it has worked adversely to the employees of the Pennsylvania, but materially to the advantage of the employees of the other roads, and if you are going into the broad question, perhaps the good of the country and of the Pennsylvania road itself may have been benefited, but directly our men have not been.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I wondered if you believe that the Pennsylvania employees should stay in these associations as philanthropists to the others?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir; I think they were forced into it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. How could they be?

Mr. ATTERBURY. By sociological methods, that you are as familiar with, and more so, than I am.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did you ever see a man hung by a sociological method?

Mr. ATTERBURY. No, sir; but he might a heap better be hung.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You finish him just the same?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Exactly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all, we will leave him there.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. That is all, Mr. Atterbury, but before you leave the stand, I don't believe you put this document in the record. Do you wish to do so at this time?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I think you will find that the stenographer directed your attention to it and you handed him a copy when you read the excerpt from it, but whether you put the whole document in, I don't know.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. It is the desire that the entire document be presented?

Mr. ATTERBURY. Yes, sir; I desire to do so.

(The document referred to by witness, entitled "The Pennsylvania Railroad—Its Policies Toward Its Employees," was submitted in printed form.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. H. B. PERHAM—Recalled.

Mr. PERHAM. At the proper time I would like to correct a wrong impression as to the telegraphers and the spying system. It would be wrong to allow all this impression to go out that our organization employs spies.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. You will be allowed before the close of the hearing to make any statement you desire in that regard.

Mr. PERHAM. I would not like for any person to go away with the idea that any telegraph operator was a spy.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Do you have to leave town to-day?

Mr. PERHAM. No; but I would like to be able to address the people that heard the statement made.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. You make take the stand now.

(H. B. Perham, recalled, here took the stand.)

Mr. PERHAM. I think it was Mr. Weinstock misunderstood some of the testimony I gave this morning. I tried to make it clear that the organization had received its information from citizens along the line. It should be understood that the telegraph operator of a station is the sole custodian of the commercial secrets and domestic secrets of the town where he is just the one man who handles these telegrams, and sends them for the commercial telegraph company, then he is the one man that carries all the secrets of the town, and very seldom, indeed, has it ever been reported that such a man has been guilty of a breach of confidence. In fact, I never heard a case of that character, and I have had much experience with these men, consequently it would damage my business if the impression was carried abroad that these men were spies. It would not do. Again, in the general offices of the railroad company we usually have the large telegraph offices, and the men there work night and day, and would have access to correspondence, to files, and the secret work of the company, and could do considerable damage if they were retained as spies or allowed to spy. The fact is that we, or the Order of Railway Telegraphers, never do hire a spy, or have any connection with detective agencies, and never allow its members to spy or inform upon the employer. If he was to be guilty of giving up the secrets of his employer, he would undoubtedly be tried on charges and possibly expelled from the organization as a punishment for that breach of confidence. I thought it absolutely necessary that at this time I make that absolutely clear that we desire to hold the position we have, as being forthright of the confidence of all people in relation to being intrusted with their domestic secrets.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What did you have in mind when you said this morning that both sides employed spies?

Mr. PERHAM. I don't remember having said that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Perhaps I misunderstood that. I got the impression, I think, from the testimony that you knew the railroads had spies in your ranks, and that you had spies in their ranks; that you hired the men to go out and gather information.

Mr. PERHAM. I tried to make it clear that these men were organizers, soliciting members, and not spies.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Not telegraph operators themselves?

Mr. PERHAM. They are mostly railroad employees, ex-employees.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you probably heard Mr. Atterbury on the witness stand a little while ago make this statement also, in discussing the question of spies, that information right from his own office was made known in labor circles. That he knew it, and they knew that he knew it. Now, is that information gotten out of the office?

Mr. PERHAM. I heard that testimony, and it possibly would account for Mr. Atterbury's attitude toward organizations, that he was mistaken about that, that there was no legitimate organization that had anything to do with that character of work. We hold ourselves above it, and would sooner have no information than to get it in such a manner as that.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. I think the record shows, as Mr. Perham states, that Mr. Perham did not indicate that they were hiring spies or anything of that nature, but that organizers in the conduct of their work did make it their business, and did report to you certain things of interest which they ascertained, without the knowledge of the officers of the Pennsylvania, in their own manner, but as far as employing spies is concerned, for that particular purpose, you didn't do it.

Mr. PERHAM. We didn't do it; and that is what I wanted to make clear.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you draw a distinction between an organizer, probably whose function it is to keep you informed as to what is going on, and a telegraph operator? Are these organizers men outside of the ranks or are they also telegraphers?

Mr. PERHAM. These organizers that we have in my employ, I believe there are 17 in the United States and Canada, have served at least 20 years as telegraph operators.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. While acting as organizers, are they also performing the functions of a telegraph operator?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir; they get better wages as an organizer, because they are selected for that particular purpose, and each man is well known to the man that employs him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, we have had labor representatives on the stand in other places, and they have stated very frankly and very openly that they expected these men to get information from the enemy, looking upon it in the light of labor troubles; they expected them to get the information any way they can get it, right or wrong. I don't know whether your union draws the line between the right and wrong way. In other words, I gathered from their statement that a labor trouble is war and that everything is justifiable in war; that one country in war with another does not hesitate to send out spies and get information any way they can, and the same idea prevails in labor wars, and I gather from what you say that your union draws the line and does not gather it in that way?

Mr. PERHAM. I believe that is an exaggeration to say that a labor trouble is war. There are probably people that entertain that view who never had anything to do with war and do not understand what war is. The impression conveyed to my mind is that probably the officials of this company imagine that a labor organization is a subrosa concern, that it is in a way a conspiracy. That is not true. The organization to-day—it would not matter if every letter in my files in St. Louis, say for a period of 10 years, was published in the newspapers, there is nothing to conceal, and I think every railroad man in this country knows what my next move will be in a labor dispute. There is nothing to find out about it, and it is the same way with all other railway organizations.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean you play with your cards on the table?

Mr. PERHAM. That would be a good expression.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Anything further? If not, you may be excused, Mr. Perham.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. H. PIERCE.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Will you please state your full name and residence?

Mr. PIERCE. W. H. Pierce.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Your residence?

Mr. PIERCE. Harrisburg, Pa.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Mr. Pierce, what is your business?

Mr. PIERCE. An organizer.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. For what?

Mr. PIERCE. Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Mr. Pierce, are you familiar with local conditions on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, somewhat.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Please state your knowledge, and how gained, how you gained such knowledge?

Mr. PIERCE. Practical experience.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. On what line and covering what term of years?

Mr. PIERCE. Four years.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And commencing at what time?

Mr. PIERCE. When I say four years, that is exaggerated a little. The 30th day of December, 1911, to make it exact.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And continuing to the present time?

Mr. PIERCE. I have been out of that system several months during that time. I have been on the lines west. I have done special work maybe during that period of time. You understand at the beginning of 1910 I was employed by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen as a national organizer, and I was on for several years, but I came on the Pennsylvania system in December, 1911, and from that time to the present time I have possibly been off of the Pennsylvania system on lines east or west approximately four or five or six months.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. You have been for a period of about four years an organizer for the Federation of Railway Employees?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; they were not organized until the 22d of October, 1913.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And since that time you have been connected with that organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What was your experience, Mr. Pierce, prior to this four years' period that you were an organizer—were you connected with some railroad?

Mr. PIERCE. I do not understand the question. Just once more, please?

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What was your line of work; what experience before you started into this organization work?

Mr. PIERCE. I done special work at the grand lodge. I was connected with the grand lodge of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Peoria, Ill.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. For how long a period?

Mr. PIERCE. About seven years.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Doing special work?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What was the nature of that special work, please?

Mr. PIERCE. Anything that I was assigned to.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Anything in connection with organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Of that particular organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And was that the first work that you did in your life for that organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, no.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Or were you with them before that?

Mr. PIERCE. I was a member of the executive board and general chairman for many years.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And general chairman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; that was before they added the name "Enginemen,"

Acting Chairman AISHTON. How long were you with them?

Mr. PIERCE. Some eight or ten years.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. You were a paid representative at that time?

Mr. PIERCE. The men paid me then only when I was on special work for the grand lodge.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And prior to that line of work, where were you engaged?

Mr. PIERCE. I went to school.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Did you fire a locomotive?

Mr. PIERCE. I did.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. For how long?

Mr. PIERCE. Three years and one day.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. You fired a locomotive during this period you were chairman of that committee?

Mr. PIERCE. I was an engineer also.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And at the present time you are compensated for your services by some organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. The Federation of Railway Employees?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Now, Mr. Pierce, what knowledge have you as to the shop conditions on the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1913 and 1914? You have prepared no statement, as I understand it?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; if you will give me a specific case I will tell you anything I possibly can.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. I presume you have been furnished with a statement of the questions that will be asked?

Mr. PIERCE. I have not that I know of.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Have you any knowledge of the shop conditions on the Pennsylvania in 1913 and 1914?

Mr. PIERCE. I have had more or less knowledge ever since I have come here in 1911.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Have you a knowledge of shop conditions on other lines in the territory surrounding the Pennsylvania?

Mr. PIERCE. I have, on the Baltimore & Ohio and the Erie and the New York Central lines.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. If you can not explain in detail the conditions on the Pennsylvania road, can you make a comparison between the conditions on the Pennsylvania road and other lines in that territory?

Mr. PIERCE. Wherever there is piecework or the piecework system is established a majority of the men are dissatisfied. I will say to you, if you will allow me, that I believe that has caused one-half of the unrest to-day. The efficiency system that is put into effect under the piecework system makes it impossible for only those who are the most proficient, and possibly those that have more energy to burn up, to make any money. Under the piecework system men are grouped, they have gangs, and many cases where there are new men coming into the service, all the time as apprentices, Mr. Atterbury said they bring up their own apprentices, and you take a gang of 10 or 12 or 15 men and have 4 or 5 apprentices, and it is impossible, almost impossible, for them to earn any money at all because they are not accustomed to that work; it is a trade by itself—car repairing and repairing engines and special round-house work. You take, after they have been in the service many years and a gang have become acquainted with each other, and they work and the allotment of the work, and they make very fair wages when they have full time. The conditions where there is piecework on any line of railroad all depends upon the blueprint or the price that is paid for it. The efficiency system you understand possibly as well as I, being a railroad man, as I understand you are; a man first entering the service he earns but little, afterwards becomes more proficient and can earn a fair salary, but he soon breaks himself down, and at 40 or 45 he is an old man.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. You have made no statement as to the shop conditions on the Pennsylvania in 1913 and 1914 other than the general statement as to the efficiency system. Do you desire to make any statement as to that condition?

Mr. PIERCE. I find this on the Pennsylvania system, that they have a very elaborate and proficient police service, probably the greatest in the world for any corporation of its size—in the railroad field at least. The men who work in their shops—that is, outside of the transportation men, comprising between 108,000 and 113,000 men—they are denied the right that is extended to the men in the transportation department, and until they are given equal rights there always will be unrest there, and the conditions will never be what they should be.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Now, Mr. Pierce, will you tell us what brought about the inception of the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir. In June, 1913, certain employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. held a meeting in the city of Pittsburgh, the first Monday in June, and at that meeting there was an organization contemplated and afterwards put into effect on that system that was known as the Pennsylvania Railroad Employees' Mutual Benefit Association. They have changed the name of that association several times and I can not tell you just exactly what the name of it now is, but it is practically the same. It is a benefit, mutual benefit, association, taking in all classes of employees. I think it was in August, 1913, I was instructed to attend some meetings on the Pennsylvania system.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Instructed by whom?

Mr. PIERCE. By the international president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, W. S. Carter, and at those meetings it was brought out that they were getting out a tentative application to have these employees sign for this mutual admiration association, and it was brought out there that the intent and purpose of this organization was, and I think it has been fairly displayed here this afternoon what the special purpose was, when Mr. Atterbury said he was heartily in favor of an organization exclusively of Pennsylvania Railroad employees, because that organization is thriving there at the present time, and without a doubt his anticipations will be filled within a short time in my estimation. And in attending those meetings it seemed that they had some organizers in the field. Now, it has always been a mystery to me how it is that men who have tried to organize these men have been hounded by their detectives, but evidently they overlooked the fact that the company people were in league with ex-members of labor organizations which were trying to organize these men. At any rate they seemed to have a free hand. When the tentative constitution was drawn a copy of a letter was sent to Mr. Long, the general manager, asking him, by the man who was chairman of the meeting, if he could make any recommendations and if that one met with his approval. Of course, I did not get the correspondence, and while it has been said we do not do any detective work I want to confess that I do, and I did some there, and that is how I got this constitution or letter that was sent to General Manager Long, and I want to say to you that I don't blame those fellows for doing that class of work, myself, under this system. I have nothing against those people in doing detective work. All I have asked is that they keep them a certain distance from me, because I did not want the people in a town to think I was associating with them. I have no objection, however, to them following me and I have had a large quota around me all the time, and I have felt safe against foreign invasion, because I have had from 10 to 20 following me around, and all I have asked is that they keep a proper distance.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. About how far?

Mr. PIERCE. I would think half a block would be about right. I have often thought that I could have saved the Pennsylvania Railroad a large amount of money if they would have allowed me to make a report every day where I was and what I done, because they made a large job for a lot of suckers I made a report to the international officers of our organization and we had several conferences, and it was decided to fight fire with fire, so we started in.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Pardon me for the interruption. At this period you were still the organizer for the B. of L. E. & E. and acted under instructions from Mr. Carter?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; you have it. In attending these meetings, I advised them not to go into this mutual admiration association, because I believe it would have been a bad thing; whether it would be or not time will tell, because it is only a short time until it will be put into effect, and we will all get a chance to see it; but I told the men, advised them to organize themselves, and at about every meeting we held they would say they did not dare to organize themselves, they would be discharged, and would not become officers of the organization, and they wanted to know if I would become the head of them and organize them. At that time there was a trip laid out for me to the Pacific coast on some work for the organization, but I was destined to be in Pennsylvania and New Jersey and Delaware and Maryland for a period of 60 or 90 days, and I told the men who attended those meetings that I would draw them up a tentative constitution and application and they should pick their own men to run their organization, but I would give that time to them gratuitously to assist them, and so I did. At every meeting we had the halls were not big enough to hold the people who wanted to join the organization; always overflows.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were any of these meetings in Altoona?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; and right here I will tell you, you have heard a great deal said about not being able to get halls. Do you know I was accused by one organizer from the American Federation of Labor of being in league with the railroads because I could get a hall in Altoona, and for your information I will tell you how I got it; I bought it. I bought the entire hall; that is how I got it. The Pennsylvania Railroad would have stopped me; they have stopped me in other places, and Mr. Lamb, a detective, is here and he can tell you how they stopped it. I went them one better in Altoona. I had the experience of the American Federation of Labor.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Proceed, and do not get away from the subject any more than possible.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; I will try to do so, but I may drift away, and if so, I may be corrected. I believe these meetings were all of an overflow character. I drew them a tentative constitution and presented it to them, and I took an organizer by the name of McDevitt, who was an organizer for the firemen, but who had been relieved from service on account of the work being nearly completed which he was assigned to, and I put him in charge of this new organization to organize these men. It went along until we had four or five men working and eventually, you understand, I was working with the firemen all day soliciting membership and straightening out affairs with the firemen's organization and then attending meetings all night, and I commenced to be run down; I could not stand the work, it was too strenuous. So we had a conference here in the city of Washington of several members of the firemen's organization, and at that meeting I told them I could not go any further and carry the two organizations, and it was agreed that I should take a leave of absence for a certain length of time, and so I did.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. A leave of absence from the service of the firemen?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; and so I took a leave of absence from the firemen and agreed to act as the head of this organization for a period of 90 days, thinking that in the meantime there would some one develop that would take charge of the affairs, as it was always my contention that one of their own men should be at the head of it. While I have been accused of many things, and it being a one-man organization, as I heard one of your honorable board say, or words to that effect, I want to say that was farthest from my thought, and all the time, until I got a leave of absence, I was working only under instructions of W. S. Carter. But during this period of leave of absence of 90 days this organization grew by leaps and bounds, and the American Federation of Labor began to get worried; that is where a little jealousy crept in; the American Federation of Labor commenced to get worried, and they saw that if this organization was a success they would lose their membership on the different lines of railroads connected with the American Federation of Labor, and so they commenced to put up a wall and howl like a dog with a tin can tied to its tail, and they commenced to send out reports and letters, and they commenced to make Brother Carter take water, and Brother Carter told me to commence unloading on some one else, but I was not of that unloading disposition, and I did not propose to draw a man into a hole and leave him in the hole. I made up my mind to get him out of it, and simply because the American Federation of Labor wished to control labor, wished the transportation men to keep their hands off from men employed by railroads which would not allow the American Federation of Labor on their grounds, or to organize them, and simply because we were having success and they were purely jealous of that success, I continued and was loyal to those men. Everything went along beautifully until along in January, when they commenced to suspend men, and it is not necessary for me to tell you here this afternoon that Mr. Atterbury's system of spying worked out beautifully in this case, because the men they put in the shops were certainly loyal to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; and I can tell Mr. Long and Mr. Atterbury how many they had; they had 36 in the city of Harrisburg. I know their methods, and possibly I could tell Mr. Atterbury and Mr. Long their method of procedure in the shops.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Mr. Pierce, at this point, you have finished with the inception

Mr. PIERCE. That is what brought out the inception.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What was the attitude of the company toward yours and other organizers?

Mr. PIERCE. They used me fine, only I had a big body guard around me all the time for months; that is, detectives; they never did me any personal harm.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. How about the other organizers?

Mr. PIERCE. I believe one or two of them did get beat up a little or something, I don't know. I guess they did have some disturbances, but I will tell you candidly, I think they would leave you alone if you would leave them alone. I think there was probably a little friction; some fellows did not like to be followed around, and resented it more or less, but all I ask is that they keep back a little ways, 15 or 20 feet. Two or three of them did not do it, and I stopped them and requested them not to do it.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. And they did not do it any more?

Mr. PIERCE. If they had we would have had a clash.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Did you have any actual clash?

Mr. PIERCE. No. The nearest I had to it was up in Buffalo. A fellow up there—you know he thought a fellow could not talk to himself, and he came over to try to stop me from talking to myself. I got off of a car, and I knew that he had a gun and a blackjack on him, and I got off of the car and went over to a store and telephoned the police first that if that fellow followed me any more I would get a gun, and I intended to do it; and if that fellow came over and put his hands on me I was going to use it, because I knew the man, and I knew he had a gun and a blackjack on him, and that if I could not get the civil rights of a citizen in Buffalo I was going to take my case in my own hands.

I am going to say to you, if you will allow me, about their police department, that they have some very fine men on their police department, and they have some of the worst scavengers in the world—those that are picked up at random—and there is nothing in the world that they would not do to cause trouble, and they are real trouble makers. They lie to and deceive the company in making their reports. They do that so they will continue on the job and draw their pay. They are not honest with the railroad company, and if they were it would be a different tale to tell altogether, but they deceive the railroads and the railroad managers themselves and the railroad officials, and I want to say to you that they are not the only ones that deceive them.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Did you have any experience with the spy system, Mr. Pierce, in your own particular case?

Mr. PIERCE. You mean—just make that more definite. You say, "Spy system." Do you mean the "bull" system, as they call it?

Acting Chairman AISHTON. No; I mean the espionage system.

Mr. PIERCE. You understand I was never allowed to go on their ground after this organization. When I was a fireman I could go all around their round-houses. They never objected to that—that is, I never had them object—but when I went into this I say I was followed by so many gunmen that I never stepped my foot on their property except I had a mileage book in my pocket and I went into one of their stations.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. How were the men treated that affiliated themselves with this particular organization?

Mr. PIERCE. I know they were discharged.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Do you have any further information you desire to put into the record in regard to that?

Mr. PIERCE. I know men who were told to either withdraw from the organization or be discharged.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. In discharging men did the company give as a reason their affiliation with the organization?

Mr. PIERCE. They told them that if they gave up their due books they could have their jobs back after they discharged them.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Can you tell us what was the cause of the strike of 1914?

Mr. PIERCE. It was hardly a strike; it was more a lockout. They locked out all of the men that belonged to the organization through this spying system they had of gaining information. If you will allow me, I will tell you how they got that information.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. The commission would like to know.

Mr. PIERCE. I hope Mr. Atterbury will correct me if I am not correct. They take these Pinkerton detectives and they put on overalls and go into the shop, and they are supposed to work, but their principal work is rolling up their sleeves and putting their handkerchief around their necks and wiping the sweat off of their brow and finding out how much the other employees know about organized labor. They never do any work. If they did, they would not be detectives. You never saw a detective who was a worker.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Now, Mr. Pierce, did your association, or you, attempt to establish any relations—any contractual relations—with the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.—for these employees?

Mr. PIERCE. Not until after they commenced to discharge them in bunches in that way. They discharged a lot of old men, and we asked Mr. Long, and Mr. Creighton also, when they laid off these men to lay them off according to their seniority rights. They laid off men who had been 25 and 35 years in the service and kept men very much younger in the service—men who had been there only a few years. It came out in the Altoona and Harrisburg papers that they would only lay off the young men and the unmarried men, but what they really did do was just the reverse. They laid off the oldest men in the service and the married men and kept the single men working, as a rule.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. That hardly answers the question. Was any attempt made by you as head of that organization or any committee of that organization to present a demand to the Pennsylvania road or attempt to establish a contract with it?

Mr. PIERCE. No; just seniority rights is all we asked; we did not ask for any advance in pay. We had not completed our organization when this came up.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Was there any demand made through mediation, or through the Department of Labor, to bring about a settlement of the strike?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Please recite to the commission what was done.

Mr. PIERCE. When they commenced to lay these men off in large numbers that way—take the section men; there would be a section gang of 12 men. They would lay off 6 and hire 6 new men in their place. They would let those other 6 work for three or four days until the new 6 had become familiar with the work, more or less, with the whistle system. The men that work on the track have no right to look up to see whether trains are coming or going; the foreman blows a whistle and the workmen jump off of the track, and if he does not blow the whistle they are killed. So, when they got the whistle system drilled into those new men they discharged the other old 6 and hired 6 new men to fill up the gang; and that is the system they adopted of getting rid of the men that belonged to the organization.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Mr. Pierce, I asked the question as to whether any demands were made to secure mediation.

Mr. PIERCE. I am going to tell you about it, if you will allow me.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. PIERCE. When this came on and they kept on discharging the men this way and laying them off, we wrote a letter to Mr. Long, but never received any reply to it. Then we took it up with Mr. Wilson, the Secretary of Labor, and I think Mr. Rose, who is Assistant Secretary.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Post.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; Mr. Louis Post; we took it up with both those gentlemen, and there was some serious trouble at Altoona or Glitzen, and I got word one night that a lot of Italians were going to blow up a tunnel; and I want to say to you that that is one of the things that I would not stand for. While Mr. Atterbury, Mr. Long, and I do not agree on the labor proposition, I would not destroy any property of the Pennsylvania Railroad, or cause any injury to them personally, because I have the utmost regard for them as men, but we do not agree, possibly, on the labor situation. And when I heard there was a chance of their blowing up the Glitzen Tunnel, I immediately went there; and while I was gone up there to run down that rumor I found it was well founded, because there were people there that had dynamite and were going to blow up the tunnel, and I went there to stop them from doing any damage.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Were there any other cases of violence during this strike?

Mr. PIERCE. There was no violence at all, because I had the men well in hand that way. If there was any chance of anything of that sort I went on the ground myself, and I did not take any chance, because I did not want anything of that kind to happen.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What was the conduct of the strikers during the strike?

Mr. PIERCE. Very manly; there was no rioting. I think there was in Harrisburg one night or afternoon, a bunch down there, and I guess they did get into a little mix-up and clubbed each other a little mite, but there was not much damage done.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Outside of that you know of no violence during the strike?

Mr. PIERCE. No; none whatever; but while I was up there Mr. Price Jackson, commissioner of labor of Pennsylvania, got in communication with a couple of our boys, and they opened up negotiations, and about this time I got a telegram to come to Chicago to meet some executives of the transportation brotherhoods, and while I was gone they had opened up negotiations with Mr. Jackson, and I had told them if there was any chance for negotiations for them to open them up, and they had followed out instructions.

Secretary Wilson sent Mr. Moffatt and Mr. Smith, if I remember right, to act with Mr. Speece, of Mr. Jackson's office, and our committee had gone up to see Mr. Creighton, and then they had been down to see Mr. Long, and they kept them running back and forth for three or four days. But Mr. Moffatt, of the Department of Labor, told me, and Mr. Speece, of the State board, when I came back, that Mr. Long said there would be no more discharging; that he had no objection to the men organizing, and he would not allow them to be discharged because they belonged to the organization. But the very night I got that message they discharged 185 men at Middletown, and they discharged them purely and simply because they belonged to organized labor. The supervisor there told them that if they would turn in their due books they could have their jobs back.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. That is all the mediation that took place during this time?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What protective measure did the company use in the way of bringing in police?

Mr. PIERCE. I do not know how they brought them in, but they had them there.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. How many?

Mr. PIERCE. I know they had 36 Pinkertons. You understood they took a lot of their own employees and made them these so-called "bulls."

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Were they armed?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; some of them were. I did not investigate them all; I did not get a chance to.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What was the general character of the men, and conduct, that were brought in there as police?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, now I want to say to you that I have not got anything to say about them. They are no better or worse than the rest of them; they are all of the same character.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What attempts were made by the company to break up the organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Why, by discharging the men.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Their activities were confined to discharging the men that belonged to the organizations?

Mr. PIERCE. I say they discharged them; if you will look in their report there, in their relief report, you will see where there 42,000 men left the service of the company in 1914.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Have you any knowledge—

Mr. PIERCE. (interrupting). Just a moment. I do not want to say that those 42,000 men were all members of the organization, because they were not; but there came on a lull in business and that gave them an opportunity to discharge the men, and they took advantage of that.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Have you any knowledge of intimidation of the strikers by the company, or by the officers of the company, to learn the secret of the organization?

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, yes.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. State what it was.

Mr. PIERCE. They would tell the men—now, I want to be fair about this matter; I do not want to infer that Mr. Long or Mr. Atterbury did this, but the men that worked under them did. They have the finest system in the world for doing that kind of work, and you have to hand it to them. They are certainly past masters of the art. Now, this is the way they arranged that affair. They knew who the fellows were that were agitators and active fellows in the organization. That is the easiest thing in the world to find out, because they put these Pinkerton men in the shop and they watch everybody, and they could tell who were signing up. They would suspend a lot of these men, and then tell them that if they would give the names of others of the men who signed up they would get their jobs back, and a great many did give the names of others.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What has happened since the strike in regard to these men that went out on strike? Have they got their jobs back, any of them?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; some of them have gone back.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What proportion, do you know?

Mr. PIERCE. I could not tell you.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Do you know what it cost the men?

Mr. PIERCE. It cost a good many of them their jobs. I do not know just what it cost the men, the storekeeper, the railroad, or themselves.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. What has been the attitude of the company toward those men that are out of their service now, that went out on strike? Can those men get jobs—that is, if there are any?

Mr. PIERCE. Some of those fellows have had hard work to get positions. They would go to some place and seek employment, and have been turned down simply because they worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad. A great many of those men feel that they are blacklisted, and I presume to say in some of the subsidiary corporations of the Pennsylvania Railroad that they know that these men—and you know they have many of those subsidiary corporations, there is hardly a corporation along the line they are not more or less directly interested in, and when those men seek employment at those corporations they are denied work for some cause or another.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. Are there any further statements that you desire to make in connection with this matter?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, I am ready to answer any questions you want to ask about the unrest or about the situation as a whole. I will say to you frankly that I do not blame the Pennsylvania Railroad for the defeat of this project; I have not got a thing in the world against them because they did defeat it; it was a natural consequence of the industrial conditions of this country to-day. I have no animosity toward any of the officers of that road. I am big enough to know that they did that to keep up their dividends, and they are in the business for dividends, and if they had paid those men in those shops a living wage the same as they have to pay their transportation men they would have to stop increasing the wages of the transportation men or stop paying as big dividends and issuing more stock—that is, their surplus would be cut down.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I would like to know, Mr. Pierce, if you are familiar with the actual wage earnings of the men.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. O'Connell, it is almost impossible for anyone to become familiar with that, because it fluctuates so. This week the men are satisfied because they are working full time or overtime, and next week they do not have any work and they are dissatisfied. To-day they have men working in those shops for less than 80 cents a day. They have what is called the "on and off" system, and the men have to stay there all day whether they have anything to do or not, and they may get four or five hours' work in a day. If a man works on the piece system and he knows that he is only going to get that one job, he will rush through it to get as much money out of the time as possible. They have mechanics working in Altoona, and have had for more than a year, who have not averaged $11 a week, while we have common laborers that have got twice that amount. I could tell you something about that if you wanted to know. It is a very unfair system, and Mr. Creighton, if he wanted to, could tell you much more about it than I can.

But I know of a specific case where an engineer up there who was very prominent, and I will give his name if you care for it, because I have nothing to conceal in regard to this matter. There is an engineer up there very prominent who had a brother, and this brother wanted to get in the transportation department, so that he goes to the master mechanic there for a position in the shops, and he tells this man that he did not expect anything but laborer's pay, which is 16¢, and he finally gets this man a job as a laborer in the shop, and the first two weeks he draws $52.

10162. REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Acting Chairman AISHTON. At this point the commission will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

(Whereupon the commission adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, Thursday, May 6, 1915.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. H. PIERCE—Continued.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, May 6, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh; Commissioners Garretson, Harriman, Lennon, Weinstock, Ballard, Aishton.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Pierce, take that chair, please. Mr. Weinstock would like to ask you a few questions.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were telling us yesterday, Mr. Pierce, that you did succeed in getting a hall in Altoona?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that you had overflow meetings?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And how large an attendance did you have at your meetings?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, we had them every night, you understand; some nights larger than others.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the capacity of your hall?

Mr. PIERCE. Six or seven hundred.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it was generally full?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the character of the people that composed your audience?

Mr. PIERCE. Chiefly shopmen.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Employees of the Pennsylvania?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Practically all railroad people?

Mr. PIERCE. All railroad people, with perhaps an individual straggler, came in. Of course, I could not tell every individual man who came in.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the nature of the meetings, Mr. Pierce?

Mr. PIERCE. For organizing purposes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were the doors open to the public?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And who would the speakers be, generally?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, as a rule, myself; sometimes I had others; I had other organizers there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In brief, what was the nature of the appeal you made to the audience?

Mr. PIERCE. I wanted them to organize.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you point out what the advantages of organization would be?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And can you brief them; just what, in substance, you would say?

Mr. PIERCE. As a rule, men who are organized get from $1 to $1.25 a day more for the same class of work than the unorganized, and they receive better treatment at the hands of the employer. They have more freedom.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did those men who attended your meetings, Mr. Pierce, and who you say were Pennsylvania employees, as far as you know, did they value their jobs?

Mr. PIERCE. They were very afraid of them; they valued them so highly that it took a long while to educate them to a standard of realizing the worth of organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In fact, they valued them very, very highly?

Mr. PIERCE. I think I said on yesterday, so far as Altoona is concerned, it is a typical railroad center or town, and I doubt but what 95 per cent of the people who live in that town who are working for a livelihood but what are dependent either directly or indirectly on the Pennsylvania Railroad for a livelihood, and not being any manufacturing to any extent there it is awful hard to get a job.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the loss of a job—

Mr. PIERCE (interrupting). The loss of a position means moving.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It would be in the nature almost of a dilemma to lose a job?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; it would. I would like to correct a statement, so far as I saw it in Altoona, about the men owning their homes there. There are a great many railroad men own their homes, but as a rule it is the boss and men in the transportation department, and there are but a small minority of the men that labor for a livelihood own their own homes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were also telling yesterday, Mr. Pierce, about being shadowed and followed by detectives.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did these detectives attend your meetings?

Mr. PIERCE. Why, yes, sir; sometimes they would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was their function, so far as you know? Why did they attend the meetings; what was their purpose?

Mr. PIERCE. To find out who else attended.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did they make a note of those in attendance?

Mr. PIERCE. They would not make any notes, because if they did they would get thrown out, you know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PIERCE. They came there and would attend those meetings in the guise of an employee. The real detective was on the outside, and they would report to him when they went out. This elaborate spying system that they have—there might be a dozen on the inside sitting in different parts of the hall and across the street would be the other fellow, and when they went out they would report to him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The purpose was to find out who attended the meetings?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; they got their names that way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that headquarters would get those names?

Mr. PIERCE. You can readily see that a Pinkerton detective would not know John Brown from Jim Smith unless some one told him. I doubt if there is a detective on the Pennsylvania but what is now carrying my picture in his pocket. They are very dumb, some of them, and they look at a picture and then at you to see if they can distinguish it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think you have testified about in substance that it was the policy of the company to discharge men who either joined the union or encouraged unionism?

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, yes, sir; they discharge them for joining the union. I don't think that the officers themselves would deny that statement if you asked them, and they will tell you honestly, because I have the direct evidence of why they did do it, and I can produce it if you wish.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Of course the men all understand that to become a union man means discharge?

Mr. PIERCE. Those men have tried to be organized many times, and each time there has been internal dissension and disruption and strikes take place, but this time I met with greater success than my predecessors had, to an extent, because they felt that the organization in the transportation department would stay with them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just excuse me a minute; I want to look at some of your testimony. Have you yesterday's testimony here?

Mr. CRANDALL (official reporter). It was turned over to the office.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Undoubtedly there is a difference between your testimony and that of Mr. Atterbury's.

Mr. PIERCE. In regard to what?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your contention is that men were discharged because they joined the union and they would not employ union men knowingly?

Mr. PIERCE. I would not say they would not employ union men; I know union men that work for them, but as soon as they become active—the greatest asset that the Pennsylvania road has to-day is the unorganized men, and they know it, and they don't want them organized. There are two specific reasons: In the first place they would have to pay them more money, and in the second place they could not use them against the transportation men when they request an increase in wages. The greatest asset they have is to tell them to go on strike, that they have men that will fill their places, and they have a system of calling those men into the office and getting them to sign up as engineers, firemen, signalmen, trainmen, or bulls or crooks.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What do you mean by bulls?

Mr. PIERCE. They are detectives.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think that I can not altogether reconcile in my own mind, and perhaps you can make it clear; on the one hand we learn from your statement that the men valued their jobs, and to lose their jobs under the circumstances was almost in the nature of a dilemma, because other employment was not easily found; second, that they knew that the company disapproved of their joining the union; and third, that at these overflow meetings there were detectives present, and the men knew they were present, who recorded their names and handed them to headquarters, and they knew that was a serious menace to them. Now, I can not quite reconcile that situation. If men valued their jobs very highly, and knew that to attend these meetings might mean to them disaster, I can not understand why they would go, and if they did go it would be evidence seemingly that they had nothing to fear.

Mr. PIERCE. Well, maybe I can set you straight on that to a great extent. I don't think that the Pennsylvania Railroad officials object to 5 per cent of their men becoming organized, you understand. Maybe about 10 or 15 per cent, but when they commence to show any great strength, they overthrow their system, and they can wipe them out of existence. It takes quite a while to get their machinery going, although they have it in good repair all of the time. They wait until the proper time comes, and in my case, or in this case, the proper time did come on account of the great calamity and depression in business.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How long did you make your headquarters in Altoona?

Mr. PIERCE. That was just a branch office I had there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And about how much of your time did you put in there?

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, probably about two or three months.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Off and on?

Mr. PIERCE. Practically all of the time, night and day there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, during that time, how many members did you sign up?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, I think at the time I went there there was something between 12,000 and 13,000 men there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Railroad men?

Mr. PIERCE. I mean shopmen. There were more than that number of employees, but there were between 11,000 and 14,000. I can not give you the numerical strength, but 55 or 60 per cent of them were organized.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Between 55 and 60 per cent?

Mr. PIERCE. I would say so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, is it not a sufficiently large percentage from the railroad point of view to make it seem to them as a menace to their interests?

Mr. PIERCE. They certainly do feel it that way. They not only use their employees as spotters, but they used the clergymen, and the board of trade, and all the influential citizens of the town to crush the organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. During what period were you there?

Mr. PIERCE. About the middle of November—you understand when I first went there I was in the employ of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and I carried on the work of organizing both organizations. There were a good many nonunion firemen and enginemen in the city of Altoona, which is the largest terminal in the world for a single railroad, and in organizing these firemen, of course, you could not organize the shopmen in the daytime. I could organize the firemen in the daytime, but the only chance to see the shopmen was at night, and we would hold meetings at night. Now, the shopmen almost exclusively attended those meetings, but many of the transportation men would attend them too, because they were enthused with the idea of having the shopmen organized, and they had been told it was a good thing and to give me all the assistance possible, and they did give me all the assistance possible, and that is what made it a menace to the whole proposition in the end. So they were encouraged to organize by the men in the transportation department, and when the critical time came the men in the transportation department vanished like fog in the sun.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Coming back to my question, what period were you there?

Mr. PIERCE. I went there along about the middle of October or 1st of November.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. October of what year?

Mr. PIERCE. 1913.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. October, 1913?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you remained there about how long?

Mr. PIERCE. Excuse me a moment; I came back to Harrisburg half a dozen times up to the 1st of November, and then I went back there and would be there four or five or six days a week, and maybe one day a week in Harrisburg or some other town on the line, opening up new places. Up until along in March—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). March, 1914?

Mr. PIERCE. I think it was later than that; I think, the 1st of April; and then I was away more or less until the 1st of May, when things began to get serious and they began to discharge men in large numbers, and I had to go from place to place to make investigations to find out why they were discharged or on furlough. I take no exception to the furlough, except the furloughing of old men who had been in the service 25 or 30 years in some cases, and in other cases 10 or 12 or 14 years, and leaving young men only hired a few months in the service doing the same class of work; in fact, they would furlough their mechanics, machinists, and boiler makers and allow the apprentices of those men to run their machines for them for two reasons, and one was that the apprentice got 90 cents a day and the other $3 or $3.50 a day.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you able to keep tab on those discharges in order to determine what percentage of them were union men?

Mr. PIERCE. They got practically all of the union men that they found out about, but many of them they never did know; the detectives were not smart enough to find them out. There were some of them who would come and join and pay their dues on the quiet, or send the dues through the mail, that they did not find out about, but they got all that attended the meetings; they did not miss any of them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you explain in what respect the organization you were endeavoring to bring into life differed from the Debs organization of 20 years ago—the American Railway Union?

Mr. PIERCE. This was a home-rule affair, while the other was not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Explain what you mean by that distinction.

Mr. PIERCE. I will try to. It had the same principle to a certain extent, only it went further.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In order that we may better understand it for the purpose of the record, will you give us a brief outline of the aims and purposes of the American Railway Union, and then an outline of your union?

Mr. PIERCE. The American Railway Union was an organization that was never perfected. It had this sole purpose, the organization of the men into one craft instead of into many.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very much as the I. W. W. advocate?

Mr. PIERCE. No; I think you have a misconception of the I. W. W., so far as the industrial union in the I. W. W., it is much different. The I. W. W. believes that all people ought to belong to the same union, while we believe that all people who work at a certain trade should belong to a certain union.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You believe in craft union?

Mr. PIERCE. No; they are nothing but coffin clubs.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I may be confused.

Mr. PIERCE. I will set you right. You understand this is a new movement. You understand what the United Mine Workers are, and how they are organized? From the engineer to the boy who picks slate, every man that works in the mine belongs to the same union; but they do not go out and take in the farmer, but every man that worked in the mine in any capacity belongs. Now, we believe, I believe, and many of us believe, 90 per cent of the men on our railroads to-day believe, that all of the men who work for railroads ought to belong to one union, so they could have power and strength. We see the amalgamation of wealth, and we see 110 railroads which comprised originally the Pennsylvania system—used to be 110 individual railroads, with 110 presidents and 110 superintendents and general managers, and all that; we see them amalgamated into a large system, and it was only done for two specific purposes; that is, so that they might have a system governing those roads that was uniform; and it was also cheaper to pay Mr. Rea $75,000 a year than to pay 110 different presidents $10,000 each, and the policy could be carried out easier and much more systematically.

We believe that if labor is ever going to accomplish anything going up against that mighty wealth, that they must be organized in some way. That is what I believe, and many others—90 per cent of the men working on the railways—but they are not allowed their freedom. Don't think it is all the railroad company's; it is not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, let me make sure that I clearly catch your point. From what you now say I would understand that there were three different ideas along the line of labor organizations; the American Federation of labor, for example, believe that in railroad work the machinists should have a union and the boiler makers should have a union——

Mr. PIERCE (interrupting). Believe in autonomy; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; and believe all these unions should be federated. Your idea is that the men employed in railways should have one joint union——

Mr. PIERCE (interrupting). You understand——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Pardon me a moment. I think we will make time to see if I have got your thought correctly.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Where you and the American Federation of Labor differentiate, as nearly as I can make out, that they would have the machinists organize a separate union and would have the boiler makers organize a separate union, and you, on the other hand, would have all the men employed in the railway service in one common union?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Regardless of how they are employed, and so with the other large industrial bodies of employees.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; and use them politically as well as from an industrial standpoint.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Now, was that undertaking on the part of yourself and your associates successful?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes. It was a great success to start with, until the elements got to working. You understand what I mean by "elements"?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No.

Mr. PIERCE. I mean the railroad officials, with the spy and bull system at the beginning, and the craft unions with their jealousy. They immediately cooperated with the railroads.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes. Why?

Mr. PIERCE. Why? Because they would lose their meal ticket—the heads of the organization would.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, on the theory under your plan there would be one set of officers where there are now many sets of officers of these unions.

Mr. PIERCE. Why, there were 13 different crafts—craft unions of large capacity, taking in railroad employees, with 63 vice presidents and 13 grand lodge headquarters to support, and rent to pay and clerks to hire. If they had been under my plan they would have been only one.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that aroused the antagonism of the craft-union officials?

Mr. PIERCE. I imagine that green-eyed jealousy crept in.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I suppose for the same reason that animated the craft-union officials to oppose your movement you and your associates would oppose the I. W. W. movement, because that would be still further concentration, wouldn't it?

Mr. PIERCE. I want to say, so far as the I. W. W. is concerned, that I can not see where a man who is working on a street-car line or a painter on an outside building has anything to do with a man in the railroad work.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, what would the same workman in the railroad employment have to do with the locomotive engineer?

Mr. PIERCE. Because he paints his cab.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, what would the office clerks have to do with the locomotive engineer?

Mr. PIERCE. Because he makes out his time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think there is an interlocking of interests?

Mr. PIERCE. Can not help but be. They are working for the same company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let me further understand. Was it your understanding to have simply the employees of one company organized in a union or all the railway employees of the country organized as a union?

Mr. PIERCE. I believe the railroad employees ought to be organized into a national organization. There can never be success or tranquillity amongst employees until that is done.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, if your plan had been carried out you would have railroad employees of the Pennsylvania organized into one union and the Southern Railway employees organized into another union, and so forth?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And then have these unions affiliated?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That would be your scheme?

Mr. PIERCE. That would be my plan.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is the present status of your organization, your union?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, I want to say to you that they pretty near fought me out of my clothes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is the organization still in existence?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; but it is going out of existence shortly. I am going to turn it over to another organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you do not attribute its failure to any inherent weakness in the underlying principles?

Mr. PIERCE. None whatever.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You attribute the failure to the antagonism on the part of the railroad companies and the craft unions?

Mr. PIERCE. Absolutely. The men want it, but the fear of the railroads and the domineering effect that the craft unions have over their constituency makes it too much of a fight.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Lennon would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Pierce, does the miners' organization, to your knowledge, belong to the federation?

Mr. PIERCE. The American Federation of Labor?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes. Do they deny their right to an industrial organization?

Mr. PIERCE. They would not dare to. They would break the federation. They are stronger than the federation itself.

Commissioner LENNON. Are there any other organizations that are industrial in character in the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; not entirely; because as soon as they do, the same as the steam fitters or the car workers, immediately Mr. Gompers revokes their charter. They would not have a dual organization, just the same as the two organizations here of the railroad telegraphers—the O. R. T. and the O. R. T. D. A. & S.—could not affiliate with the American Federation of Labor because it is a rival organization.

Commissioner LENNON. Are you aware of any charters which Mr. Gompers, President Gompers, ever revoked?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir; the International Association of Car Workers.

Commissioner LENNON. You say that was done by President Gompers?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, I was present and did not see it that way.

Mr. PIERCE. Well, maybe you were not looking that way.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, that may be. Did any strike or lockout take place under the auspices of your organization during its continuance on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, I said it was more of a lockout than it was of a strike, through their spying system. I explained that yesterday. They laid off the men and suspended them until there was practically no one working.

Commissioner LENNON. The result of it was that a large number of men at a number of different points vacated their jobs. Was that either because they were discharged or because of their own volition?

Mr. PIERCE. There were not so very many men discharged. They would be furloughed. They would say you are furloughed. The supervisor would tell the trackmen, and the master mechanic and superintendent would tell the machinists or boiler makers that they were furloughed, and they would say they were going to retrench, and so there would be 600 men furloughed at Harrisburg and 2,500 men at Altoona; and so on, over the system.

Commissioner LENNON. Did you ever encounter any evidence that would indicate that members of your organization were bribed to turn down your organization or to use their influence against its extension, or anything of that kind?

Mr. PIERCE. The word "bribe"—just make it a little clearer.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, paid money or given better positions—

Mr. PIERCE (interrupting). Well, they got their jobs back, if you call that bribing—if a man's position is worth anything, you can call it bribing. I never knew any money being paid to the members of the organization. They don't have to. They paid that to the transportation representatives.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you still belong to the brotherhood—

Mr. PIERCE. Of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen? Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Garretson would like to ask you a question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You referred a moment ago, in response to a question as to the apprehension of men in regard to losing their positions—in your contact with men, especially unorganized men, have you or have you not found that the average laboring man does have intense apprehension in regard to losing his job or his employment, without any regard to whether the job is good, bad, or indifferent, and dreads nonemployment?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, if there is a fellow outside the door there knocking to have your job, you are going to lock the door and keep him out if you can; and when business is good that is only one time to organize men; I have been in the game a long time, and it is when business is good; and if business is bad a fellow hesitates about organizing, because there is a fellow outside knocking on the door.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The real value of a job, whether it is good wages or a reasonable wage or good or bad conditions, cuts little figure in it?

Mr. PIERCE. The average workingman is too dumb to realize what he is being paid; it is the wife that is running things, anyway.

Commissioner AISHTON. I think you said in reply to a question by Mr. Weinstock that your organization was successful because it felt that it had the transportation employees back of it?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is, the men felt that?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. How did they get their idea, Mr. Pierce?

Mr. PIERCE. Well, by word of mouth, they told everyone that was there. Mr. Lee—I ought to call him brother, but I don't because it is a disgrace. W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, come to Harrisburg on the 30th day of November, 1913, and there at a joint meeting of all classes of transportation men made this declaration; he says: "Now, in regard to the shopmen's organization, if ever the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. discharges one of those men, we have 135,000 men in the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen; we have three and a half million dollars in our treasury, and we will use every dollar of it and every man against them if they dare discharge those men." That was in the afternoon. In the evening, at an open meeting in White Hall, where the shopmen were present, he reiterated those words, and said that while he could not speak authentically for the grand lodge officers, that he was sure he voiced their true sentiment, and "they will stand by you." And I will say to you, Mr. Aishton, that it is the cause of all this unrest and all of this trouble, because Mr. Lee's own men, by this declaration, they went out and encouraged the shopmen to organize and encouraged them to strike. I was the one element and one man that stood with them for days and days pleading with them to not strike, but the trainmen would say: "Strike, we will go with you." And strike they did; there could nothing hold them; and if there is a man ever guilty of high treason to his country and fellow man it is W. G. Lee, and if he voiced the sentiments of his grand lodge officers they are equally guilty and accessories to the crime. He has caused suicides and the loss of property, and the breaking up of homes.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Pierce, at the time of this organization I believe you said you were an organizer for the B. of L. F. & E.?

Mr. PIERCE. I was; yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Were any representations of that character made by you at those meetings, or to those men, that the transportation men were behind you?

Mr. PIERCE. I made many declarations along this line: That if they would organize there was no question but what they would have affiliation and federation with others in the movement, and I had the greatest assurance in making that declaration.

Commissioner AISHTON. That was the real one or the most potent argument you used, was it?

Mr. PIERCE. I can not say the most potent, but one of them.

Commissioner AISHTON. You can not judge of that?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; I could not read the other fellow's mind.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, Mr. Pierce, just for the matter of the record, are you still engaged in the work as organizer of the B. L. F. & E.?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; I am not.

Commissioner AISHTON. You severed your connection with that work?

Mr. PIERCE. On the 23d day of March, 1914, they requested me; they wrote and made me an offer; they wrote me two letters that day, one to increase my wages, to have me come back and take charge of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; our organization was not recognized on the L. & N. since the 1894 strike, as you well know, and they insisted on my returning to the service of the organization; but, Mr. Aishton, I never ran away from a fire yet when I was holding the hose, and I did not in this case.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, Mr. Pierce, this organization of yours takes in all classes of employees on the Pennsylvania?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Brakemen?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Clerks?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Telegraph operators?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And all the various shop trades?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And, as I understand from your reply to Mr. Weinstock, if there is a difference between the company and any class of these employees would be a matter for the whole; that is the underlying principle?

Mr. PIERCE. It was to give them power to cope with the powers that be.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. Pierce; you may be excused permanently now.

Commissioner AISHTON. Before Mr. Long is placed on the stand I would suggest that the record in this case attacking Mr. Lee be handed to Mr. Lee, an officer of one of the transportation organizations, as he is referred to in it.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Stenographer, make a copy of that part of the testimony referring to Mr. Lee, and see that he gets a copy of it.

Take the chair, Mr. Long.

TESTIMONY OF MR. S. C. LONG.

Chairman WALSH. Your name, please?

Mr. LONG. S. C. Long.

Chairman WALSH. And what is your business?

Mr. LONG. General manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you occupied that position, Mr. Long?

Mr. LONG. Since March of 1911.

Chairman WALSH. Where is your office?

Mr. LONG. Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. What other positions have you held with the Pennsylvania Co.?

Mr. LONG. I was chainman, rodman, then levelman, transit man, and assistant engineer of construction, assistant supervisor maintenance of way, supervisor maintenance of way, division engineer, division superintendent on different divisions, general superintendent of the western Pennsylvania division at Pittsburgh, and in 1911 general manager at Pittsburgh, and in that position since then.

Chairman WALSH. What has been the general attitude of your company toward national labor unions, including those affiliated with the A. F. of L.?

Mr. LONG. I don't know that I can add anything further than was stated yesterday in this book, which I should say is a composite opinion and statement of facts.

Chairman WALSH. The book introduced by Mr. Atterbury?

Mr. LONG. And on page 58, under the fourth article which he read to the honorable commission yesterday, is the position taken in regard to the policies of the company, and I don't presume you care to have it read again.

Chairman WALSH. That contains your opinion, does it?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; it was put in the record.

Chairman WALSH. It is in the record.

Commissioner AISHTON. It was in the pamphlet in the record, and so was the part that Mr. Atterbury read.

Mr. LONG. That fully expresses my views, our views, I will say. I am only a brick in a big wall, you understand.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask you some of the specific questions that we want a little light on. I wish you would give us the details, Mr. Long, of your police system, including the detectives; that is, how they are employed, what sort of an examination is held of them, what inquiry into their character, and the formation of those who are uniformed police, and the duties that they perform, either those who are private, and the duties they perform, and the office out of which they work, your office, or whatever it is?

Mr. LONG. You will understand, Mr. Walsh, that necessarily I must have assistance to do some of the work in this big corporation, which has over 12,000 miles of railroad and 150,000 employees, when we are doing normal business, and consequently a great many of these things have to be carefully prepared and set forth and assigned to some other person, and these particular duties that you are asking me about, as to the details, were anticipated as being the information desired by the commission, and for that purpose we brought with us our superintendent of police, who is also subpoenaed by Mr. Chenery, to give you in connection with this book what is the organization of the police service. If you care, I will submit that as an exhibit.

Chairman WALSH. We would rather take it up with the man that has the knowledge.

Mr. LONG. This gives the organization of the police system, and requirements for employment and rules and regulations and instructions and admonitions.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any detectives that work directly through your office?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have knowledge of the preparation made by the company for industrial warfare—that is, the ammunition you have on hand, if any, firearms or other weapons, where they are kept, and the like of that—or do you have some one else here that knows that?

Mr. LONG. The superintendent of police.

Chairman WALSH. What was the Luknow encampment of 1903?

Mr. LONG. I don't know it under that particular name. I don't recall having heard that particular name.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask some one else.

Mr. LONG. Does it refer to the labor trouble at Harrisburg particularly; 1913?

Chairman WALSH. 1913.

Mr. HARPER (superintendent of police on the Pennsylvania system). If he is in the dark as to that question, I can assist him.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. HARPER. That was the time that we gathered the men at Harrisburg.

Mr. LONG. The strike of 1914?

Mr. HARPER. No, sir; it had nothing to do with any strike; it was a picnic of the employees.

Mr. LONG. I was in the dark as to the Luknow encampment; I never heard the term before. I gathered from your question that it was some character of a strike.

Chairman WALSH. I will ask the question of some one else.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; Mr. Harper indicates knowledge of the affair.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you have any organization by which influence is sought to be had upon legislation, particularly I would like to inquire into your campaign for the repeal of the full-crew law? How were the petitions circulated?

Mr. LONG. Everything was done openly and in a frank way, to solicit public opinion in favor of a law which we felt was very unfair and unjust, and the only way to have it repealed was to acquaint the people with what it was. We recognized the fact that in a matter like that the layman won't read the details, he won't read the law, and we felt it was about the only weapon we had to appeal to the public, and we appealed to the public in an open, frank, and free manner, without any concealment of any kind, or with any mystery about the matter at all. Simply myself and every other employee asking his neighbor, after explaining the situation to him thoroughly, from his viewpoint, and his present knowledge, after having the matter explained to him, if he could not honorably use his influence and vote against it, and if he said "no," that was the end; it had to be; but if he said "yes," we felt we had performed our mission well.

Chairman WALSH. Well, were circulars gotten out from your office?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know who circulated them?

Mr. LONG. The facts are that the railroads in the State of Pennsylvania—

Chairman WALSH. Pennsylvania Railroad, did they employ people to circulate those petitions?

Mr. LONG. No more than any other railroad in the State.

Chairman WALSH. You employed people, then, did you?

Mr. LONG. The railroads offered the services of officers, and I think there are 14 or 15 railroads in the State.

Chairman WALSH. In common with the others?

Mr. LONG. And they met together and decided one representative from each road would make too large a committee to deal with the public, and to give the information, so a smaller committee was formed, representing the 14 railroads. There was no individual railroad doing it, it was all done over the signature of Mr. O'Donnell, chairman of the committee. There was the Lehigh Valley Railroad, the Reading, Lackawanna, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and others. Perhaps some one else could name the other.

Chairman WALSH. Then, I gather that the Pennsylvania did not do this in its own corporate capacity?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; it was done by every railroad in the State, and I think, including a little railroad down in York County about 3 miles long.

Chairman WALSH. Did your company issue any instructions to its men to stay away from the State capitol at any time when legislation was up affecting them?

Mr. LONG. Stay away?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; remain away when questions were up—legislative matters were up that might affect them?

Mr. LONG. I could not say that any instructions were issued for them to go there or stay away.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of any instances where the company or its officers ever disciplined men for expressing sentiments not in accord with its policy with reference to the full-crew bill or any legislation?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; that would be unfair.

Chairman WALSH. Does the company in any way interest itself in the policies of the men—that is, in regard to their own matters—so far as legislation is concerned?

Mr. LONG. I should say, no, sir; unless it was well known to be the movement of a very large body of citizens endeavoring to pass a law which might be thought too expensive or an unfair law—not particularly so to the employees—no more so to the brakemen than to the farmers living alongside of the railroad.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of a law do you have in mind?

Mr. LONG. Well, the headlight law.

Chairman WALSH. What was that, briefly?

Mr. LONG. Well, they wanted a particular kind of headlight, which the experienced doctors and experts demonstrated was not scientific and was not worth much to us, and, therefore, we told everybody, the farmer, the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker, that we did not think it was a good law, and that we would be glad if he would ask his representative to help repeal it.

Chairman WALSH. How did you do that? How did you get to the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, etc.?

Mr. LONG. We just told our officers, just told our neighbors. I told my neighbors all around me in my community.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any order issued or any concerted action on the part of the company's officers toward it?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You just acted as individuals and said you did not think it was good, and just told any other citizens, but did the company take any action?

Mr. LONG. I would not say any railroad company did, but so far as I know not the Pennsylvania or the Reading.

Chairman WALSH. What action did your company take?

Mr. LONG. All of the railroads came to the conclusion that the headlight bill should be modified, or, which in its proposed form, was unnecessarily expensive. Each railroad had its motive power officers make an investigation to ascertain whether that headlight, reflected too much candlepower and whether it was or was not scientifically a good headlight.

Chairman WALSH. Did your company do anything specifically with reference to that headlight legislation; did you issue any orders or circulars to your men?

Mr. LONG. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you address any meetings of the men?

Mr. LONG. I think not, so far as I know. It was simply a matter of conversation at casual meetings. We told our railroad neighbors that it was not a good law; there was nothing that was not open and aboveboard, and no mystery about it at all.

Chairman WALSH. Did your company pay any part of the expenses of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. during any of the early years of its existence or at any time?

Mr. LONG. To the best of my knowledge, no, sir; but it was formed a good many years before I came to Philadelphia; but I never spent a cent.

Chairman WALSH. Did your company pay any part of Mr. Austin's salary?

Mr. LONG. To the best of my knowledge, no; but since I have been general manager, absolutely no.

Chairman WALSH. Did the company or any of the officers of the company guarantee to pay or pay any part of the printing bills of the organization?

Mr. LONG. To the best of my knowledge, never a cent.

Chairman WALSH. Did they contribute or have they from time to time contributed to the magazine known as the Railroad Wire and Signal?

Mr. LONG. If there was ever a cent spent in that way, I never heard of it.

Chairman WALSH. Is the Mutual Benefit Association favored by your company?

Mr. LONG. It is an employees association, you understand, with which, so far as I know, very few officers are connected; there may be some, but if there are, I do not know who they are. The most I can say about it is that we have not antagonized it; but, to the best of my knowledge, outside of the employees themselves, it has not been favored—I would say it is no baby of the railroads.

Chairman WALSH. Please state what sort of an organization it is.

Mr. LONG. I could not tell you, except it is a mutual benefit organization in which the insurance features and the benefits are good so far as I read the by-laws. The organization is just what its name indicates—a mutual aid association.

Chairman WALSH. When was it formed?

Mr. LONG. I do not know; I think about five years ago.

Chairman WALSH. Are men permitted to work for it on the company's time?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know the attitude of the transportation brotherhoods toward it?

Mr. LONG. I can not say that I do; but I believe there are quite a number in it; I am so advised, but I have no facts.

Chairman WALSH. What is your attitude toward mediation and conciliation in matters of dispute between the company and its employees?

Mr. LONG. Well, Mr. Walsh, if you had as many worries about labor, you would welcome almost any kind of mediation, good, bad, or indifferent. What we have to-day is very excellent in its way, but I do hope the result of your combined wisdom, gentlemen, will be to improve on it, because the railroad officials throughout the country to-day, with their long years of experience they have waded through to achieve their positions, can not exercise their wit—can not use their time and give proper consideration to the questions pertaining to the professions they love, on account of these questions. If we had a high-class board of mediation and conciliation on whom Job could unload his burden, all would welcome it very much.

Chairman WALSH. When did you have your last strike on the Pennsylvania road?

Mr. LONG. Well, if you would call the efforts of your eleemosynary friend, Mr. Pierce, a strike, it was in 1914.

Chairman WALSH. And prior to that time, when?

Mr. LONG. For the information of the commission in the event of their asking just such a question as you have now asked me, we prepared——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). If you could just give that offhand, it is leading up to another question and might illuminate that. Did you have a strike in 1913?

Mr. LONG. November, 1913.

Chairman WALSH. Now, at that time——

Mr. LONG (interrupting). You understand, Mr. Walsh, in asking me whether there was a strike in 1914, I said that if you cared to so denominate the efforts of Mr. Pierce in achieving what was apparently a flourishing organization, which he admitted was not very flourishing now, as a strike, then that was a strike in 1914.

Chairman WALSH. You mentioned that; we are now speaking of 1913.

Mr. LONG. We had a real strike in 1914.

Chairman WALSH. What page is that found on?

Mr. LONG. Page 29.

Chairman WALSH. How many men were involved in that strike, please?

Mr. LONG. To be precise as I know how, and I was on the ground at the time, there were 665.

Chairman WALSH. From what department?

Mr. LONG. There were 665 road and yard freight men on the Monongahela division; I think 14 of them were sick, or reported sick, and would leave 651; I think about 651 of them left the service. Every man left the service, except those that were sick. May I ask to be corrected as to whether it was one man or not?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Do you remember whether one man was left, John?

A VOICE. [Mr. Harper, superintendent of police] "One man."

Chairman WALSH. What page is that found on?

Mr. LONG. Page 29 in this other book, which we have prepared and from which I will read, "A History of the Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad."

Chairman WALSH. Have we been provided with copies of this before, "A History of the Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad"?

Mr. LONG. I am not sure about that.

Chairman WALSH. Then you may refer to this book and answer the question.

Mr. LONG. This is given in detail and with preciseness, and gives the meat of the whole thing on pages 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and to the middle of page 36.

Chairman WALSH. What was the result of that strike?

Mr. LONG. The result of that strike was that to-day, to the best of my knowledge, outside of the 14 men that were sick at the time these men walked out, a more efficient force is operating that division to-day, notwithstanding the fact that among those who walked out—who refused to work, I will say—some were in the service 15 or 20 years.

Chairman WALSH. Did any of them return to work?

Mr. LONG. Only those who were ill. Every individual man was advised, after repeated warnings, that after 2 o'clock a. m. of a certain day—and my memory is that it was Monday morning—we had patience with them from Friday and over Saturday and Sunday by reason of our ability to hold back freight. You understand no passenger men were involved in this and the passenger trains ran as usual, and no passenger schedule was missed. Notice was given to every individual man of the 650 or 652 that they must come to work at 2 o'clock or report for duty at 2 or 6 or 8 o'clock, whichever hour it was, and that if they did not report at that time by their action they had severed their service with the company.

Chairman WALSH. With what organization were these men affiliated?

Mr. LONG. So far as I know, with none. It was one of those unfortunate things which seemed to have no rhyme or reason. You may recall in the Bible when Moses went up into the mountain and came back and the people worshipped a serpent. No one could find out how it came about; and it did not last long, either.

Chairman WALSH. You mean they did not give any list of grievances?

Mr. LONG. No; I do not think they even thought of them until three or four days afterwards.

Chairman WALSH. You received no complaints at all?

Mr. LONG. Absolutely none. A couple of them got hot under the collar and quit, and it spread like lightning.

Chairman WALSH. You gave them until a certain time on Monday to return?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I think it was Monday, if my memory serves me right. Do you care if I read that?

Chairman WALSH. You might read that part of it.

Mr. LONG (reading): "Trainmen's strike, Monongahela division. Because of the general depression existing throughout the country the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and affiliated lines began in November, 1913, to reduce operating expenses wherever possible without detriment to the service, so as to offset, so far as practicable, the continued decrease in traffic and consequent reduction in gross earnings."

I presume you remember that just about that time not only our business but all the business in the country began to get "on the toboggan," and we had to prepare for it; we could not make a dollar and tried to save a dollar.

"These reductions in expenses were effected, very largely, by dropping from the service employees not actually necessary for handling the reduced traffic. As a means of securing further reductions in expenses the officials of the Monongahela division decided on March 18, 1914, to take off one brakeman from yard crews when possible to do so without detriment to the service. This reduction left an engineer, fireman, conductor, and two brakemen to constitute the crew."

You notice that we still adhered to the Pennsylvania law.

"Following the regularly recognized method at the Thirtieth Street yard, Pittsburgh, one brakeman's name was taken of three crews. When the 6 p. m. yard crews—two of those affected—reported for duty and found that they were to work with one less brakeman the conductors and brakemen refused to work. Later two road crews which were about ready to leave the Thirtieth Street yard refused to take out their trains, because the flagmen and brakemen refused to work until the third brakeman was restored to the yard crews. The conductor and brakemen of the 7 p. m. yard crew—the third crew affected—at the Thirtieth Street yard also refused to work."

To give you a little better idea of that peculiar situation, Mr. Walsh and gentlemen, the river here flows from south to north; it flows into the Ohio River at Pittsburgh. This railroad is on the west bank of the Monongahela River for about 60 miles, and the Thirtieth Street yards are at Pittsburgh. The bulk of the traffic originates up in the coal and coke regions, and the cars are brought down loaded and the empties go up. That is done by the road crews, those that run from Pittsburgh up to the coal and coke region and return.

"This from the railroad company's standpoint, was the actual cause of the strike which followed, although the men involved in the strike claimed they had other grievances which had been under consideration with the company for some time past and which were then in process of adjustment, but which could not be finally adjusted because they were, in a measure, dependent upon rules and regulations contained in arbitration awards handed down by arbitrators appointed to adjust petitions made by the engineers, firemen, conductors, and trainmen upon eastern railroads for increases in wages and improvement in working conditions."

Chairman WALSH. Could you state at this point what those latter grievances were?

Mr. LONG. I recall one, the others have gotten away from me.

Chairman WALSH. What was the one?

Mr. LONG. There was one grievance; you understand that while this is a brief or summary or synopsis, necessarily all of the details can not be inserted, but one of the grievances which they claimed afterwards—this was not done until three or four days afterwards, when they happened to think there were other grievances which were in course of adjustment in the regularly prescribed way—was that of freight conductors, engineers, and firemen, in which they claimed the rates of pay for road work which was being paid on the basis of yard work. The conductors and trainmen insisted that we pay them yard wages, because they are higher than road wages. The engineers and firemen, through their chairman, claimed that I—this question was brought up while I was general superintendent—insisted that I treat their work as road work, because a road engineer and a road fireman got more money than a yard engineer; in other words, the train crew wanted a yard proposition while the engine crew wanted a road proposition. That was one of the grievances.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Should that not be corrected, and was it not that the trainmen demanded yardmen's pay and the conductors, engineers, and firemen demanded road pay?

Mr. LONG. Yes; you are right; it is a penny an hour higher.

Chairman WALSH. So there was a grievance growing out of taking one member of the crew off, and also about the compensation of the men?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; a grievance about the compensation of the men, but that was being adjusted in the regular way; it was being adjusted or attempted to be adjusted by the chairman of the O. R. C.; the B. R. T., the B. L. F. & E., and the B. L. E.; these four chairman a few months previous had taken this up and it was that time probably before the general superintendent. But three or four days after the strike they had to hunt up a reason and they brought in this grievance, which would have been adjusted in an orderly way.

Chairman WALSH. With reference to the meeting you speak of there, where the division officials met 30 or 40 of the trainmen; when was that, before or after the strike?

Mr. LONG. That was immediately—it was right when the men went off; it was right at the Thirtieth Street yard, and they called the men right in.

Chairman WALSH. That was before the 30 or 40 went out?

Mr. LONG. Yes; this transpired possibly the first few hours.

Chairman WALSH. You say you gave them until a certain time to come back, and that if they did not come back their places would be filled?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I will come to that in a minute.

"The division officials met the men involved for a discussion of the question of removing one brakeman from the yard crews. About 30 or 40 trainmen, consisting of members of the Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen's Union of North America, and nonunion men were present at this meeting. They insisted that they could not be represented by a committee, but that each man should act for himself. Because of this attitude, no definite arrangements with the men could be made, and noting that a number of the speakers were members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen the general chairman of that organization on the Pennsylvania lines east was communicated with by telephone. He advised the representatives of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen that they were violating the regulations of that organization in refusing to work and that they should return to their accustomed duties and take up, with their superior officers, the question of adjusting grievances in the usual and orderly manner.

"The men, however, refused to abide by his advice or any influence he could bring to bear."

I will state right there that these chairmen, naturally, have in each of their lodges a certain number of men who stand above the rest—conservative, careful, loyal employees—loyal to their organization and loyal to the company; and these chairmen call on that class of men to help them cool off the hot-headed ones who will not listen, and that is what is meant by "any influence he could bring to bear."

"Later, however, they agreed to return to work with a full crew of three brakemen, as before, and have the subject considered at a meeting to be held on March 19—they to be represented by a committee—with the understanding that the members of the 6 p. m. yard crews who originally refused to work would not be allowed to work that night. The meeting with the men, scheduled for March 19, was not held until March 20, because of the inability of the general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen to reach Pittsburgh. At this meeting the men contended that the White Hall branch crews could not safely operate with less than a conductor and three brakemen on account of the numerous grade crossings and heavy grades, and after some discussion the superintendent decided upon the following instructions:

"In the case of crews consisting of five men, cars pushed ahead of engine northward between Twenty-second and Twenty-first street yard should be limited to five loads or eight empties. When pulling down or pulling up any number of cars should be hauled with crew consisting of five men.

"It is the intention to operate the White Hall branch with an independent crew, day and night, consisting of the same number of men as at present—that is, four men besides engineman and fireman—but if a crew consisting of only three men besides engineman and fireman—that is, a five-man crew—then cars should be limited to five loads or eight empties northward; but southward any number of cars."

I might state to you, in order to get the geographical peculiarity of this White Hall Railroad, that the railroad is one-half of a mile from the river bank at Thirtieth Street. This White Hall branch is a branch connecting the main line of the Monongahela division with the industries immediately on the bank of the river. The railroad itself does not exceed a mile or a mile and one-eighth long.

Chairman WALSH. Were you present at this conference with the men before the strike?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

(The pamphlet from which the witness read, entitled "History of Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad," was submitted in printed form.)

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Long, I am going to ask you some questions, to see if I can not shorten—

Mr. LONG (interrupting). If you will permit me, I will soon be through with it and anticipate anything you can say on the subject because this is the whole story.

Chairman WALSH. Let me see if I can put a few questions here and if I can not save you—

Mr. LONG. I prefer to answer my own way.

Chairman WALSH. I prefer to ask you a few questions that will be very short, and may save time. I was going to ask you some questions about how the book was gotten up, and save you perhaps some little time. If you insist, however, you may—

Mr. LONG (interrupting). Yes; I prefer to read it and get it in the record.

Chairman WALSH. How long is it going to be?

Mr. LONG. Three minutes.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. LONG (reading):

"This was accepted by the men, who then took up the question of operation in flat yards, contending for a full crew, the same as on the White Hall branch, but as similar conditions did not prevail, the company would not agree to restore the brakemen on crews in flat yards. The general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, recognizing the prerogative of the superintendent to determine the number of men in a crew, again advised the men to return to work. In the meantime efforts were made by division officials and others to persuade the men to continue at work and later adjust their grievances upon the merits of the case; but when the men reported for work on the night of March 20, and found that the third brakeman was not to be placed on crews operating in flat yards, they again refused to work and declared a strike.

"The strike spread rapidly on the night of March 20, and practically all points on the Monongahela division were affected by the following morning. The general chairman for the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburgh, of the Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen went to Pittsburgh and issued notices to all their members that the strike had been illegally called, since the rules of their organizations, as well as the organization of the Switchmen's Union of North America, provided that a strike could only be called after a referendum vote of all members, in which at least two-thirds must vote in favor of a strike, and such strike could only be called by the chief executive of the organization voting.

"The strike spread to other classes of employees, and many engineers, firemen, signalmen, clerks, and yardmasters were strongly in sympathy with the strikers, some of whom left the service and others reluctantly rendered the least service they could.

"On March 24 a committee of engineers and firemen volunteered to intercede with the superintendent in behalf of the striking trainmen, and the superintendent agreed that if the men, then out of service, would report for duty during the day of March 24 they would be called for service when trains were ready and would be restored to their former positions without prejudice, and that their grievances could be taken up by their regular organization committee, in the usual way, for prompt consideration. The reply of the strikers to this offer was that they could not accept it until after a meeting had been held, although it appears that the offer was not generally promulgated among the trainmen. After the committee of engineers and firemen interceded with the superintendent in behalf of the striking trainmen, the engineers and firemen made no further efforts in behalf of the trainmen's case, but, on the other hand, assisted wherever possible in teaching the new men their duties.

"At the start of the strike, efforts were made to recruit trainmen from other divisions of the system who had been relieved on account of reduction in force. In this way many men were secured to fill the positions vacated by the strikers. In fact the president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen advised members of that brotherhood who were out of work to go to Pittsburgh to take positions vacated by the strikers. A number of so-called strike breakers were also employed, but because of their lack of knowledge of train operation were of very little use to the company. Adequate commissaries were established at various points for feeding and housing the men, and meals and lodging were furnished free at these commissaries until May 1, when a charge of $4 for 21 meals and 5 cents per bed per day was made, all commissaries being discontinued by July 1.

"Because the company secured experienced trainmen from other divisions of the system, the strike really ended on March 28, after which there was little interruption to the service.

"During the progress of the strike the sympathy of the citizens, tradespeople, and borough officials along the division was strongly in favor of the strikers. In some cases the merchants refused to sell goods to employees who had taken the place of strikers, and a favorite method of harassing both the company and the new employees was to stop trains within the borough limits by getting on the cars and setting hand brakes or turning the angle cocks of air brakes. When the trains would come to a stop the borough officials would arrest the trainmen for blocking the crossings, and at the hearings the men would be heavily fined. Upon advice of our solicitors these cases were appealed, and in many of them the decision was reversed and the fines remitted. The strikers and sympathizers also interfered with the handling of traffic by releasing hand brakes on cars on sidings, permitting them to move toward main tracks and be derailed. In one case a serious accident resulted in which a fireman, engineer, and a trainman were injured. Various attempts were made to wreck trains by setting signals incorrectly, placing material in frogs and switch points along the rails, but very little damage resulted from these attempts.

Members of the railroad company's police department were sent to the Monongahela division to maintain order, protect the company's property and the men on duty.

"Considerable hostility was shown toward the train-service organizations from the start. When they refused to help the strikers and took action to expel them from their organizations and later helped to fill their places, the strikers organized the Industrial Railway Union, with the intention of disrupting the four train-service organizations. This new union embraced all classes of railroad employees, except those who have authority to employ and discharge men. The new union published a weekly paper called "The Railroader," in which they attacked the officials of the railroad company, officers of the Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, or any other individuals who held the ill will of the strikers. The new organization was short-lived and was practically defunct by November 1 because of nonpayment of dues.

"On May 7 a committee consisting of nine of the strike leaders called upon the general superintendent to ascertain under what conditions the men on strike could be restored to their former positions. They were advised that, inasmuch as they had originally refused to work, had repudiated the obligations of their organizations, and had also refused to return to work when the opportunity was offered, they could not be restored to their former positions.

"In this connection it is only fair to state that this strike removed from the railroad company's service a number of men who were disloyal to the company, and that the new men within a few weeks after their employment performed more efficient and satisfactory service than the employees who went on strike, some of whom had been in the company's service for many years.

"Below is given a copy of a letter from Mr. W. G. Lee, president Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, to officers of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen lodges on the Pennsylvania lines east, showing the attitude of the brotherhood with respect to this strike.

"CLEVELAND, OHIO, March 23, 1914.

"To the President, Secretary, and Treasury of all B. R. T. Lodges, Pennsylvania Lines East:

"SIRS AND BROTHERS: As you are probably aware, a few members of the O. R. C., B. R. T., and Switchmen's Union, with a number of "No-bills," employed in the vicinity of Pittsburgh by the P. R. R., have seen fit to leave the service of that company, individually or collectively, and are now claiming that a strike of train and yard men is in effect on that line.

"The O. R. C. and B. R. T. have for a number of years negotiated rules and rates of pay through their general committees with the Pennsylvania management, and are at this time handling certain wage and working conditions pertaining to that and other lines with the board of arbitration.

"General Chairman J. B. Hendricks, of the O. R. C., and H. A. Enochs, of the B. R. T., for the P. R. R. lines east, are now at the Colonial Hotel, Pittsburgh, handling the situation in so far as it applies to those two organizations. They have issued public statements through the press and have forwarded telegraphic instructions to committeemen and others on the line, copies of which have been forwarded to this office and which have my approval.

"A strike can not be declared legally by either the B. of L. E., B. of L. F. & E., O. R. C., or Swithmen's Union until after a referendum vote of the membership on a line has been taken, showing that two-thirds or more of the employees of each organization interested have voted in favor of a strike, which must afterwards be approved by the chief executive of the organization voting. No such action has been taken on the Pennsylvania in so far as the O. R. C. or B. R. T. are concerned, and whatever vacancies exist on the Pennsylvania system as a result of this illegal strike can be filled by members of the brotherhood or others regardless of the claim of a few irresponsible persons that a strike is in effect.

"Each of you know how a strike of the transportation organizations must be declared, and officers and members of the brotherhood are cautioned against violating general rule No. 11, page 64, of the constitution and general rules now in effect, and you are hereby instructed to prefer charges against all members of the brotherhood under the jurisdiction of your lodge violating the rule referred to, furnishing this office names and full information pertaining to the same.

"Fraternally, yours

"W. G. LEE, President."

I thank you very much, Mr. Walsh, for permitting me to do it.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you who wrote this history of the labor troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. LONG. Well, I don't think it is the result of any one pen, Mr. Walsh. The information, necessarily—

Chairman WALSH. Who had charge of it?

Mr. LONG. Possibly the major portion of it Gen. Supt. O'Donnell, of Pittsburgh, superintendent of the division; the trainmaster, his assistants, myself—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Is he a witness here?

Mr. LONG. I think not.

Chairman WALSH. Was the material collected and given to some one person to put in form?

Mr. LONG. The material, I think, was collected by half a dozen or more employees; for instance, the trainmaster at West Barnesville—by reason of this strike we assigned an assistant superintendent at the other end of the road, where formerly there was only a yardmaster—he wrote his version, as did the assistant trainmasters at other places. All of these versions were revised by the superintendent and again by the general superintendent, and again by myself and staff officers, and finally by Vice President Myers.

Chairman WALSH. Who put this book in the form it is here finally?

Mr. LONG. The book, I think, was put in this form by the publicity agent.

Chairman WALSH. What is his name?

Mr. LONG. Mr. Lee.

Chairman WALSH. He is a witness here?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. It looks to be very concise; as far as I am concerned I am going to say I would accept it as your statement, and if there are any commissioners that wish to ask you questions they may do so.

Mr. LONG. It was a composite statement, and rather than have 40 men state in here in their rambling way, as I do at times, and tell the story we thought it could be told in better language that way.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to say if you desire to make any statement outside of that we would be glad to hear it, but that we would accept this as your statement as far as it went.

Mr. LONG. That is the whole story.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You heard the testimony of Mr. Pierce this morning?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You heard him make the statement that in his opinion the reason why his efforts to organize a federation of a broader railway men's union failed was due to the jealousy of the officers of the craft unions, as well as to the interests of the company?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The inference, of course, left upon my mind, and doubtless upon the minds of the other commissioners, was that the officers of the craft unions were selfish and did not want to lose their jobs as officers of the unions, which might happen if they were to amalgamate into one union, and that inferentially, of course, that Mr. Pierce himself was unselfish in his work and that he did it for the love of the cause. Now, my attention has been called to a statement here on page 36 of your pamphlet entitled "History of Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad." Let me read it and let me ask you if, so far as you know, it states the facts in the case. It says here at page 36:

"The strike of shopmen and others at Harrisburg was due to the agitation conducted by W. H. Pierce, formerly connected with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen as a national organizer, and who, after being unsuccessful in his efforts to be elected vice president of that organization at its convention in Washington, June 2, 1913, offered his services to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to handle legislative matters in the interest of that company. Failing to secure this position, he immediately started to organize all classes of employees under an organization called Brotherhood of Railway Employees. His efforts, while directed particularly against the Pennsylvania Railroad, were not confined exclusively to the employees of that company, but extended to other railroad companies, particularly the Philadelphia & Reading Railway."

This, you see, would cast a very serious reflection upon the methods of Mr. Pierce. The frame of mind that this would leave me in, if it states the facts, is that it is now the result of disappointment and in a spirit of revenge; not having been elected vice president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, he offered his services to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to handle legislative matters in the interests of that company, was out of disappointment merely, and in a spirit of revenge, and not having secured that position, with a view of injuring the company, he immediately started to organize all classes of employees under an organization called the Brotherhood of Railway Employees. If those are facts, it would largely discredit the testimony of Mr. Pierce. It would with me, of course, and I think it would also with my fellow associates.

Mr. LONG. Well, I don't presume, Mr. Weinstock, that you could say that if it was the opinion of 100 of our officers that Mr. Pierce did this because he was disappointed that that would make it a fact. It would be rather difficult to say that any disappointment of Mr. Pierce's was the real fact. You can readily see that. Now, it may be, perhaps, as to immaterial conclusions here, it may be somewhat unfair to Mr. Pierce to say that it was entirely due to disappointment, but it is a composite viewpoint.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are those two statements made as to his failure to be elected vice president and failure to secure a job with your company, true?

Mr. LONG. The failure to secure the vice presidency, you know very well is true; as to the other, I don't know whether we can establish that as an absolute fact or not. I think possibly we might, but I would not be willing to say that we can right off-hand. I would be willing to give Mr. Pierce the benefit of the doubt on that one hand.

Chairman WALSH. What point is that? That he applied for a job with your company?

Mr. LONG. It might be difficult to present the exact facts.

Chairman WALSH. Is that contained in this statement that you submitted to us?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Would you put a thing in a formal statement of that kind that you could not be sure of and could not present the proof on?

Mr. LONG. I say I can not; I think possibly if you give me time I can produce the papers, but it might be difficult to find them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was an application made; do you know, personally?

Mr. LONG. Not to me.

Chairman WALSH. We can get that information from Mr. Lee.

Mr. LONG. Possibly Mr. Lee can give it.

Chairman WALSH. You don't know anything about it?

Mr. LONG. That particular fact; no. But the others; yes. These are the facts and views as we could ascertain them, the result of composite minds endeavoring to be as fair and free and frank as we possibly could.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the course of your remarks this morning, among other things, you conveyed the idea that while you regarded the present plan of mediation and conciliation—that is, the Federal plan of mediation and conciliation—as efficient, that I judged that you did not feel it was sufficient, and you would like to see it bettered and improved. Can you suggest to this commission whereby the Federal system of mediation and conciliation can be improved and bettered? If you can, we will appreciate it very much.

Mr. LONG. It will take a great many impartial minds to reach even a partial conclusion on such a big problem as this. If I could do it I should have it patented, and thereafter I would not worry again about anything; it would be a great boon to capital and labor, and mankind in general. If the disagreeable disputes between those that earn a living by the sweat of their brow and those that pay them their living could be settled amicably like father and mother and brother and sister, it would be a great boon; but I think we can look at that like the millenium, which we are working toward. I think we are working toward it; I think, if I may so express it, that the kernel or the meat we will get out of this commission will put us a step further toward it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you regard, as an old railroad man with long experience, that with these labor troubles, do you regard the relationship existing to-day on the whole between railroad managers and employers, on the one hand, and railroad workers, on the other hand, as better or worse than 10 years ago?

Mr. LONG. Oh, infinitely better.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Infinitely better?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. To what do you attribute that improved feeling?

Mr. LONG. Well, the trend of the times, I guess; it is rather difficult to explain why the moral sense in business is much more acute to-day than 10 years ago, and much, much more acute than 20 years ago, while there was none at all 30 years ago in most business. Any newspaper reading person will admit that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then there has been great progress along the lines, and in the railroad world, in bringing about a more cordial and more friendly relationship between the workers and their employers?

Mr. LONG. I think there is, judging others by ourselves; we set up at nights to find out how to get next to our men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you regard the good will of your rank and file as a valuable asset?

Mr. LONG. We certainly do, and we have it to a large extent. If we can get the residue, we are all right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, do you think that this better relationship, this more cordial feeling between the two parties, is due at all to the employer having been trained perhaps by hard knocks and bitter experience to look at the situation not only through his own eyes, but through the eyes of the worker, and the worker likewise through hard knocks and bitter experience has been trained to look at the situation with the eyes of the employer as well as his own eyes?

Mr. LONG. I think so. The wood sawyer, after becoming the boss of the wood sawyers, sympathizes more with his men than if he had never been a wood sawyer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is that your feeling in the matter?

Mr. LONG. That is my feeling in the matter; I was a worker myself.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On that particular point, evidently you don't agree with our friend, Mr. Garretson; he took the opposite view yesterday?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Let me correct you, day before yesterday.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The apology is accepted. His view is that usually the worst slave driver is the one that was once himself a slave.

Mr. LONG. I would say that is true to only a limited extent. If the man who is a slave and has only the ideas of a slave can become a slave driver, he is a terrible taskmaster; but in becoming the master of the slaves he also improves his mind with his position, and it is different.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, from your point of view, Mr. Long, I take it that we are minimizing industrial strife as far as the railroads are concerned?

Mr. LONG. I am a big, large optimist. Certainly we are moving ahead in every direction, morally and every other way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think to-day is better than yesterday?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; the day of Croesus is coming to an end in the next generation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, do you think that the method that has been in operation in the railroad world along the line of mediation and conciliation could be broadened out so as to take in the other industrial fields successfully, and relatively the same happy situation, the same more cordial and more kindly and more friendly feeling between those on the two sides of the issue could be created in other branches of industry?

Mr. LONG. I think so; but we will know in two or three years conclusively. Henry Ford is trying it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He is trying it on a basis unlike any other employer, and there are many that contend that what is possible with him is not possible with the generality of employers, that he is an exceptional case.

Mr. LONG. The principle is the same; if Henry gives them $5 bonus, somebody else will give them a penny, but the principle is the same.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you think the remedy lies, of whatever industrial friction may exist, along the line of profit sharing?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; I do not mean that; you asked me if it could be extended to commercial and industrial uplift as well as the railroads, and I said it possibly would be solved by Henry Ford.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Henry Ford is using an entirely different policy from the railroad companies. That is, the railroad company as a rule in many branches of their work deal with organized labor, certain forms of organized labor?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Take the transportation form, you deal with the engineers and firemen and brakemen and conductors generally, and Mr. Ford does not recognize or deal with organized labor. His policy is entirely different from the policy in the railroad work; he absolutely refuses to recognize or deal with organized labor.

Mr. LONG. The object and the purpose, however, are the same. The purpose is to get more work units, or whatever you want to call them, out of labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean higher efficiency?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; and as the result, more profits; and he gives part of it back to the man for "hotfooting it," as the railroad man calls it. We do it in another manner. If our railroad men are efficient, they get better results in wages, because it gives better profits and we can afford to pay them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, with your unorganized people, you have the piecework system?

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes, in many cases; very largely so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the theory is that in the piecework system the most efficient man earns the most money, and the less efficient man the less money?

Mr. LONG. That goes without saying—that it is wages and solely wages makes the higher-class workman, otherwise there is no incentive.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is your way of bringing out the highest efficiency of the workers. The Ford way, as I recall it, is to offer the worker as the result of his record—he must first make a record, and having made the record, he gets a certain maximum wage from it, and at the end of a given time, I think a year, he gets an added bonus in the way of a share of the net earnings of the enterprise. That only applies to earning power, and there are other factors that enter into the relations between the employer and worker—the question of hours, of conditions of labor, etc. If we pursued Mr. Ford's plan, the workers would have absolutely no voice, but would have to depend upon the generosity of the employer, as they do in the case of Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford of his own volition says, "I will make you these concessions," and the worker must accept or not. But with you, it is different. The employees have a voice with you in fixing the hours of labor and in fixing the working conditions and their compensation. They are two widely different policies and can not be brought together. Now, the question is, does the future lie along the line of Mr. Ford's method, in giving the employer the absolute voice and sole voice in dealing with his worker, or does it lie along the line of the four transportation organizations and the general managers? Do I make myself clear?

Mr. LONG. I think you have. As I said before, we will see how this works out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your answer is to that question that if Mr. Ford's plan proves a success that that is likely to be the plan of the future?

Mr. LONG. Very generally in industrial and manufacturing concerns.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If that is to be the plan of the future, then the worker will have no voice?

Mr. LONG. I doubt whether Henry Ford, himself, however, can tell the measure. Henry Ford don't know how to make cotter pins, but he pays so much for cotter pins, and if a man makes so much money per thousand, say 10 per cent of their value, he pays so much per thousand. He may set that rate. He knows how many cotter pins a man ought to make in 10 hours. He does that by the opinion of the 1,000 cotter-pin makers, and after all, the men are setting the pace.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But they have no voice; your engineers and your conductors can come and have a conference with you, and can discuss with you the equality of a certain wage, or certain working conditions, and you have to listen to what they have to say.

Mr. LONG. We gladly listen to what they have to say.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You not only gladly listen, but you are in a position where you have to listen, because you can not afford to ignore what they say, because they have behind them the strength and power, and they can not be ignored. Now, in the case of Mr. Ford's work, he watches the results and establishes rates largely by the result, but after all they have no voice.

Mr. LONG. I know; but he establishes the results, Mr. Weinstock. I don't see that he accepts the cotter-pin makers or—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But suppose he fixed it at less than what he thought they were entitled to receive, they would have no voice, and when they would go to Mr. Ford and say we would like to discuss this matter with you, he would say, "Gentlemen, I am sorry, but I am not prepared to discuss with you. I reserve the right to fix the price, and if you don't like my price you can quit." You see there is a big difference there. You would not say that to your engineers. You would give them—would acknowledge they had a right to discuss the matter with you and that you must consider—

Mr. LONG. Well, we enter into a contract or arrangement to do it with them; but I must say I don't know Henry Ford's methods in full. I know only what I read in the newspapers about his affairs. But he has started off on a new plan of profit sharing. Now, whether Henry Ford, who I think is a mechanic himself, reserves to himself the supreme authority to decide how many of each piece of the thousand pieces that enter into each machine each man can make each day, I don't know. But I doubt very much that it is not the result of observation and not the result of actual performance, and so in fact after all the men have a voice, since they can all say "Now we are not going to make more than 80 pins a day."

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is it your impression, Mr. Long, Mr. Ford is paying all his employees $5 a day?

Mr. LONG. No. I was under the impression that he fixed it just as Mr. Weinstock said, "Mr. Aishton, you can make 40 pitchers a day, and you will get 10 cents a pitcher, or I will make 40 books a day, and will get 10 cents a book." or another man makes something else and he gets 10 cents a book or a box. That he reserves to himself the authority to say how many I must make to earn $5. Now, if I make 10 a day right along for six months, 10 a day fixes the wage; and if I make 11 I make more, and if I make 9 I make less.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is not the system.

Mr. LONG. I was under the impression that it was.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We had Mr. Ford before us.

Mr. LONG. Very well, then you know a great deal more about Mr. Ford than I do. But getting into the realm of piecework—it is the day's work and the hourly work which is generally recognized as the leveler. That is generally admitted by craft organizers. So that the worker is paid for time and not for service; and in that way we believe that piecework is a better proposition, in that not only if the man wishes to earn more money he can, but he can show his capacity; and if you desire to go into that I want to refer you to our general superintendent of motive power, Mr. James T. Wallace, who can tell you more in a few minutes about that than I could in a week, and we have him here so you can develop that if you so desire.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you apply the piecework system in the payment of the president or the vice presidents or the treasurer or the board of directors?

Mr. LONG. I think not. It hardly could be called that.

Commissioner LENNON. This is the official document submitted by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. [referring to pamphlet presented by the witness].

Mr. LONG. As a comprehensive statement of the facts.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were present yesterday, Mr. Long, when Mr. Atterbury was questioned about the Federal workmen's compensation law?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you in accord with his views? He favored a Federal compensation law.

Mr. LONG. Well, we have all been thinking over that a great deal as to just where we are coming out. It is not going to be an easy thing to draw up a compensation act that will be exceedingly just to the parties who have to pay in and at the same time not pauperize those who are to receive. I presume, if I may inject this into the proceedings, that if all the poorhouses in the 66 counties of Pennsylvania and all the money that goes to maintain them—the county commissioners and everything of that kind that goes with the matter of supporting indigent poor in each one of the 66 counties of Pennsylvania—were to be put into one fund and be distributed by some really wise party, that more relief to destitution would result—more of it be eliminated than now obtains. Now, after all, isn't the underlying thought in a compensation act to reward the indigent poor, in the first place?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; it has no relation to that problem at all, Mr. Long.

Mr. LONG. Well, it will have ultimately.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; a workmen's compensation act—

Mr. LONG (interrupting). Permit me to carry out my thought, if I may.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well.

Mr. LONG. The poor and injured workman—the injured workman—becomes indigent poor if his employer does not look after him, don't he? Now, the greatest disgrace that can befall a man, even beyond that of going to jail, is going to the poorhouse. Why, in the country districts there are lots of people that go to jail and are not looked down upon as much as the person who goes to the poorhouse; therefore the poorhouse is not an elevating proposition. But the workmen's compensation act that is going to take care of indigent men and women, made so by reason of accident in industrial plants, and who can be taken care of under the compensation act, that looks a little more honorable, and there would be a little more pride go with it. Therefore compensation acts, no matter if they are poorly framed, are bound to result in some good, and if we keep on at them and wipe out the poorhouses and the corruption accused of going with the most of them, and all that money is put to wise purpose, I believe compensation acts could be evolved that would be of great good to the employer and employee.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As you pointed out a moment ago, Mr. Long, there is a differentiation between the indigent poor who become indigent by virtue of industrial accident and the indigent poor who become poor from other reasons?

Mr. LONG. Yes. I was thinking of the poor man who is an employee and gets his leg sawed off in the harvest field, and any compensation act so far promulgated leaves that poor fellow to look out for himself; but if he loses a leg under our railroad train we have to take care of him the rest of his life.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, a workmen's compensation act confines itself exclusively to workers injured while at work industrially. Now, it is a very acute problem—no question about it—to define equitably; and while that was still more difficult a few years ago, it is becoming less so, because we are getting experience all along, because we have got some twenty-odd States which have adopted workmen's compensation, and where the law has been operating in some one year, some two, and some three or four years; and this is giving us an accumulation of experience hitherto unknown. Therefore, under existing conditions, it is easier to formulate a wise and equitable and workable compensation law than ever before; and the point I am interested in just now is to learn what is the attitude of great employers—interstate employers—toward the Federal workmen's compensation act, whether such a proposition would be looked upon by them with friendly eyes or whether they would fight if a measure of that kind should be presented to Congress.

Mr. LONG. Oh, I think every wise employer of labor would promote some wise compensation act. One of the evidences of progress is that 10 or 15 years ago it would have been laughed out of countenance. To-day everybody is thinking about it and trying to arrive at something fair. The humanitarian sense is growing, and the humanitarian family is getting bigger every day.

I want to say in addition, now, with reference to one question. You asked me about one of the causes of unrest, and I was going to say that it was due to the fact that "a little learning"—as you have observed in various hearings—"a little learning is a dangerous thing." Therefore, spend your money and have more schoolhouses and more schoolmasters. The more schoolhouses and more schoolmasters, the more colleges and universities, the faster this thing will move toward the end we all hope to achieve.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Garretson would like to ask you a question or two.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Touching for a moment on Henry Ford's plan and on the plan that obtains in other localities, is not the result that lies ahead of the plan of Henry Ford, and the result advocated by men speaking on their own behalf as laborers, is not the object exactly the same—the betterment of the worker in his relation to his output?

Mr. LONG. I trust so.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You speak, Mr. Long, of the fact that especially in 20 years, from your own standpoint, on your own road, conditions were far better than they were 20 years ago, and gave promise for the future. Within that 20 years you span almost the entire period during which you have recognized the right of a large body of your employees to have their voice in fixing rates of pay and conditions of service. Isn't that true?

Mr. LONG. I think so; yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you believe that any degree of that betterment in industrial conditions that has arisen on your line has been the outgrowth of the recognition of their right in that direction? Bear in mind that 20 years ago it was claimed that the right of the employer was inherent to fix those things. It has been recognized since that time, and the railway delegates that right or surrenders it to the men to speak for themselves in large degree.

Mr. LONG. In answer to the first part of your question, I have great doubt as to whether the same end would not have been achieved in another way. In other words, your wages have been increased by show of force and numbers. I think, possibly, the same thing would have been achieved pretty nearly, if not better ends achieved, if molasses had been used instead of vinegar, very often.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But if neither molasses nor vinegar had been used, because of the inability of the employee—because of want of organization to get either molasses or vinegar, what then?

Mr. LONG. That is a hypothetical question and I will have to give a hypothetical answer—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). Could the individual have done for himself what he has done for himself and associates, because of being associated with other individuals, collectively?

Mr. LONG. Possibly I will have to say no to that, because the punk man would have had to drop out, and he is now going along.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The punk man, as a foregone conclusion, could not have helped himself alone?

Mr. LONG. Hardly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And only the sporadic individual would have had the strength to attain anything for himself alone?

Mr. LONG. I will say yes to that, if you will change that "sporadic" to "the great majority."

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, no matter how many, unless he works collectively, he is only a sporadic case.

Mr. LONG. I can not agree to that. He is the great majority.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, you do not believe a great benefit has come to men through association?

Mr. LONG. Oh, I don't say it has not; it certainly has. But I say I think the same thing could have been achieved in a better way.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you believe that the result obtained from railway operation—I heard the statement made here this morning that your property is composed of 110 component parts; at any rate, we know that the Pennsylvania is a large number of formerly separate systems.

Mr. LONG. A brick wall made of bricks.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And made into a cohesive whole?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And better results come from that assembling of units?

Mr. LONG. That has been the history of all time.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is there any reason to believe that the same benefits do not come to the men from assembling the units?

Mr. LONG. As I stated a while ago, it just depends on the method you pursue, whether you do it by the method that has been followed, or whether some other method might not have been better.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, that is a question of method; but the fact is that they need it to assemble.

Mr. LONG. May I illustrate it by a story that I frequently use? A dusty Weary Willie came along a dusty road and stopped in front of a house where there was a beautiful shade tree, on a hot afternoon, and he said to the man at the gate, "I am very tired, and I am coming right in there under your shade tree and lie down." To which the man at the gate said, "If you come in I will knock off your block. This is my property; I don't want you in here." But he goes in by force and gets under the shade tree. The next day another man comes along and takes off his hat and says, "My dear sir, I am very tired and hot and dusty. May I come in and lie under your shade tree for half an hour?" and the man says, "Come right in."

Commissioner GARRETSON. That was a pure question of manners; but they both got the shade?

Mr. LONG. Both got the shade.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And probably both claimed they had a right to it, but they expressed it in a different form.

Commissioner AISHTON. The latter fellow probably got a rocking-chair to sit in instead of sitting on a rock.

Commissioner GARRETSON. This did not deal with furniture; only with shade.

In your dealings with your own men, Mr. Long, the question was raised yesterday as to leave of absence for men. Have employees of the Pennsylvania Co., those who are acting as legislative representatives of their associates, ever been denied leave of absence for the purpose of performing those duties?

Mr. LONG. No; I think not. I think they are very much in evidence at Harrisburg.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I have heard a few of them were. And have any of them ever been recalled or notified that they must report for duty and leave such work?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There are no instances of that?

Mr. LONG. None that I know of, because it was positively decided that it was unwise to interfere with that liberty of the man if he wanted it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What is the name of that organization you referred to—

Mr. LONG. X. Y. Z. (?)

Commissioner GARRETSON. No; you have so many there that I can not sort them out; that mutual-benefit organization that was referred to as a "child of the company"?

Mr. LONG. Oh, the Mutual Aid Association. I don't know whether it is "mutual aid" or "mutual benefit."

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mutual aid and benefit, maybe; I don't know.

Mr. LONG. I think it is B. M. A; I don't know whether it is M. A. A. or M. B. A.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, whatever the name of it may be, just so we understand the same one—

Mr. LONG (interrupting). Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON (continuing). At the time of the inception of that organization were any men allowed time in their various capacities as conductors or brakemen or engineers or firemen for visiting subordinate lodges or divisions of the organizations commending this to the men? Were any men detailed who were paid time for that?

Mr. LONG. I should say no, Mr. Garretson. If anybody did do that and signed the pay roll that the man did such service for money received, it would be falsifying the pay roll.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If he was informed by the officer of the company directly over him, for instance, that he would be allowed to do that and to put in his time slips exactly as he had when at work, you could not charge the man with padding the pay roll, could you?

Mr. LONG. Well, we might take a conductor and tell him that we wanted to know how the conductors on the North Western Railroad did and say, "We will pay you for going out there and getting that information for us the same money that you would earn if you stayed at home and worked, plus your expenses." Now, to find out how much that money is we ought to pay for that thing, we can't determine that without the time slips, and if he is gone 10 days finding out how the conductors on the North Western do, and if he brought back the information, whether it suited us or not, we would pay him for the service.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Allow him straight time and expenses?

Mr. LONG. Just as much; but to say he performed that service for that money, that is not done.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But on the pay rolls he would appear as on duty, although he was performing another service, for instance? How do you pay your court men—men going to court?

Mr. LONG. We do the same thing with passenger conductors who are granted two weeks' absence under pay, and they appear on the rolls as exercising their right to leave of absence.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And if they were sent out for this purpose and appeared on the rolls, the man would not be chargeable with padding the pay rolls. It would be using him for that purpose, then.

Mr. LONG. I don't think it would be on the pay roll; it might be. I take it it would be vouchered then.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you know whether anything of that kind has been done or has not been done?

Mr. LONG. Well, if it has I don't think it has been done in accordance with our instructions. While the result in money would be the same to the company, the company prefers that it should be done in proper, open, and legitimate ways—that is, if a conductor works 20 days as a conductor on a passenger train and 10 days for special work in Boston or anywhere else to find out how the conductors do this, that, and the other, or the engineer, or the fireman—that the money that he gets for that service should not be paid as wages, but that the same amount would be paid. Of course, in the end, to the company it would mean the same amount of money, and it is possible that, in order to avoid paying that man for that service with a voucher, as it ought to be paid, it may be they give him the money on the pay roll, because in the end it would mean the same thing to the company. But the proper and legitimate way that the controller, I think, would insist upon—

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, but if some officer of the company, though, was desirous of not drawing any attention to the fact that it was the case of the "maybe"—I am using the phrase you used, yourself, in the testimony—

Mr. LONG (interrupting). Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The natural thing to do would be to put it in on the pay roll?

Mr. LONG. Well, you say the natural thing. I guess I would have to say "yes" to that—it would be natural, but it would not be the proper thing in accordance with the instructions of the comptroller, who does not care a rap whom it hurts if it is not correct. He wants to know the facts connected with each expenditure, whether it is disagreeable to me or to anybody else to tell him. We have to tell him, because it is his business to know what the company's money is spent for.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You would not deny the authenticity, then, of the man who had performed that service and assert it in justification thereof that he had done it for pay?

Mr. LONG. I think if it was made a part of the written record it would explain itself and show whether any collusion, mystery, or rascality was connected with it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, on this Monongahela strike—the real impelling thing in the causing of that strike was the removal of a number of men from that yard crew?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. At the time of the removal of those men, wasn't it a fact that there had been an award handed down by arbitration that had not yet been made effective?

Mr. LONG. It had not been made effective in its entirety; but I should say 98 per cent of it had.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, that was only a case of prediscounting?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Officially it had not been made effective?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; and wherever the conclusion reached at that late date was on the basis of the award, the pay to the men was retroactive as of the date that it became effective; so that they were not losing one cent even if they had to wait.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Oh, it was not a question of waiting for that award. Was not the claim made—you are perfectly aware I hold no brief for the men who were in that strike—but isn't it a fact that those men claimed, and with a certain degree of justification, that a lessening of the number of men under the terms of that award in itself constituted a departure from the spirit of the agreement to arbitrate?

Mr. LONG. I think they so claimed; yes. Possibly that is quite true. I think quite a fair conclusion, but the claim was not just.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Long, the division of accounts is very clearly outlined by the Interstate Commerce Commission's regulations, is it not?

Mr. LONG. Absolutely.

Commissioner AISHTON. And the rules?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; absolutely so.

Commissioner AISHTON. And your comptroller has to keep his accounts in accordance with those rules?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And he has to make a sworn statement at the end of every month accounting for all the division of accounts and moneys expended and what they were expended for and everything of that kind in accordance with the rules laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; that is the reason why he is so exacting about them.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman wishes to ask you some questions.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. Long, are you willing to go on record as for or against the organization of labor?

Mr. LONG. Oh, I think organized labor has done us a great deal of good.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Well, are you for it?

Mr. LONG. I am for it in certain forms. Organized labor I approve of very much. I think, if I may say a good word in favor of some organizations as against the others—and that possibly applies to the four organizations that have consideration on our railroad—that they have promoted the elimination of intemperance by their actions just as much as the actions of their officers. I think, as a matter of principle, that they are opposed to the use of liquor; and that if they had done nothing else but that, their reason for being would have been sufficient, the achieving of that one good thing.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Then you are for it? You are not against it?

Mr. LONG. I am not against it.

Chairman WALSH. Did your company oppose the passage of a workmen's compensation act, Mr. Long?

Mr. LONG. I think not, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Or take any action on it?

Mr. LONG. If any action was taken at all, it was simply because some one who knew about enactments of that kind thought that a better one might be drawn.

Chairman WALSH. Well, was there some action taken for a different law than the one that was passed?

Mr. LONG. Personally, my views were not solicited, but my impression is that possibly some of the executives and—that the opinions of men in the legal department were asked as to certain contemplated compensation laws, and whether they were good.

Chairman WALSH. Did you send out circulars with respect to that—your company?

Mr. LONG. No, sir; not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Or make any effort to creat public opinion?

Mr. LONG. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see any of the arguments used against it by these gentlemen, the executives or attorneys?

Mr. LONG. Well, I saw some, and saw a good many in favor of it.

Chairman WALSH. My thought was concentrated on that by your statement about the farmers. Was there an effort made to have it include the farmers?

Mr. LONG. I think there were several members of the legislature of Pennsylvania who were endeavoring to champion that, but they were rather from the industrial districts, and, of course, the rural members, wanting the farmer vote, they wanted to leave the farmer and wanted to leave the employer who has one servant out of the law.

Chairman WALSH. Was that consideration urged by those gentlemen that you say may be opposed to this law?

Mr. LONG. I don't think that affected them at all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you.

Mr. LONG. I might say, Mr. Walsh, that the public prints were full of the fact that the passage of the law depended entirely upon eliminating domestic servants and farm help. Of course, we are not, as a corporation, interested in eliminating domestic help or farm help, because we don't employ domestic help or farmers on the railroad.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. Long. We thank you, and you will be excused permanently.

TESTIMONY OF MR. E. B. HUNT.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please state your name?

Mr. HUNT. E. B. Hunt.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business, please?

Mr. HUNT. I am superintendent of the relief department and agent of the pension department of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been in that position?

Mr. HUNT. I have been superintendent since June, 1911.

Chairman WALSH. Have you held other positions with the company?

Mr. HUNT. I was a clerk in the relief department from 1886 to 1905, when I was made assistant superintendent, and upon the death of the superintendent was made superintendent in 1911.

Chairman WALSH. What proportion of the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad are members of the relief department?

Mr. HUNT. Ninety-two per cent.

Chairman WALSH. Is membership in the relief department compulsory?

Mr. HUNT. As far as new employees are concerned they are all urged to become members. In the statement that I have prepared, and which I would like to read, there is a paragraph on that particular point.

Chairman WALSH. Very good. What are you reading from?

Mr. HUNT. From the book that was presented to you as the Pennsylvania Railway's policy toward its employees.

Chairman WALSH. If you will kindly refer me to the page?

Mr. HUNT. Page 25 [reading]:

"Because of the regulations of the pension department providing for retirement of disabled employees between the ages of 65 and 69 years, if they have had 30 years' previous service, and also for the purpose of obtaining employees physically fitted for the positions in which they are to work, new employees entering the service are required to undergo a physical examination and are thereby practically required to become members of the relief fund, although they are at liberty to withdraw their membership at any time after employment if they so desire.

Chairman WALSH. When employees are discharged or relieved through slackness of work, what becomes of his equity in this department?

Mr. HUNT. It ceases.

Chairman WALSH. What proportion of the 23,000 men who left the service of the company in 1914 were discharged?

Mr. HUNT. Your representative called upon me a few days ago and asked me to prepare a statement showing the number of members of the relief fund who had left the service in 1914, which he understood was 41,412; the average length of service, the cause for leaving, and so forth, and the classification of the occupation. I prepared such a statement, but I am very sorry that I did not have time enough to divide the several groups of occupations showing causes for their leaving the service; that is, the number in each occupation which voluntarily resigned, the number relieved on account of reduction in force, and the number discharged.

Chairman WALSH. You have not that classification?

Mr. HUNT. I have it as a whole, and would be glad to read it to you.

Chairman WALSH. Give it to us as a whole.

Mr. HUNT (reading). "The number of members of the relief fund who left the service during the year 1914 was 41,412. The percentage and number of those who resigned voluntarily was 23,195, or 56 per cent; the percentage and number of those relieved on account of reduction in force and through no fault of the employee was 14,494, or 35 per cent. The number of those discharged for cause was 3,727, or 9 per cent. The average length of service of such employees was one year and three months. The classification of occupations: Officers, agents, and clerks, 1,446, or 3.5 per cent; warehousemen, station laborers, messengers, and so forth, 4,666, or 11.3 per cent; telephone and telegraph operators and train dispatchers, 318, or 0.8 of 1 per cent; conductors on all trains, 307, or 0.7 of 1 per cent; brakemen, flagmen, and baggage-masters on all trains, 3,169, or 7.7 per cent; locomotive and electrical engineers, 34, or 0.1 of 1 per cent; locomotive firemen and electrical engineer helpers, 1,460, or 3.5 per cent; yardmen, 1,162, or 2.8 per cent; shopmen, 9,527, or 22.9 per cent; trackmen, 19,207, or 46.4 per cent; floating equipment, 116, or 0.3 of 1 per cent."

I will file that with the commission for their information.

(The document so identified and offered in evidence by the witness is printed among the exhibits at the end of this subject—Hunt Exhibit No. 1.)

Chairman WALSH. Have you the information as to how long the men have been members of the relief department?

Mr. HUNT. No, sir; only as a whole. That is, the average length of service—one year and three months.

Commissioner AUSTON. And 92 per cent of employees are in the benefit association?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; 92 per cent are members.

Chairman WALSH. In what are the funds of the department invested?

Mr. HUNT (reading). "As of December 31, last year. Columbia & Port Deposit Railway Co. 4 per cent mortgage coupon bonds, par value $330,000, cost $330,000.

"Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. general mortgage 4 per cent coupon gold bonds, par value $219,000, cost $201,952.50.

"Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. general mortgage 4½ per cent coupon registered gold bonds, par value $247,000, cost $265,833.75.

"Cambria & Clearfield Railway Co. general mortgage 4 per cent coupon bonds, cost $47,000, par value $47,000.

"Allegheny Valley Railway Co. general mortgage 4 per cent bonds, par value $50,000, cost $50,000.

"Reading Co. and Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. general mortgage 4 per cent coupon bonds, par value $55,000, cost $53,468.75.

"Pennsylvania general freight equipment, trust 4½ per cent certificates, cost $87,038.20, par value $90,000.

"Southern Pacific 4½ per cent equipment trust certificates, par value $100,000, cost $97,181.52.

"Pennsylvania Railroad Co. 3½ per cent convertible bonds, cost $181,785.55, par value $187,000."

That represents a total cost of $1,314,260.27. There is a balance on hand of cash on deposit with the treasurer of $1,680,555.67, for which the relief fund is receiving 4 per cent interest from the company, compounded semiannually.

Chairman WALSH. Who passes upon those investments?

Mr. HUNT. The advisory committee; the advisory committee directs the investment.

Chairman WALSH. Of what does that consist, the committee?

Mr. HUNT. It consists of eight members appointed by the company, eight members elected by the employees with the general manager ex-officio chairman. I am ex-officio secretary of the committee, but am not a member.

Chairman WALSH. In the event of increase in the value of the securities held in trust by this department, how is the increase treated?

Mr. HUNT. We have never had occasion to sell any securities; they are carried on the books the same as I read to you from the annual report.

Chairman WALSH. In case of a decrease, how do you treat them?

Mr. HUNT. The same as I read to you, we have never made any change in our account.

Chairman WALSH. You have never made any change in your account?

Mr. HUNT. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Has there been decrease in the real value of any of those securities?

Mr. HUNT. Not to any appreciable extent. I don't recall any, if such is the fact.

Chairman WALSH. Does the company guarantee these funds in any way?

Mr. HUNT. They guarantee to make good any deficiency as outlined in regulation 5. By the way, Mr. Chairman, I would like to file with the commission also a copy of the regulations governing the department.

(The document so referred to, entitled "Regulations Governing the Pennsylvania Railroad Voluntary Relief Department," was submitted in printed form.)

Mr. HUNT. And also a copy of the last annual report, for the full information of the board.

(The document referred to, entitled "The Pennsylvania Railroad Voluntary Relief Department, thirty-ninth annual report for the year ending December 31, 1914," was submitted in printed form.)

Mr. HUNT. We wish to put before the commission all the information that we possibly can.

Chairman WALSH. Does the relief benefit guarantee superannuation payments?

Mr. HUNT. No, sir; it does not.

Chairman WALSH. Does the company insist upon the surrendering of the employee's relief book before the final payment of his wages is made?

Mr. HUNT. Not that I know of. It may be insisted upon by some employing officer, but not to my knowledge, generally.

Chairman WALSH. Now, it has been charged that this department put the expense of accidents on workmen and relieves the company of paying the ordinary common-law liability. I wish you would give us a brief little discussion of that, will you?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir. That was true, Mr. Chairman, up to January of this year, to a limited extent. When the relief department was put in operation there was no national employers' liability law—only the laws of the several States. Due to the fellow-servant theory and the assumption of risk and other defenses that an employer had, very few employees who were injured or killed in the service could recover damages, and one of the reasons for establishing the relief department was to take care of all such cases; but as time went on compensation laws have been passed in several of the States through which the railroad lines pass, and there is also a national employers' liability law in effect at the present time; so that if an employee is injured in intrastate commerce he is treated differently from those injured in interstate commerce, and therefore it was thought unfair to treat the employee in one State different from those in another, or, again, those that were engaged in interstate commerce different from those in intrastate commerce, and the regulation of the relief department containing the release provision was wiped out, beginning with January 1 of this year, and benefits are paid now irrespective of any liability; in fact, we pay the benefits and state to the beneficiaries that if they have any claim against the company, or think they have, they should take the matter up with their superintendent.

Chairman WALSH. At this point we will stand adjourned.

(Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m. of this Thursday, May 6, 1915.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. We will now resume. Please be in order.

TESTIMONY OF MR. E. B. HUNT—Continued.

Mr. Hunt, will you please resume the stand. I believe you had not finished your answer.

Mr. HUNT. May I ask the stenographer to repeat the last question?

The STENOGRAPHER. The stenographer who reported Mr. Hunt's last answer is not at present in the room.

Chairman WALSH. You were in the midst of your statement in regard to the alleged shifting of liability for accidents.

Mr. HUNT. I think I had finished my statement on that, Mr. Chairman; that the regulations were changed by reason of the fact that there were changes in the State and national laws, and in order to treat all employees alike and fairly we had done away with what was known as regulation 58—abolished it entirely.

Chairman WALSH. What was regulation 58, if I may ask, Mr. Hunt?

Mr. HUNT. It provided that the acceptance of benefits in the relief fund would constitute a full discharge of liability on the part of the company in case of accident; that is, under that provision an employee who was a member of the relief fund had an election; he could either accept the benefits and waive his right to bring an action or make settlement with the company, or he could accept the benefits, which automatically prevented him from bringing suit or making settlement with the company. Now, that has all been abolished after January 1.

Chairman WALSH. And the relief department cuts no figure in your personal-injury cases at all?

Mr. HUNT. None whatever; a man gets his benefit, and if he feels that he has any cause for action against the company or thinks he should have something in addition, why, he presents the facts to his superintendent and the matter is taken care of that way.

Chairman WALSH. What was the law that affected it? Was there a law passed by the State of Pennsylvania that had a direct bearing on it? Was there any provision in the workmen's compensation act that affected it?

Mr. HUNT. There is no workmen's compensation act in Pennsylvania at the present time; there is one in New Jersey, there is one in New York and one in Maryland, and there is a national employer's liability act that has a provision in it that if they accept benefits from the relief fund it does not constitute a release, so we wanted to treat the employees in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and those engaged in interstate commerce alike, and put them all on the same basis, and the whole thing was wiped out.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any other statement you wish to make that I have not asked you about?

Mr. HUNT. No; only your investigator wants to know the total amount of benefits—total amount of contributions made by the members, and the total benefits paid—and I have made a statement from year to year which is really a copy of our annual report, giving all that information, and I would be very glad to file it with the commission.

Chairman WALSH. Let it be filed.

(The statement above mentioned is printed among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Hunt Exhibit No. 2.")

Chairman WALSH. I was going to say one thing; we are making a special study of these voluntary relief associations, and you will be called on by representatives of the commission, and if you will be kind enough to give them access to your books we will be glad.

Mr. HUNT. I will be pleased to give them any information I can.

Chairman WALSH. They will be given proper credentials.

Mr. Garretson would like to ask some questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is there any rule, Mr. Hunt, in regard to the character of the securities the surplus funds of the department are invested in?

Mr. HUNT. No; that is, under the regulations the advisory committee directs their investment.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It is purely discretionary?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The securities of the company or of its auxiliary companies are not barred as investments?

Mr. HUNT. Oh, no.

Commissioner GARRETSON. For how many years—I have forgotten the date of the institution.

Mr. HUNT. February 15, 1886.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In the period from 1886 down to the passage of the liability act there never was a time when to any employee article 58 was not in full force and effect until the passage of the national employers' liability act, was there?

Mr. HUNT. That is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you ever made any estimate, or has any agency of the department made any estimate, of the amount that the company saved in damage claims during the years between 1886 and the passage of the liability act? 1906 or 1907, wasn't it?

Mr. HUNT. 1906, I think.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The first one was passed in 1906 and the second in 1908?

Mr. HUNT. You are correct about that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you ever made any estimate of the probable amount that was saved to the company in damage suits?

Mr. HUNT. It was absolutely impossible to tell what the court would say as to the liability on the part of the company, so that it is absolutely—there is absolutely no way of telling.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What has the company paid annually, then, since 1908, in damage suits, if you know?

Mr. HUNT. I do not know.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You have no means of knowing?

Mr. HUNT. No; I would be glad to furnish the commission with the information.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Will you do so?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, indeed.

(The witness subsequently sent in the data requested, and the same appears among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Hunt Exhibit No. 3.")

Commissioner GARRETSON. When the Sutherland Commission was in existence, was there any definite opposition to the proposed compensation act, except from companies that had a relief department?

Mr. HUNT. I do not recall that there was; certainly on the part of the Pennsylvania Railroad there was not opposition to the compensation bill; in fact, the company favored it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The opposition was to that specific clause in it which specifically exempted relief funds from acting as a bar to recovery, was it not? Won't the records of that commission show that?

Mr. HUNT. I think not; I don't recall it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it not true that the three companies that have such relief funds on a large scale were the only three that brought opposition to bear on that feature of the compensation act?

Mr. HUNT. This company did not oppose it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What was the mission of the company's representatives there?

Mr. HUNT. We had made the proposition that the amount that the company contributed to the operation—that is, in any amount that could be recovered under the compensation act—that the company be allowed to set off from what the men received the proportion of the amount that the company paid. If the company paid 25 per cent toward the operation of the relief department and the men 75 per cent, and that amount to, say, $10 a month to an individual, that that amount be charged against the compensation.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Was not that the later position of your company instead of the first position?

Mr. HUNT. No, sir; it was not.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I understand that the cost of operation of the association is borne by the company.

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; they also guarantee the integrity of the fund and make up any deficit that might occur.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is the cost of operation?

Mr. HUNT. Three hundred and fourteen thousand dollars last year.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just approximately?

Mr. HUNT. Three hundred and fourteen thousand, two hundred and forty-four dollars and sixteen cents last year.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That was in 1914?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; and since that—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Just before we go into that I want to connect it with another thing. What was the amount contributed by the employees into the association?

Mr. HUNT. Unfortunately, somebody has taken my statement. Last year it was $2,079,000.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And the men had contributed $2,079,000 and the company $314,000?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, these totals, if you have them.

Mr. HUNT. The contribution by the members since the fund began operation was $30,570,495.73; the total contributed by the company for operating expenses, and so forth, $6,027,000.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, to follow up the question asked by Commissioner Garretson, the $6,000,000 and something appropriated by the company would, apparently, be in lieu of the liability it would assume if the employees had not signed away their right to go to the courts?

Mr. HUNT. That is correct.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is an assurance for the company against being sued for accidents?

Mr. HUNT. That is correct.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do the employees pay their money direct into this association, or is it taken out of their earnings?

Mr. HUNT. It is taken directly off of the pay roll.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. By the company?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; the man giving his assent to it in the application for membership.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If a man works only a portion of the month—for instance, a new employee—he immediately becomes a member of the association, as soon as he is furnished employment?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Suppose he does not work a month—only half a month or 10 days in the month—and quits; what is his proportion of the contribution—is the entire contribution kept out?

Mr. HUNT. Only his proportion, and for the day he left the service it is returned to him.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You say last year there were 41,000 changes?

Mr. HUNT. There were 41,000 left the service.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There were that many changes in the membership of your association? You said about 92 per cent were members?

Mr. HUNT. I can give you the number, in order that you may have full information on the subject. The number of accessions to membership was 32,097, and the number that died was 1,125; the number that left the service from all causes, 41,412; withdrawals, 10; making the total 42,547.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does that same proportion of men leaving the service carry out from year to year?

Mr. HUNT. I believe it was greater; I think about 66,000 the year before. The statement that I filed with the commission gives all that information from the time the department went into existence.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What number of men are drawing superannuation from the company?

Mr. HUNT. I think 55 per cent of the pensioners.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is their average superannuation?

Mr. HUNT. I can give you that; it varies, of course, with the length of time they were members. I can give you that as of December 31, from $3.46 to $17.30 per employee.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. From $3.46 to $17.30 per month?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Three dollars and forty-six cents?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; up to $17.30.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is $17.30 the highest superannuation, the highest you pay?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; not pensions. Understand, pensions are paid by the company, and the superannuation comes out of the relief fund. That is an additional amount paid to the man by the company who happens to be a member of the relief fund.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I understand the pension is paid direct from the company?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; right from the treasury of the company.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And the superannuation is paid out of the funds of this association?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And that runs from $3 and something to $17 and something a month?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, if I understand the figures rightly, the company contributes about one-sixty toward the general fund; that is, figuring your expenses.

Mr. HUNT. I think my statement shows. I can't give you just the exact figures, but about 16 per cent.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How is that arrived at, that 16 per cent?

Mr. HUNT. The company paid about 16 per cent to the fund as a whole—that is, the men paid 86 or 84 per cent and the company about 16 per cent.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Out of what?

Mr. HUNT. In making up the fund.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Out of the dollar.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I don't think we have that right.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The company contributes 16 cents to the fund and the man 84 cents.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It does not seem to me the figures work out that way.

Mr. HUNT. It is about that. The men have contributed $30,570,000 since the fund was established, and the company has contributed altogether, in operating expenses, deficiencies, and so forth, $6,027,000.

Commissioner GARRETSON. How long has it been since the fund was self-supporting? Where the company put in no contribution except administration expenses?

Mr. HUNT. Since 1909.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is your cost of operation equal to 16 per cent, administration cost?

Mr. HUNT. About that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It must be that, because that is all they contribute.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It seems to me it is a high cost for administration expenses.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is not that much, is it? What was the contribution last year by the men?

Mr. HUNT. The $6,000,000 that I gave you included past deficiencies that were paid by the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Taking 1914 as a standard year, what was the contribution by the men?

Mr. HUNT. Two million and seventy-nine thousand dollars, and three hundred and fourteen thousand dollars by the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Two million and seventy-nine thousand dollars and three hundred and fourteen thousand dollars?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; $314,000 by the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That would be a little over 6 per cent, 6½ per cent?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The point I want to make—these figures are near enough. The point I want to make is that the superannuation of the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., the employees themselves contribute in round figures, taking your figures, 84 cents on every dollar that is paid of superannuation, so that the superannuation carried on by the Pennsylvania system is the contribution of the men to each other, to themselves?

Mr. HUNT. Oh, yes; the superannuation, but not the pension.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am not speaking of the pension, but things that accrued in this department.

Mr. HUNT. I see.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I think it was generally understood—it was my impression that there was a greater quantity of contribution on the question, and, I think, the public impression is that the Pennsylvania Co. is conducting an association that is providing for the old age of its employees. I take it from figures it is the employees themselves who are conducting this organization and by means of contributions are accumulating funds to take care of the men that grow old in the company.

Mr. HUNT. That is true.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And not the company?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; and to pay benefits when they are sick or hurt.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Why, if you can give me any information, was the regular pension system not carried on with this association?

Mr. HUNT. I am not the agent, as I mentioned at the beginning of my testimony; I am the agent of the pension department; I keep all of the records; I report to the board of officers of the pension department.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, does the cost of operating and conducting the pension department figure in the cost of operating this department?

Mr. HUNT. Oh, no.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is separate?

Mr. HUNT. Absolutely separate, yes, sir; two separate and distinct departments.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How long must a man be in the employ of the company to get superannuation benefits?

Mr. HUNT. Well, he must first be pensioned by the company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. First?

Mr. HUNT. First; yes, sir. In order to be pensioned by the company he must be 70 years of age, or if he has had 30 years of service, and is between the ages of 65 and 70, he may be retired, provided he is disabled, either on recommendation of this employing officer or on the application of the employee himself.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then does he get the superannuation in addition to his pension?

Mr. HUNT. Oh, yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What are the pensions? What proportion of the salaries?

Mr. HUNT. One per cent of the average wages during the last 10 years' employment.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What per cent? One per cent?

Mr. HUNT. One per cent; yes. For instance, if a man began——

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Suppose a man gets a thousand dollars, would he get $10 a month?

Mr. HUNT. Oh, no; multiplied by the number of years' service.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Say a man was drawing an average salary of $100 a month for 10 years.

Mr. HUNT. Well, he would get $10; and for 30 years' service it would be $30, and for 50 years' service it would be $50.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, as I understand, a man must first be pensioned before he draws benefits from the other fund?

Mr. HUNT. No; before he receives superannuation allowance he may be disabled and get accident or sick benefits.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But I mean the pension; he must first be pensioned on his own desire or the desire of the company?

Mr. HUNT. Or at 70 years of age, when he would go out automatically.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Automatically?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How many employees of the Pennsylvania Co. are now on the pension list?

Mr. HUNT. Three thousand two hundred at the end of last year.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How long has the pension system been in operation?

Mr. HUNT. Since January 1, 1900.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. A man automatically leaving the service of his own accord or at the wishes of the company automatically ceases to be a member of any of these beneficial associations?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Regardless of how long he has been paying into them?

Mr. HUNT. Regardless, yes——

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is not taken into consideration?

Mr. HUNT. The relief department is simply an organization where contributions are collected from month to month.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They have no provision where a man, say, reached the age of 69 years and 11 months and left the service, or for some reason or other was out of the service, because of lacking that one month? No consideration would be given him in any way?

Mr. HUNT. I have never heard of a case of that kind.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am making it extreme——

Mr. HUNT (interrupting). I say, an extreme case where he had not had the 30 years' service?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes.

Mr. HUNT. Well, he would not have any right of pension in that case.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He would be dropped for a little less than 30 years?

Mr. HUNT. Oh, if he had 30 years' service he would be paid a pension.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the benefit funds, to which he has been contributing himself—these various funds—and contributing his service to the Pennsylvania Co., and everywhere they were required—the fact that he had not served the other year would not be taken into consideration at all?

Mr. HUNT. He would not be entitled to a pension; no.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. According to the law. By what method are the laws of this association changed?

Mr. HUNT. You mean the relief department, or the pension?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Relief department. The pension department, I understand, is the company's own.

Mr. HUNT. Yes; the company's own—managed by a board of officers, separate and distinct.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Only the company would have the right to change those?

Mr. HUNT. Yes; only the company would have the right to change those. But, referring to the regulation of the relief department, if there is an amendment to the regulations, it is proposed at a meeting of the advisory committee and acted on at a subsequent meeting.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. By the advisory committee?

Mr. HUNT. By the advisory committee.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Suppose the employees on the system wanted to change the superannuation from $3 to $4—leaving out the cents—or from $17 to $20 a month?

Mr. HUNT. I did not quite finish my other answer. Any amendment would have to be confirmed by the board of directors.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, the point I want to get at—to the members of this association—all the employees now, I take it—it being practically compulsory that they should belong—if they desired to change—if a majority of the employees of the system or the members of this association voted to increase the superannuation to $20 a month, would that prevail?

Mr. HUNT. If the board of directors concurred in it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The board of directors have the final word?

Mr. HUNT. Both are concurrent. The board of directors could not make a change without the consent of the advisory committee, and the advisory committee could not make a change without the consent of the board of directors. It must be mutual.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then if you should have a unanimous vote of the members of the association—less, perhaps, those on the board of directors, who were in favor of changing the constitution so that it might increase their allowance—it would not become effective unless it had the approval of the board of directors?

Mr. HUNT. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So, in the last word, the board of directors are the men who can change it?

Mr. HUNT. Not necessarily. The board of directors can not change it unless the advisory committee concur—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). The advisory committee is composed of how many?

Mr. HUNT. Composed of 16 members, 8 elected by the members themselves and 8 appointed by the company, with the general manager as chairman ex officio.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, how many in the board of directors?

Mr. HUNT. I don't recall how many—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). Equally as many?

Mr. HUNT. The board of directors?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The other board you spoke of.

Mr. HUNT. The board of directors of the company; that is, not the board of directors of the managers of the relief department, but the board of directors of the company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They have to approve?

Mr. HUNT. They have to approve or reject.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, with these 8 or 10 members on the advisory board and the board of directors opposing it, probably 20 or 30 men, as the case may be, regardless of the 150,000 or 200,000 employees who may be members of the association, these 200,000 employees could not change the laws in this association unless they had the approval of these 8 men and of the board of directors of the company?

Mr. HUNT. Not necessarily. I am afraid I have not made myself quite clear, Mr. O'Connell. The advisory board is a separate and distinct board from the board of directors of the company. Now, they do not act at one time. Amendments to the regulations must be proposed at a meeting of the advisory committee and acted upon by them, and then later acted upon by the board of directors of the company.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, then, let me see if I make myself clear. Suppose all the employees on the Pennsylvania system wanted to increase the superannuation to a maximum of $20 a month—

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL (continuing). Suppose by some means a vote was taken and all these employees voted for it—

Mr. HUNT. Yes; that is, the advisory board.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No; I am speaking of all the members now; and they put that up to the advisory board and say, "We have voted unanimously"—I do not know how many members, but it does not make any difference whether it is 100,000 or 200,000—"we have voted to increase the superannuation to $20 a month as a maximum." Now, it is within the power of this advisory board to veto the wishes of all these employees if they wish to do so?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And if they approve it, it is yet within the power of the board of directors of the company to veto it.

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. You say there are 3,200 pensioners?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Beneficiaries of the pension system on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And that half of those also come in for additional benefits under this superannuation fund?

Mr. HUNT. Yes; that is the number.

Commissioner AISHTON. Have you the figures showing the amount paid for pensions classified as you did as to this superannuation fund that you would like to put in the record here?

Mr. HUNT. No; only as it is shown in the book that we filed. This book shows the amount paid in pensions [referring to the book entitled "The Pennsylvania Railroad; Its Policies Toward Its Employees."]

Commissioner AISHTON. Can you state what the amount was for the year 1914 for pensions?

Mr. HUNT. Yes. In 1914 it was $983,620.40.

Commissioner AISHTON. To 3,200 pensioners?

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is in the record—

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir; that is in the record as submitted to the commission.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, then.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just a moment, please.

Chairman WALSH. Just a moment. Commissioner Weinstock wants to ask you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. For the correction of the record, I figured out a little while ago that the company had contributed in 1914 to the pension fund or rather to the sick fund an amount equal to 16 per cent. My attention has been called to the fact that that is an error; that the exact amount is 13.1 per cent, and I want this correction made in the record.

Mr. HUNT. That is what I roughly figured it here.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Thirteen and one-tenth per cent?

Mr. HUNT. Thirteen per cent. I did not get that far.

Commissioner GARRETSON. One moment. Mr. Chairman, may I ask one question?

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Commissioner GARRETSON. How many employees are assessible—135,000 nominally?

Mr. HUNT. Yes; about that. I can give you the—

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). Oh, well, I only care to approximate it.

Mr. HUNT. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I only remember hearing it quoted several times, and wanted to fortify my own remembrance of that. How much are those men assessed under the superannuation fund and the voluntary relief, because I suppose they are the same?

Mr. HUNT. Well, the full information, the table, is given here [referring to the pamphlet entitled "The Pennsylvania Railroad; Its Policies Toward Its Employees"], and I will read it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What is the minimum assessment?

Mr. HUNT. Seventy-five cents.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Per month?

Mr. HUNT. Per month; yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Nine dollars a year?

Mr. HUNT. Nine dollars.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What is the maximum?

Mr. HUNT. Five dollars and twenty-five cents per month.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And the average amounts that you pay in superannuation run from $3.46 to $17.45?

Mr. HUNT. To $17.30.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In addition to that, for the same rate of $9—I suppose the $9 per year man represents the $3.46 man?

Mr. HUNT. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. He pays $9 a year to get at the end of his period presumably $40 per annum?

Mr. HUNT. Yes; but he may have drawn out enormous amounts in benefits.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes; but he may have drawn nothing?

Mr. HUNT. He may have drawn nothing; yes, that is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Are you aware of what the men pay and the amounts that they receive in the organizations that have a quasi pension or superannuation or disability system?

Mr. HUNT. No; I have not, Mr. Garretson. I have not that information.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I know one organization that has, out of a total membership of 50,000, I think 510, possibly, to-day men who are on indigent and disability pension.

Mr. HUNT. I see.

Commissioner GARRETSON. At an annual cost of $3 per year to that membership with an average pension of $28 per month. How would you think those figures contrast?

Mr. HUNT. Well, it looks to me that it would be only a question of time when they would come to the end of their resources.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They are paying within their receipts, then?

Mr. HUNT. That may be true. Of course, I don't know what organization you refer to, Mr. Garretson.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, it is one that I have very definite knowledge of.

Mr. HUNT. I see.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That question of cost, it seems to me—your administrative cost—16 per cent; is that correct; is that the correct figure? Or was that corrected to 13?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Thirteen per cent for 1914.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Aren't you higher there than the German Government cost?

Mr. HUNT. Our relief department is operated on a little different basis from any other organization, for the reason that we—a man has only to report sick or that he is hurt. We collect the information or visit the man ourselves to determine whether he is disabled.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Then part of your administrative cost is self-defense?

Mr. HUNT. Well—

Commissioner GARRETSON. I am not using that in an offensive sense.

Mr. HUNT. In a broad sense; yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What are your figures and the German figures? I speak of the Germans because they have the most comprehensive Government system.

Mr. HUNT. Yes; that is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What are your figures, and what are the German figures as to cost?

Mr. HUNT. I haven't those figures.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Right around 12, isn't it?

Mr. HUNT. I don't recall.

Commissioner AISHTON. If you simply took care of the superannuation and the disabled, Mr. Hunt, do you figure your cost would be as high as $3?

Mr. HUNT. No.

Commissioner AISHTON. Cutting out the disability and everything of that kind?

Mr. HUNT. It would be practically nothing.

Commissioner AISHTON. Practically nothing?

Mr. HUNT. No. In other words, it would about equal the expenses of the pension department which is only about $5,000 a year.

Commissioner GARRETSON. If that is true, what is going to put the other organization on the rocks?

Commissioner AISHTON. You would judge they were making money on their rates, would you not?

(No response.)

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, Mr. Hunt, that is all.

Mr. Hoyer.

TESTIMONY OF MR. SAMUEL M. HOYER.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. HOYER. Samuel M. Hoyer.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business, please?

Mr. HOYER. Contractor.

Chairman WALSH. In what line?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, house building, and that sort of thing.

Chairman WALSH. Building contractor?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was your occupation in 1911?

Mr. HOYER. Latter part of 1911 I was mayor, in 1911, at Altoona.

Chairman WALSH. When did you take office, and when did your office expire?

Mr. HOYER. I first took office in 1893, and next in 1902, and next in 1908.

Chairman WALSH. And the terms are for how long?

Mr. HOYER. The first, 3 years; the first two terms; and the last, 3 years and 10 months.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were you familiar with the conditions in Altoona during the time of this labor trouble in 1911?

Mr. HOYER. I was there.

Chairman WALSH. You were mayor at that time, were you?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Would you be good enough to give us a description of the conditions there, beginning with the arrival of the organizers in Altoona, from the A. F. of L.?

Mr. HOYER. I remember some men coming there to organize the shopmen. I do not know of any disturbance brought about by it. I don't know just what you have reference to.

Chairman WALSH. What were their names?

Mr. HOYER. Let's see—there was one by the name of Flynn, another by the name of Gallagher—I don't remember; I think I met all of them perhaps once, but I don't remember the balance of their names.

Chairman WALSH. I will give you the specific points that have been enumerated in complaints that have been filed with the commission. Do you know anything about the ejection of these organizers from hotels?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe that, please.

Mr. HOYER. They were refused admission to the hotels on the ground, as I understand it, that they made these remarks—that is, to me, when I met them—that men were afraid they would be refused a license if they kept them.

Chairman WALSH. Refused a license for what?

Mr. HOYER. Selling drinks.

Chairman WALSH. Liquor. Do you have any information on that, except such as you got from organizers?

Mr. HOYER. That was general talk.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever talk with any of the officers of the company about it?

Mr. HOYER. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever talk with any of the officers charged with the administration of the license law?

Mr. HOYER. No.

Chairman WALSH. What do you know about the treatment of these organizers by the companies—by the company's police—if anything?

Mr. HOYER. They were followed by the police everywhere they went. The day they came to see me, I remember, there was a large window in front of my private office, and an officer kept parading back and forward on the outside, looking in.

Chairman WALSH. Was that the mayor's office at Altoona?

Mr. HOYER. Yes; the mayor's office.

Chairman WALSH. Was there some kind of a difficulty, in which Organizer Gallagher was assaulted?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What was there about that?

Mr. HOYER. I do not know what brought about the assault, but he was very badly used up.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see him?

Mr. HOYER. I did not.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get your information?

Mr. HOYER. We had an investigation the following day—the chief of police and myself.

Chairman WALSH. Were you at the head of the police department as mayor?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What sort of an investigation did you make?

Mr. HOYER. We called in every person that we thought knew anything about the trouble and took statements from them.

Chairman WALSH. Did you see Mr. Gallagher after he had been assaulted?

Mr. HOYER. Not until after he got out of the hospital.

Chairman WALSH. How long was he in the hospital?

Mr. HOYER. I don't remember.

Chairman WALSH. Could you epitomize the circumstances as to this assault on this man Gallagher from what you learned in your investigation?

Mr. HOYER. I remember an officer by the name of Luther, a constable from Logan Township, assaulted him in the presence of a county detective—Mr. Spangler. Our investigation showed that Spangler stood looking on; in other words, keeping others away until the constable would get through with his work, and then immediately placed him under arrest and took him to an alderman's office—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Placed who under arrest?

Mr. HOYER. Luther, the constable, and took him to an alderman's office; and he gave bail and he came up missing; he was not to be found for some time after that.

Chairman WALSH. The officer was not to be found who arrested him?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Luther. Spangler was the county detective.

Chairman WALSH. Spangler was the man that made the arrest, and Luther was charged with assault?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was his bail forfeited?

Mr. HOYER. It seemed not; they never got him back for a preliminary hearing. He seems to have left as soon as the assault was over.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know about the renting of halls by the company to prevent organizers from holding meetings? That charge has been made.

Mr. HOYER. Well, I heard Mr. Creighton direct either Mr. Devero or Preston to rent all of the available halls in Altoona, Hollidaysburg—I am not sure—Juniata was one and probably Gallitzin.

Chairman WALSH. Who was Creighton?

Mr. HOYER. General superintendent of the P. R. R.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether any action was taken with respect to the renting of these halls by the company?

Mr. HOYER. I understood they rented anything that was available that the organizers might get.

Chairman WALSH. Did the organizers succeed in getting any hall in which to hold their meetings in Altoona?

Mr. HOYER. I think they had one hall probably, I do not know how they got it or anything about it. I did not concern myself about that part of it, I want you to understand; I was attending to what I thought was my own business; I was not attending to that.

Chairman WALSH. That is, your business as mayor of the city?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What was the population of the city of Altoona at that time, in 1911?

Mr. HOYER. About 52,000.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anything about the discharge of company employees for affiliating with the organization that was gotten up?

Mr. HOYER. Nothing; only general rumor.

Chairman WALSH. What do you know with respect to the calling of the strike itself?

Mr. HOYER. What brought it about?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HOYER. Well, as I noticed in this little pamphlet [indicating]; first, after the organizers were working for a short time there was an effort made to induce the men to stay out of the organization to save trouble, as I understood, by the railroad company. They had a large meeting in a theater in Altoona, which was attended by a very large number of people, almost all employees, a very enthusiastic meeting, that seemed to settle all trouble for the time, but unfortunately there was a piece card that the company claimed was not intended to be put in operation at that time presented, or got among the men in same way in the shops.

Chairman WALSH. First, under whose auspices was this meeting held in the opera house or theater?

Mr. HOYER. It was supposed to be the shopmen.

Chairman WALSH. Was it a meeting of their organization?

Mr. HOYER. No; just general.

Chairman WALSH. A mass meeting of the shopmen?

Mr. HOYER. Yes; and it seemed to be a very satisfactory meeting, but the real trouble happened the following day.

Chairman WALSH. What was there about the piece card?

Mr. HOYER. This piece card seemed to have cut prices as to some classes of mechanics.

Chairman WALSH. Piecework prices to be paid in the shops?

Mr. HOYER. Yes. One of the shops, if I remember right, that was running almost entirely on piecework, and that got noised about among the men, and some of them being organized they at once appointed a committee to wait on the master mechanic, I think, and while they were waiting on the master mechanic the organizers seemed to hear of it in some manner and got on the Twelfth Street Bridge, the bridge crossing between the main shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and began doing some talking that rather enthused the laborers or the employees, and at last a couple of police came along and I had given them instructions to arrest any organizers that would speak at any other point except one point in the city. We designated an old public square for them to do their talking in, and they stopped at a hotel, they stayed at a hotel at this point; and I gave them instructions to arrest these organizers if they found them talking any place else. So, when they began to speak from the bridge two of our officers came along and placed them under arrest. At that a lot of men rushed up the steps onto this bridge and broke the railing and five or six fell over and were badly hurt. I suppose it was a blessing that this happened, because it might have been much more serious if this had not happened, if the railing of the bridge had not broken. Then the men went back to work. There were some men after that stayed out, and they would have a parade each day through the city, which was entirely orderly, and not a particle of disorder in any way whatever. Two of the executive committee, I remember, were arrested one day for throwing about some sort of literature, I think something like this, "What constitutes a scab," and that kind of thing was against the ordinance, and the two were brought into my office.

Chairman WALSH. By the city police?

Mr. HOYER. That was the only disorder that we ever had.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what measures were taken by the company with reference to bringing in police?

Mr. HOYER. Well, the company had a great many police officers there.

Chairman WALSH. Did they have uniformed police officers in the city ordinarily?

Mr. HOYER. No. There may have been about the depot, but their officers, if I remember right, are not uniformed.

Chairman WALSH. Are they required to obtain a commission from the police board or some State authority?

Mr. HOYER. I really don't know; I think they get their appointment through the judge of the court.

Chairman WALSH. How many police were brought into the city by the company?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Devereaux told us that there were 61, is my recollection, on the bridge.

Chairman WALSH. Who is Mr. Devereaux?

Mr. HOYER. He was their superintendent of motive power and has died since. He told us, a bunch of us together, that there were 61 of their officers on the bridge at the time of this occurrence.

Chairman WALSH. And about how many, would you say, were in the crowd on the bridge?

Mr. HOYER. I have no idea; I went away that day for a little rest; I was up almost day and night.

Chairman WALSH. Did you receive information by way of a report or anything about the number of men, approximately, that were in the crowd?

Mr. HOYER. There were probably four or five hundred anyway; about as many as could possibly get on the bridge.

Chairman WALSH. How many police were on the Altoona force at the time?

Mr. HOYER. Forty-one, if my recollection is right.

Chairman WALSH. Was the city able to preserve order up to that time; did they preserve order?

Mr. HOYER. There never was any disorder whatever.

Chairman WALSH. How long did these parades of the men continue that remained out on strike?

Mr. HOYER. There was parading for four or five days; something of that kind probably, as I remember.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have any talks with the company officials during this time?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes.

Chairman WALSH. Give the substance of them, their attitude toward you, what they had to say, etc.

Mr. HOYER. Well, Mr. Creighton always wanted me to arrest the strikers and prevent them from parading, and, of course, I had no authority under the law to do anything of the kind as long as they were orderly; they had a perfect right and were allowed there to parade, of course, but would be cautioned to be careful and have no disorder whatever, and there was not one particle. I could not refer to the slightest disorder of any kind.

Chairman WALSH. What did you say when you were requested to do that? I would like for you to give the substance of the conversation, whatever it was. What was the charge that these gentlemen made against them?

Mr. HOYER. Just on general principles; Mr. Creighton wanted me to arrest them on general principles; either the organizers or the men; just so somebody was arrested.

Chairman WALSH. You refused to do that?

Mr. HOYER. Undoubtedly; I said to him on a number of occasions that the organizers had as much right there as he and I—I used our names because I was mayor and he was superintendent of the road—so long as they conducted themselves properly, and I never saw any disorder or bad conduct about them in any way, nor there never was any.

Chairman WALSH. Was there anything ever said to you by any of the officers of the company that they desired trouble or desired a riot?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; there was.

Chairman WALSH. Just state what that was.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Creighton on different occasions insisted on me arresting some person, either the organizer—he insisted more freely that the organizers be arrested, and I would always contend that we had no right whatever; that they were keeping within their bounds. I said to him on two different occasions, "Supposing we arrest some person, then likely it will be the cause of loss of life; we will start a riot," and he said, "Supposing we do start a riot," and I said, "There will likely be loss of life," and he said, "Supposing there is." And he on one occasion said, "Don't your officers understand when they take their oath of office that they stand a chance of losing their lives in the discharge of duty?" And I said, "They have no duty to perform other than what they are," and I thought that he was very unreasonable. The gentleman is present; and if I am wrong he can correct me. He and I were not alone when that was said.

Chairman WALSH. Who else was present?

Mr. HOYER. The chief of police was along with me, for one; Mr. Devereaux and Mr. Preston were present, I think, on both occasions. I know Mr. Preston was once, and so was Mr. Devereaux, and Mr. Devereaux agreed with me and said I had no right to place those organizers under arrest.

Chairman WALSH. Were any arrests ever made by your police force in that strike?

Mr. HOYER. Never; only the two that I told you that were circulating little pamphlets.

Chairman WALSH. That was from beginning to end?

Mr. HOYER. From beginning to end.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have a meeting in the schedule room of the Pennsylvania Railroad with some other gentlemen?

Mr. HOYER. I was called to the schedule room—I had many meetings with Mr. Creighton, and he and I could not agree on handling a strike. I wanted—remember I felt that my duty was this, I had no feeling against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; in other words, they always treated me elegantly, and I have the kindest feeling; but he did not seem to want to settle the strike; there seemed to be something else back of it.

Now, I would instruct my officers every morning and every evening going on duty just what to do. My position was to prevent trouble. I didn't care anything about the organization, whether the men organized or did not, but I felt it was my duty to prevent trouble, loss of life, and loss of property, and we succeeded very well in doing that, and I think any reasonable person will tell you that we did. Now, I was called into the schedule room in the presence—I guess that is what you have reference to there—in the presence of a lot of gentlemen; I remember there was a representative of each of the four newspapers of Altoona, and quite a number of gentlemen, and Mr. Creighton there asked us, he said this, he said, "I have called you gentlemen together, you gentlemen being a representative lot of citizens of the city and county, and the mayor, in order that we might determine some way of stopping this trouble." I told him that he could stop the trouble very quickly. Now, there were a number of men present at that meeting; there must have been 20; and I could name almost all, if you wish; and I told him if he would allow the men to go to work the next day, that they wanted to go back to work, that they saw that they were wrong, that it would settle it; but Mr. Creighton claimed that they could not go back, because the time limit expired that day, in the morning, and this meeting was now probably 8 o'clock in the evening. I knew nothing of this meeting until I was called and asked to come down right away to the office, and I found these gentlemen all there. Quite a discussion took place, back and forth, and some person suggested that I take a hand and settle the strike. That came up, I think, through a newspaper article that said that I had a delegation in my office and that I was going to try to bring about peace. The delegation I had in my office were the two gentlemen that were arrested, and I was advising them to get back to their work, and that they had surely made a mistake in striking, and that is the way it was. They took their information from the newspaper men that I was going to try to bring about peace.

Chairman WALSH. How long was it after this strike was ordered that the men went out on strike that you had this meeting in the schedule room?

Mr. HOYER. I don't remember what day of the week the meeting was on, but I remember it was the same week. I would imagine about four or five days, probably, after the bridge broke down.

Chairman WALSH. How many people were involved in it at that time? How many wanted to go back?

Mr. HOYER. I think almost all of them.

Chairman WALSH. Was that the occasion upon which about 600 went out?

Mr. HOYER. Well, at that time Mr. Devereaux stated there were 573 out.

Chairman WALSH. They were in the main residents of Altoona?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; they were principally Altoona citizens. He took from a couple of slips that he had and said, "These are Altoona shops and the Fourth Street shops and the Juniata shops," and on through, along that way, and added them up, and said there were 573 out.

Chairman WALSH. And you said practically all of them wished to go back?

Mr. HOYER. I think all of them would have been satisfied to go back if they could have gotten back, but the company issued an order that any person that failed to report on that morning at 7 o'clock would consider himself discharged.

Chairman WALSH. What was that time in the day?

Mr. HOYER. The meeting was at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Chairman WALSH. After the strike, did you have any conversation with the officers in regard to it?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Our attention has been called to an alleged conversation which took place between you and the officers of the company with reference to immunity for the men that assaulted the organizers. Is there anything in that story?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; there is.

Chairman WALSH. Just state what it was.

Mr. HOYER. We thought from our investigation that there was a great wrong done the organizer, and as mayor we felt it was a shame that such a thing should happen in the city without the person that did it being arrested, for from all appearances the man was kicked to death. We thought he was dead when he was picked up, and, of course, I had the chief of police swear out an information against the person that did it. It was no secret; a number of people saw it. We thought all the time that he was smuggled away, and some time elapsed—quite a good while—I can't say how long, but quite a good while—when Mr. Reading, who was superintendent of motive power, asked me if I would not leave up on this man and leave him come back; that he was sort of homesick for his family; he was a married man and has a family; I don't know how large a one; and saying that they had fixed the judge and the district attorney and the alderman who took the bail and the county detective, and I was the only stumbling block. Now, I said, he was not our prisoner; we never caught him; we didn't have an opportunity; that we would have if we could; but that he belonged to the Commonwealth, and if the Commonwealth was satisfied that he should be at large, I had no objection. We notified the police to that effect, and the next day he was on the streets.

Chairman WALSH. Was he ever prosecuted or punished?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Ever have a trial?

Mr. HOYER. Never.

Chairman WALSH. What was the date of the strike, Mr. Hoyer?

Mr. HOYER. I could not give you the exact date. I had all the dates in reference to the investigation, but I don't know whether I could get that one or not.

Chairman WALSH. You have not that with you?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, no; I didn't know what you wanted.

Chairman WALSH. And you could not give the date that Mr. Creighton fixed as the day the men should go back to work, if at all?

Mr. HOYER. No. It was on Friday.

Chairman WALSH. Or the date that you spoke of when you requested that the men be taken back?

Mr. HOYER. I couldn't fix the date exactly.

Chairman WALSH. See if I can fix it as to days; I understand you that the strike occurred on Friday; it lasted Friday, Saturday, Sunday—

Mr. HOYER (interrupting). No, sir; it was Friday that the men had instructions to return to work.

Chairman WALSH. It was Friday that the men had instructions to return to work?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; and they failed to return.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; and you had your meeting Friday night?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; and I was called into Mr. Creighton's office on Friday.

Chairman WALSH. How long prior to that Friday was it—the same week they went out on strike?

Mr. HOYER. They were out then.

Chairman WALSH. How long had they been out on Friday?

Mr. HOYER. I am not able to say, but I think on Monday.

Chairman WALSH. It all occurred within the week?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; and maybe Tuesday; they were only parading about four days is my recollection.

Chairman WALSH. And your recollection also is that it was on that same night that you asked Mr. Creighton to take them back to work, the same Friday night about 8 o'clock—

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that was the same day upon which Mr. Creighton had issued his order that they were to return that morning at 7 o'clock or not at all.

Mr. HOYER. For that reason he said he could not take them back, that whenever they issued an order they never retracted.

Chairman WALSH. What had been your business prior to being mayor?

Mr. HOYER. I had been in the coal business for many years.

Chairman WALSH. A coal merchant?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Had you been in the employ of the railroad company?

Mr. HOYER. Never. No, sir; I never worked a day for the railway company.

Chairman WALSH. Have you given all the conversation that you can recollect that was had in the schedule room?

Mr. HOYER. Well, I would not like to tell you all of it.

Chairman WALSH. I think it might be well, as long as we have gone into it, a part of it, Mr. Hoyer, unless there is some personal or legal objection, I wish you would go into it and give us the substance of all that was said there.

Mr. HOYER. Well, really, Mr. Creighton had handled the strike proposition in such a way that it had me worried. I had gone through one prior to that in 1894. We had a strike right outside of the city limits, and I settled that one in about two or three hours. But one of Mr. Creighton's predecessors came to my assistance, Mr. Shepherd. That was a real serious one; they were then threatening to burn, and everything of the kind, so much so that I had two revolvers lying on my desk; and they were so tame and mild that there was no excuse for any particular excitement at all at this time. The men were as orderly as men could possibly be. In reference to—I got in a bad humor when Mr. Creighton said that these men, these 573 men, were out, absolutely out, he said, to stay out. When some person made the remark that I be selected to bring about peace, he says, "That won't do; we don't want any politics in this." He seemed to look on me just as an ordinary ward politician. Mr. Greavey was mentioned as a man to settle the trouble, and he said, "Absolutely no; that would be equally as bad." So the matter had been conducted in such a manner that I lost my temper, and I told Mr. Creighton if he did not allow the men to go to work the next morning that I would go out at the head of the strike, that there was really no trouble, and that he was the man that could settle it if he would, just by allowing the men to go back to work; and I left them for a few minutes, and when I came back they decided to leave the men go to work. I told them very positively what I would do.

Chairman WALSH. And so the men were permitted then to return to work?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; they went to work. Mr. Devereaux telephoned me the next day at 10 o'clock that very close to 250 men had gone to work on Saturday morning of the 573, and they dwindled down until there was about, he told me, about 30 or 35, and he said he would like to discipline those men, and wanted it done in a friendly way, and I told him to do so, so what became of those fellows, I don't know.

Chairman WALSH. I believe that is all, unless some of the other commissioners have something to ask you.

Commissioner AISHTON. Just one question, Mr. Hoyer. You say Altoona is a city of 52,000?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And the police force was 41 men?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That included the chief of police and patrolmen and all?

Mr. HOYER. Just patrolmen.

Commissioner AISHTON. They are divided, I suppose, into a day and night force?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was any request made by any of the Pennsylvania people for additional police protection?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir. Mr. Creighton thought we ought to bring in the State constabulary, and I always contended that we could cope with the situation, because there was nothing startling, they were all peaceable and quiet, as quiet as this room, any more than the noise of men's feet walking the street. The only disorder I heard of at all that you might call disorder were men in passing a newspaper that they thought had not treated them fairly, they just said in a low voice, "Scab, scab, scab, scab." Now, that was the only remark that I heard being made.

Commissioner AISHTON. There was one man, you say, that was assaulted?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; he was an organizer.

Commissioner AISHTON. He was an organizer?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Were there any other cases of assault?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir; there was not even a fight.

Commissioner AISHTON. You said that the man that assaulted this Gallagher was a man by the name of Luther, a constable, of Logan Township?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; Altoona sets in the very center of Logan Township.

Commissioner AISHTON. Altoona is a part of Logan Township?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Was there a petition gotten up by the citizens of Altoona asking Mr. Creighton to take these men back?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What were the circumstances of that appeal?

Mr. HOYER. I guess that was done at the same time; yes; yes, sir. Mr. Creighton said that he would leave the men go back, but they would have to have some excuse for doing that, and they prepared petitions and sent them out and had them signed the following day. They were signed numerously of course; all of the citizens of Altoona were anxious that the matter be entirely settled, and the men get back to work, and practically all of the business men of the town, and they were signed very numerously by thousands of people.

Chairman WALSH. Was that before or after this conference?

Mr. HOYER. Right at the time; right afterwards. That was done for an excuse for retracting this order.

Chairman WALSH. As an excuse for whom, for you as an officer?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir; for the railroad people taking back the men after they had given orders that if they did not report to work that morning they would be discharged.

Chairman WALSH. Was this man Spangler that, as as I understood it, assaulted Mr. Gallagher, he was a county detective and was not in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. HOYER. He was a county detective.

Chairman WALSH. And not in the employ or connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir. Mr. Creighton told this committee that it was costing the railroad company $750 a day, and that then, I can remember now, 22 days had gone by, at a cost of about $750 a day for policing Altoona, and I contended then again that there was no necessity for them paying them unless they needed them in their line of work, and Mr. Devereaux said they had bought a gross of revolvers, and exhibited one that was placed in the hands of these fellows.

Chairman WALSH. Who exhibited the revolver?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Devereaux, who was then superintendent of motive power. I think he gave the chief of police one after the trouble was all over.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The assault made upon this man Gallagher, made by Luther, was that before the strike or during—

Mr. HOYER. During the time of the strike, or it might have been right after; now, really, I can not say. I didn't pay any attention to dates. We had all of that matter; I think I could give you all of it if you want it, showing everybody that knew anything about it from beginning to end; we took all of that data the following day, and Luther just laid for this man undoubtedly to kick the life out of him.

Commissioner GARRETSON. After you held the conference with the officers of the company who came to you to arrange for Luther's return, if you would not prosecute him, what was your impression then, that the company stood for Luther's act?

Mr. HOYER. That undoubtedly was; yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And that they had known of his whereabouts all the time?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Hoyer, these 30 men you say that were disciplined in some way, I rather inferred that they disappeared. You mean they were driven out of the city or something of that kind?

Mr. HOYER. I know that some of them could not get employment in the city at all. Just to show you, we had a fund to take care of stranded people, and would buy half-price tickets to get people that were stranded away, and I remember their general superintendent refused me a charity ticket for one of the 33 who were discharged, and didn't have a dollar, and he couldn't get out of town, and we had to put up the straight money and buy a ticket and send him—my impression is to this town; that is, right to Washington, and from here I think he went to West Virginia to some car shops.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were these men, any of them, old residents of Altoona?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; this man was, had lived there a long time.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And did he have a home there?

Mr. HOYER. I think he was a renter; I know he was a resident there and had a small family.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were any of the men interested in homes, of those that you say were refused employment?

Mr. HOYER. That I don't know; only what came in my regular line; I didn't pay any attention to the other matters, very little attention. I merely make this statement in the interest of humanity. The way that strike proposition was handled there was really a disgrace, and a thing of that kind ought not to be allowed to happen again.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were you a candidate to resucceed yourself as mayor at the next election after this time?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir; I ran for commissioner a year or so ago.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Were you elected?

Mr. HOYER. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Was there any particular reason for being defeated?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes; but it was not on account of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Not because of any association with the strike?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, my, no.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have heard statements made about Altoona being largely a one-shop town, that the company has rather a natural influence over not only the lives of the people employed in their shops, but in the business world and commercial world of Altoona. What is the general impression in Altoona as to the control of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., as to controlling them, the entire inhabitants?

Mr. HOYER. The company treats the people very nicely, and while they may exercise some influence in various manners, why, they treat the people of Altoona very fair.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do they appear in the political arena in any way?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Interested in who holds the mayoralty job in the city and counselor?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did they enter actually into the question of the election of certain people?

Mr. HOYER. I could not say that; they are very heavy taxpayers in Altoona.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just assumed the natural rights of citizenship?

Mr. HOYER. Yes; just as any other person would be active.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can any candidate for political office in Altoona be elected if the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. is opposed to him?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. does not dominate the political situation in Altoona?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, no; in fact it is very seldom that they ever take any particular part, very seldom.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do they keep their hands off politically?

Mr. HOYER. As I said before, not any more than the average person or corporation would do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have in my hand a document entitled "Petition to the Commission on Industrial Relations from the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, by H. B. Perham, president," in which certain charges are made against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., among others this charge on page 3, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. appears to exercise so complete a domination over all of the affairs, industrial and governmental, over a large area of this country that it is sufficient to overthrow legal and constitutional rights of persons not favorable to its domination. That within the area of the domination of this company liberty exists not under law but only to the extent of this company's authorization. Its men have no rights as men, but merely such rights as it permits. Now, you have been a citizen and a public man, mayor of Altoona, and what would be your comment on this charge?

Mr. HOYER. That seems to be the general impression, but I could not say this impression is correct.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What are the facts as you know the facts to be?

Mr. HOYER. I was in public office 16 years, as councilman and mayor of Altoona, and I was never asked to do anything that was not entirely right, in my opinion, excepting in this strike proposition, and I suppose in my feeling for humanity—I started as a bit of a boy myself at work—I talked a good deal, I suppose, at that time, and that is why, I suppose, I am here to-day; but I did it because I thought an occurrence of that kind should not happen, if possible, in my city again.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were your sympathies in that particular strike with the strikers or with the company?

Mr. HOYER. Neither; I was only interested, as mayor of the city, in my capacity of keeping order, and that I was doing, and while I was doing that I was prevailed on to do things that looked so ridiculous to me that I became sort of red-headed over it and lost my temper.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Prevailed on by whom?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Creighton. Creighton was the man.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Who was Creighton?

Mr. HOYER. He was general superintendent of the road.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But you did not comply with his requests?

Mr. HOYER. I did not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You acted independently?

Mr. HOYER. I did.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You had no political fears in doing that?

Mr. HOYER. I had not; no. I was doing my duty. I made that remark, and I think Mr. Creighton is here to-day and will bear me out in that—that if I have to leave town the day following the expiration of my term as mayor, I will do my duty as I see it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I should understand your position to be this: That while there is a general impression abroad that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. does exercise domination over governmental affairs within its area, that that is not a fact?

Mr. HOYER. Well, from self-experience I could not say so. I have been in office so long, maybe, that they know I am one of the fellows they did not need to look after; I do not know what they might do with other people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any instances that have come under your observation or knowledge?

Mr. HOYER. Yes; I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Where they did control politically?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Please cite those instances.

Mr. HOYER. I could cite the instance of a contract that was let during my last administration, involving about $30,000, where another was $15,000 less than the one who was given the contract. I vetoed the proposition, because I wanted to be fair to the people who paid the bill, and then one of the railroad officials did call in men who asked me to veto this same legislation and asked them to pass it over my veto after that, after they had been in my private office and asked me. I said, "Men, you do not need to ask me; I will do that regardless of whether you stand by me or not; it is a matter of duty." One of the railroad officials did get the men to change and do the other thing a day or two later.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean members of the board of aldermen?

Mr. HOYER. No; council.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many were there?

Mr. HOYER. At that time we had a council, but at this time we have a board of commissioners. We had a council then consisting of 36 members.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There were 36 members in the council?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it took 19, I presume, to carry?

Mr. HOYER. No; there were two branches. There were 12 wards and 12 members of the higher branch and 24 members of the lower branch. So of the higher branch it took 7 members for a quorum. It took two-thirds to pass a resolution over my veto. They got the two-thirds.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As I understand it, the council approved of a certain bid which was 15 per cent higher than a certain other bid?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On what grounds did they approve of this higher bid?

Mr. HOYER. They did not have anything to say, only it was let to a home contractor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But it meant a 15 per cent loss to the people?

Mr. HOYER. Fifteen thousand dollars, practically.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you then vetoed that measure?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it was passed over your veto?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you say it was passed over your veto because the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., through its representatives, influenced enough members of the council to carry it over your veto?

Mr. HOYER. That is where I am told the influence came from by the gentleman who helped do it. So that is as near as I can get to it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You do not know it of your own personal knowledge, but only from hearsay?

Mr. HOYER. That is correct; they would not let me know that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any other instance where the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was said to have used their influence or power politically?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes; but in rather minor affairs, you know. I would not want to say very much about that, because, as I said to you, during all the years I was in public life no official has ever asked me to do anything that did not seem to be entirely all right, except this request of Mr. Creighton.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In order to make the thing still clearer, let me say that in my own State of California, for many years, the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. absolutely dominated politically, and no man could get a nomination unless it was with the approval of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.; they ruled the destinies of the State politically and held that part of the State in the palm of their hand. Does that same condition prevail in your vicinity?

Mr. HOYER. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It does not?

Mr. HOYER. Not so much; I would not say that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Altoona, so far as you know, vote independently, or are they dictated to by the company?

Mr. HOYER. As councilman?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; voting as voters.

Mr. HOYER. Employees?

Mr. WEINSTOCK. Yes; so far as you know, has the company tried to influence the vote of its employees?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It has?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In what way?

Mr. HOYER. In trying to get them to vote against a certain candidate; but that generally acted as a boomerang against them as to the fellow that they were trying to defeat.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What would be their method of endeavoring to get their employees to vote as they wanted them to vote?

Mr. HOYER. Generally through the foremen.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The foremen would pass the word down the line?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would the men, so far as you know, comply with the request?

Mr. HOYER. Well, we have a secret ballot in Pennsylvania, and it generally just had the opposite effect.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that they really had no control?

Mr. HOYER. Not very much, I would not think so; no. If they showed their hand at all, it only had the opposite effect, even with their own employees.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, their employees seemed to resent being dictated to?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And would exercise an independent privilege?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Really, Mr. Hoyer, the only points of difference that occurred between you and the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad was a difference of opinion between yourself and Mr. Creighton, the general superintendent, as to the advisability of the arrest of a number of people?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the first instance?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And in the last instance about the advisability of some 300 men being taken back into the shop in a body after their notice had expired?

Mr. HOYER. Yes; between 500 and 600—573 men altogether.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So those are the only points of difference that arose?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; I have come in contact with the officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Altoona for many years, starting in 1888, and always had the kindest treatment and no unreasonable requests made of me except by Mr. Creighton in this strike affair.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And your principal criticism of the handling of the strike—

Mr. HOYER (interrupting). Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing). Is the failure to take those men back immediately without any question?

Mr. HOYER. From interfering, you mean?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I say—

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes; I understand; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So the principal criticism you would have of handling that strike was their failure to take those men back to work after their time expired?

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir; there are a great many of them being punished to this day; I know—many of them to this day.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Lennon has some questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Hoyer, I understood you to say that you made the remark that you intended to perform your duty as you saw it even if it caused you to have to leave Altoona the day after your term of office expired. What put that frame of mind into your head so that you gave expression to that?

Mr. HOYER. Well, I knew the powerful influence of this great railroad company.

Commissioner LENNON. So that there was evidently some power that—

Mr. HOYER (interrupting). I knew that Mr. Creighton would not feel kindly to me, of course, taking the position I did, and I am sure I have felt very unkindly toward him for the position he took.

Commissioner LENNON. You mentioned another cause which seems to give some exhibition of political influence or domination. I understood you that after this Mr. Luther had disappeared—failed to appear for preliminary examination, some time thereafter some one came to you and asked that you let up so far as the information which had been filed by your chief of police—that the judge had been fixed, the constable had been reached with the necessary influence, and that the only thing that stood in the way of the man returning to Altoona and his family was your position.

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you think that is an evidence of domination in the affairs of a community that is commendable by a corporation?

Mr. HOYER. It is not. It is disgraceful.

Commissioner LENNON. I think that is all.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. O'Connell, did you have something?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No; Commissioner Lennon asked the question.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, then, thank you, Mr. Hoyer. You are excused permanently, unless you have some statement that you desire to make.

Mr. HOYER. Oh, no; no, indeed.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Walsh, may I ask one more question?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; certainly.

Commissioner AISHTON. Is there a record of any kind of any investigation at Altoona into the circumstances of the injury of this man Gallagher by the township constable?

Mr. HOYER. Oh, yes. I had a full account of that, and I believe, if you wanted it, I could send it to you.

Commissioner AISHTON. It is a matter among the records of the city of Altoona, is it?

Mr. HOYER. Yes. It might be out. There was some person asked for that, and I would have to find out whether it was ever returned. If it was not, I would not know where to find it. But that gives a full statement of the number of people who came onto the scene while it was taking place, and that is what made me feel so badly that that man was spirited away.

(The witness later submitted a newspaper clipping dated Altoona, June 25, 1911, headed "Early Sunday morning row—As a consequence Organizer John J. Gallagher is in the hospital—Is not seriously injured—Alleged assailant was Charles Luther, of Juniata—Stories of trouble conflict.")

Commissioner AISHTON. That was all, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Now, in regard to the influencing of these officers that you have mentioned, who was it told you about that?

Mr. HOYER. Beg your pardon, I don't—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). This matter that Commissioner Lennon just asked you about, where you stated that somebody came to you and told you about the judge and other officials had been fixed, was the expression, I believe, that you used.

Mr. HOYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Who was it that made that expression?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Reading, superintendent of motive power at Altoona.

Chairman WALSH. Did he say who committed this offense, who had spoken to these officers?

Mr. HOYER. The man that he wanted back?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HOYER. Yes; he asked me this, whether I would leave up on Officer Luther—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes; but did he tell you who fixed the judge?

Mr. HOYER. He says "we."

Chairman WALSH. "We"?

Mr. HOYER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. He was no more specific than that?

Mr. HOYER. No more; no.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Mr. Hoyer.

Mr. Creighton.

TESTIMONY OF MR. G. W. CREIGHTON.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. CREIGHTON. G. W. Creighton.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Creighton, I thought perhaps it might be that you would want to go on as closely after Mr. Hoyer as possible, so that some of these matters might be fresh in your mind that have not really been submitted to you in the little questionnaire, so that if there is any statement you have to make, I think it would be agreeable to the commission for you to make it now, because I have promised to let another gentleman get away; and when you have made the general statement covering anything you desire to make, I will then ask you to stand aside—

Mr. CREIGHTON (interrupting). And then recall me?

Chairman WALSH. And then recall you. No; you may make your statement now, if there is anything growing out of what this last witness said—

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, I want to thank you for your giving me the opportunity for making a general explanation of this situation. It is quite apparent from what Mayor Hoyer has told you that there was a very wide difference of opinion in which the strike troubles should be conducted.

We can very readily understand that a man occupying the position that I did, at the head of the local organization, approximating sixteen or seventeen thousand men, with probably forty or fifty million dollars at stake, was anxious that there should be nothing left undone that would insure the normal operation of the property—the running of trains and the normal conduct of the shop proposition. We had at that time, as you will note by our report, approximately 11,600 men—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Yes. My attention has been called to the fact that I have not asked you some general questions. Your name is C. W. or G. W.?

Mr. CREIGHTON. G. W. Creighton.

Chairman WALSH. And you are the general superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. CREIGHTON. From Altoona east.

Chairman WALSH. And your residence is in Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And your headquarters are in Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Very well. You may proceed.

Mr. CREIGHTON. What I was going to say is, with 11,600 men in our service, they are liable to be affected by a strike which we operating people recognize would have paralyzed the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I was required to take every action at my disposal to prevent, first, the strike; and if, after the strike occurred, any—to prevent anything that would, in my judgment, interfere with, as I said before, the normal operation of the road.

My attitude toward the mayor I think he very clearly expressed in that latter statement he made, namely, that at only one time during his entire career as an officer of the local government was there any difference of opinion. I had on numerous occasions offered him and assured him of the personal and official assistance of this railroad toward conducting the city's affairs. That has always been the case at Altoona. There has been the most cordial spirit between the city and the railroad authorities. There has never been any effort at coercion. At times probably we had our preference for this or that person for office, and I am very glad that the mayor very aptly expressed our inability to control affairs. The men are a very forceful and intelligent body of men, able to exercise their own prerogatives, and they do it.

At the time this strike was threatening this little volume that we have submitted in evidence clearly indicates to you the fact that we did not rely on our own judgment of the best methods to pursue. Personally I was very anxious that I should have the benefit of advice of everybody of consequence in the community; and this recites in connection with this particular strike—I would like to read from it, with your permission, simply that you may understand my own personal attitude toward this question. I am going to read—I am not going to burden you with a lot of information, but just simply want to mention this one point. On page 15 of this history of the labor troubles we go on to recite the fact that the difficulty first originated on the western Pennsylvania division, which is that portion of the railroad west of the Alleghenies and west of my division and under another general superintendent. In time the organizers came to Altoona, as described by the mayor, and endeavored to organize the shopmen at Altoona, without question recognizing, as anyone should, that it was probably the most sensitive point in our whole operation.

On page 16 you will note here a statement to the effect that the general superintendent, meaning myself—this is a recitation, by the way, on the part of the general manager—called a meeting of the mayor of Altoona, representatives of the newspapers, president of the board of trade, and number of prominent citizens. He explained to them all the facts in the case and the prospect of labor difficulties at Altoona, and their advice was requested as to the best plan to pursue. It was decided that the general superintendent should prepare for publication the facts with regard to conditions at that point.

Then I go on to recite in detail the exact statement which was published in the morning and evening papers. We have four papers there, and, as I stated, the editors of those four papers were there in person, and, as well, Mr. A. B. Clark, the chief of police. This article was prepared and approved by the gentlemen that I referred to there, and was published. So that it was the act not of ourselves, but the act of the people interested in the welfare of the community.

Now, following that statement, I go on to recite that the employees themselves, to the number of about 5,000, were dissatisfied with the action and purpose of the organizers who were present in Altoona at the time—so dissatisfied that they actually went to the extreme of getting the opera house there and holding a meeting, at which there were a number of—it was an open meeting—at which there were a number of speakers who protested in their own language as to this invasion, so termed, and effort on the part of the organizers to disrupt what had always been, as stated in this article here, the pleasant relations with the employees.

Now, this was the condition of affairs at Altoona until about January, 1911, when there was a revision of piecework rates under way in Altoona, and by one of those mysterious errors of operation, as cited here on page 18 of this pamphlet, and without our knowledge, there had been extracted from the records placed in one of our erecting shops, we having three at that place, a rate sheet which had been prepared and was to have been submitted to the superintendent of motive power for his approval. Unfortunately, it had not been so approved, which was one of the necessities before putting the rate sheet into effect. And it was discovered by the men first that there were in two of those shops two different rates in effect—two different rate sheets, and on—I was trying to give the date; it was some time in May; I haven't got it here, by the way—it was discovered by the men, and they, in the usual way, at about noon, appointed a committee to call the attention of the master mechanic to it; and as the committee was in the presence of the master mechanic the rest of them were under what we know as the Twelfth Street Bridge. It is a bridge—only a footwalk, probably 10 feet wide—crossing our shops from one side of the shop's inclosure to the other. And somebody noticed this 50 or 60 shopmen down there sitting around in one place or another, and they assumed at once—this agitation having preceded it—that they were out on strike and carried the news down to what was known as the Senate Hotel, where these organizers were living. Very promptly two of those men ran back to the bridge, and, as recited by the mayor, began to call upon these men down 15 or 18 feet below them to come out on strike; and he, in turn, very properly tried to preserve order by the arresting of these men on the bridge. The men under the bridge, naturally, did not know what was going on. The crowd was gathering in the meantime, and they, the shopmen, ran around to an exit which we had onto this bridge, climbing the stairs to ascertain the cause of the trouble on the bridge, and by that time there may have been two or three hundred crowded into that little 12-foot areaway, and they burst the railing of the bridge and four or five men fell down into the shopyard area and were injured and were taken to the hospital. At the time that happened the committee had had their difficulties settled with the master mechanic. Thirty minutes was all that was probably necessary to fix that up. The error was noticed and the matter was corrected immediately; and it was so quickly done—and I would like to mention this because of the seeming importance of it. I had just gone to my lunch 75 feet across the lawn between my office and my house and everything was quiet when I went to lunch, and I certainly was not gone over 30 minutes; and when I came back this trouble was all on our hands. Following that—I want to avoid reading this if I can, sir, because I think I can give you the gist of it. The two organizers who were urging the men to strike were given a hearing before the mayor, and after they left his office they went to the city square, which was the square in front of the Senate Hotel, at which they had their headquarters, and naturally they had a very large gathering there, at which they made speeches, and continued to make speeches, and finally held a meeting on Sunday, March 28, in one of the public parks, at which there were present, as near as we could ascertain, about 3 per cent of the 11,600 of our employees.

Chairman WALSH. What park was that, Mr. Creighton?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I can't tell you the name; it was on the outskirts—

Chairman WALSH. Was there any effort made to keep them from speaking at Sylvan Park?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; that is another, different park, and at the other end of the city. Now, in anticipation of that Sunday meeting—and I again want to repeat the natural anxiety of the company represented by myself to have order and to avoid difficulty and as well the principal matter of operating normally our railroad—and fearing that this Sunday meeting might result in a very large gathering, the end of which we might not know, and as stated in this pamphlet, I addressed a letter to the pastors of the various churches in Altoona, explaining the fact, in connection with the agitation going on, as to the efforts of labor organizers to induce the shopmen to strike in sympathy with those of western Pennsylvania—the pastors were required to cooperate with the railway company in such way as they thought best.

I will say frankly to you gentlemen that the point I had in view and the way in which I put it to these people was that here was a community dominated absolutely by these railroad men. We have, counting our roadmen, our yardmen, and the shopmen, between sixteen and seventeen thousand men there, practically representing the entire community. An agitation that would affect one would affect all, and I endeavored to get their influence at my command to preserve order. And in requesting these pastors to help us, I wanted them to do it from the pulpit just as I wanted the mayor to do it from his office, namely, to use every effort at his command to avoid everything that would tend to precipitate an actual outbreak or strike. As I stated before, there was at that meeting only about 3 per cent of the shopmen—

Chairman WALSH. Excuse me. At this point I am going to ask you to step aside, as a gentleman who has a very pressing engagement has asked us, and we have promised to try to dispose of him in a half hour, or I would not ask you to do it, except probably it will take an hour or more to finish with you, and we have to accommodate our witnesses—

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would rather like very much not to have much time elapse before I have an opportunity to clear up the very unfavorable impressions created by what the mayor has stated. He has been very kind in the latter part of his statement, to explain and to state that it was a difference of opinion as to the strike—

Chairman WALSH. We try to accommodate all the witnesses, and we have only a half an hour, and you will be put on the first thing in the morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. CREIGHTON. At 10 o'clock?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. Maurer.

(At this point Mr. James H. Maurer took the stand. His testimony is to be found under the subject "Pennsylvania State Constabulary.")

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, May 7, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Garretson, Lennon, O'Connell, Harriman, Aishton, and Weinstock.

TESTIMONY OF MR. G. W. CREIGHTON—Continued.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Creighton, please.

Now, Mr. Creighton, could you begin where you left off. I cut you off in the middle of a statement last night.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Have you the testimony there?

Chairman WALSH. You were just at that point where you said you had addressed a letter to the pastors at Altoona, and you started to say there were just 3 per cent of the shopmen at a certain meeting.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir. This meeting was an open meeting held on Sunday afternoon, May 28, in the vicinity of Juniata, under a call of the organizers, and, as I stated yesterday, I sent a memorandum, or sent to the various pastors in the community a statement explaining the importance of having order preserved and to prevent the gathering of any undue crowd that might result in trouble. At that meeting, as I stated, about 3 per cent of the shopmen were represented, 3 per cent, which represented about 350 men out of 11,600. On May 29—or, rather, at that meeting, I should have stated here—there was a committee of 48 men selected to call upon me to go over the shop situation, as recited on page 20 of this pamphlet, which you have in your possession, called "The History of the Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad." [Reading:]

"On May 29 this committee—48 men—called on the general superintendent"—meaning myself. "They were advised that, in accordance with the regulations of the railroad company, it would be necessary for them to present any grievance they might have to the master mechanic in direct charge of the shop. If they failed to reach a satisfactory conclusion with him, they could then appeal to the superintendent of motive power and then the general superintendent.

"Failing in their efforts to secure an audience with the general superintendent, the committee returned to the organizers of the American Federation of Labor."

I would like to explain that point. The meeting of the so-called shopmen that were on strike was presided over by these organizers or representatives of the American Federation of Labor. They had their room and were the real factors in the carrying on of this agitation, and they were responsible for the resolutions passed and the committee of 48 which had been appointed on Sunday. [Continues reading:]

"Later they brought to the office of the general superintendent resolutions adopted at the Sunday meeting, in which they referred to the strike of the shopmen on the western Pennsylvania division and declared that unless men then on strike there were taken back into the service immediately they would discontinue work until their demands were complied with."

The western Pennsylvania division is the division west of the Allegheny Mountains, west of Altoona. [Continues reading:]

"Upon receipt of these resolutions the committee was advised that the settlement of the controversy on the western Pennsylvania division was a matter of which the superintendent"—general superintendent that should be—"of the eastern Pennsylvania division had no jurisdiction or control."

My jurisdiction ends at Altoona; there is another general superintendent taking the territory west of Altoona. Now, in connection with the matter of publicity and the things connected with the strike, we state here that these facts were made known to the public through the newspapers. As a matter of fact, the reporters of the four daily papers there were in constant consultation with us and had access to the same records we had ourselves; they were on the desk there, which anybody could come to and read. [Reads:]

"On May 31 the labor organizers called a strike, which on the first day was responded to by 712 men out of a total of 11,515 shop employees. On the second day the number of strikers were increased to 802, which number was gradually reduced"—

Chairman WALSH. Would you be kind enough to pitch your voice a little higher? When you go to read it strains us some to hear you.

Mr. CREIGHTON (reading). "On the second day the number of strikers were increased to 802, which number was gradually reduced, until on June 7 only a few remained on strike. As soon as the strike began notices were published in the newspapers and elsewhere that all shop employees absent without leave at 7 a. m. June 2, 1911, would be considered as having left the service."

I want to call your attention, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the commission, to this point in connection with a statement made by Ex-Mayor Hoyer, to the effect I did not apparently give these men an opportunity to return to work; that there was no opportunity for them to recant or get back into the fold again. The strike, as you will note, took effect on May 31; my notice issued at 4 o'clock that afternoon gave them until June 2—at 7 a. m. of June 2—and that was published in the morning papers of June 1. This date was determined upon in order to give the men ample opportunity to learn of the company's action and decide what course they would pursue. After the publication of this notice a number of the business men of the community, realizing the seriousness of the situation, circulated a petition. And another phase I want you to note in that connection is that this body of citizens were interested about on the same lines, I think, as the mayor. There is no doubt about the attitude of the mayor toward the citizens of Altoona; anyone could appreciate his interest in his people; we do. He is a man of very good principles, but, unfortunately, in this particular instance he and I did not agree on one phase of the work as to how I ought to conduct our operations in the strike.

This petition, which was addressed to the railroad company, read as follows:

"We, the undersigned citizens of Altoona, realizing that the men now out of the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in this city are out of employment largely because they have been misled and deceived by the organizers of the American Federation of Labor, respectfully request the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to give the applications of former employees preference in filling vacancies that now exist or may occur in the shops, if such applications are made within a reasonable period."

As a result of this notice and petition the number of men who actually severed their connection with the company on account of the strike was very small.

My recollection is that June 2, 1911, was on Friday, and that this notice practically meant, from an operating standpoint, that these men would have until Monday at least of the following week; they would have Saturday and Saturday afternoon and Sunday to think over their position. [Reads:]

"Throughout the entire progress of the agitation of the labor organizers and the strike which followed the railroad company's police department was augmented properly to protect the company's property and to afford protection to those men who remained at work, and to follow the movements of the labor organizers."

That last paragraph is rather concise as to just what we did. The methods adopted consisted first in absolutely assuring ourselves of every movement that might be made by the organizers; we felt it a necessity to know in advance what they contemplated doing, and if it happened to be anything that jeopardized our interests necessarily we had to take action to take care of ourselves in a proper and legal way. We also had to have a sufficiently large force to police and protect the property.

The situation at Altoona is peculiar in that while we refer to the Altoona shops, it is not the ordinary collection of buildings that one may see in an ordinary community. We have practically an exposed front of about 7 miles. The main shop, in which there are about 5,000 men employed, is in the center of the city, where we do our miscellaneous work and general locomotive repair work. East of that, about a mile, we have our car shops where there are, say, close on to 3,000 employed. Two miles east of that we have our new locomotive shop—the Juniata shop, as it is called—where we have 2,500 men employed, probably; and a mile and one-half or so east of that we have our large roundhouse, which handles the ordinary and current freight business—locomotive freight business of the road.

Chairman WALSH. Is that on both sides of Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; I am referring to the east now. Now, to the west and south we have a large wheel foundry, where at this time we were turning out about 1,050 car wheels a day.

Chairman WALSH. How much of it is outside the city limits of Altoona? How much of the perishable property?

Mr. CREIGHTON. The car shops and the machine shops are in the city; the other shops are outside.

Chairman WALSH. How much frontage would you say? You say you have about 7 miles altogether?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Covering all our shops.

Chairman WALSH. About how much frontage would be entirely outside of the city limits?

Mr. CREIGHTON. About 3 miles to the east—I might say in the city about 3 miles. That whole front is more or less exposed. We have some fencing, but not such a fence as might exclude anybody that might want to get upon the premises; and the history of this strike was that every now and then the organizers and strikers would get upon the premises and it was necessary for us to have a rather active patrol to take care of the situation. We therefore, incident to the failure to get what he thought was the proper and sufficient protection from the city, we had to appeal to the county, and through the sheriff we got about 50 deputies appointed.

Chairman WALSH. Well, had there been some aggressions of some sort or some effort to destroy property?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There was a constant invasion of our property at some point or another in order to interfere with current operation of the railroad.

Chairman WALSH. Of what did that consist, Mr. Creighton?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It consisted very largely of where the bridges crossed our railroad yards and where the car repair men, trackmen, and men engaged upon locomotive work were interfered with either by men on the bridges dropping articles on them or interfering with them in the usual way that might obtain—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Well, what way was it there?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Throwing missiles at them and preventing them going down into the entrance into the shop yards.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I wanted you to draw the line, if you could. Was it just requests made upon them—what they would call picketing, or some violence?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, there was actual violence.

Chairman WALSH. Actual violence?

Mr. CREIGHTON. And interference a number of times, and almost constantly, with their getting into and from their work. There was a reference in Mayor Hoyer's remarks, I believe, or testimony, to our having automobiles in service at Altoona. We had automobiles there. I have forgotten how many—three or four. They were kept there day and night in charge of men at headquarters, where we had a force of these special officers, extra men that we had employed, for the purpose of moving that force to any point of attack, or expected attack, on this line of 6 or 7 miles. That we felt was a necessity, and, as a matter of fact, it was proven on numerous occasions during the strike that without that we would have been placed in very serious condition and our work interfered with.

Chairman WALSH. Has there been any change in the wage scales in the yards and shops at Altoona since 1911, Mr. Creighton—any general increase or decrease?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There has never been what might be called a general increase. Very seldom does it occur—what we call a general increase—except it is a percentage increase such as 10 per cent.

Chairman WALSH. That is what I mean. Has there been any since 1911?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; I believe not; no, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please indicate what the wage scales are in the different shops and yards at Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. On piecework?

Chairman WALSH. Well, just describe it yourself—what the men have been paid and what their wages are.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, I can not give you the exact figure; but I assume that from 75 to 80 per cent of our work is done upon the piecework principle.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, will you please tell what the net earnings of the men are?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I can give you some figures upon that subject; yes, sir. Here is a statement I have had prepared, Mr. Chairman, a few days ago—a statement showing the average yearly earnings of employees of the several Altoona shops for the year 1911. Now, that takes in the division officers, division office clerks, machinists, and under the head of machinists it includes blacksmiths, boiler makers, molders, forge men, etc.; and then come carpenters, and so on, showing various occupations. It is shown here—I want to leave a copy of this.

(The statement submitted by witness is to be found at the end of this subject—Creighton Exhibit No. 1.)

Chairman WALSH. Yes; we would like it; but, if you can, give me the heads, for instance, taking division officers and—

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, there are 18 division officers; the total earnings—this, by the way, is the 1911 we have under discussion?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Eighteen division officers, and they include all the active heads, from superintendent of motive power and the master mechanic down to the assistant master mechanics, and men of that kind. Those 18 men earned a total of $51,734.10, or $2,874.12 apiece.

Chairman WALSH. What is the highest salary?

Mr. CREIGHTON. The master mechanic. I think he is getting now $400 or $450. I find the rate was $325 per month.

Chairman WALSH. A month?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what is the next?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would not like to say definitely. I would say about $250 or $275 or $300; probably $300 is right.

Chairman WALSH. How many of them get that?

Mr. CREIGHTON. The master mechanic at the machine shops, I think, is getting either $400 or $450; the car shops, about $300. I think I can get that for you accurately.

(The witness subsequently sent to the commission a statement in regard to salaries of certain officers, which appears as "Creighton Exhibit No. 2.")

Chairman WALSH. I don't care, really, so very much, except I would like to get that.

Mr. CREIGHTON. They are getting from $300 to $400.

Chairman WALSH. Now, the clerks.

Mr. CREIGHTON. The division office clerks—there are 172, the total getting $162,315.95. The average yearly earnings per man, $943.70.

Chairman WALSH. What is the highest salary of the clerks?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I haven't got it here in that form, Mr. Chairman, but I will be very glad to give it to you.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I wish you would, if you please. We will take that average, but I wish you would submit that—submit them, say, in those various classes, the maximum, the minimum, and what might be called the medium; for instance, the number that get a hundred dollars a month or those that get $75 a month, and so on. It don't need to be refined to the last analysis, but what the bulk there get, or a general statement of prices, or something of that sort.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, here, we have got it right here [referring to a document presented to the witness by a gentleman later called Mr. Hoover]. Is this the Interstate Commerce report?

Mr. HOOVER. No; that is not.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Mr. Hoover, by the way, I should like to explain, is our statistician at Altoona. and he seems to have something with him that I did not know we had here.

Chairman WALSH. Can you get it for us?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Hoover can assist you, then.

Mr. CREIGHTON. This shows we have one man at $400 and one at $212, one man at $205, one man at $192.40, and one man at $128.25. Now, what was the other class, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman WALSH. The clerks.

Mr. CREIGHTON. The clerks; we have one man $141.10.

Chairman WALSH. What is his title?

Mr. HOOVER. He is the shop clerk.

Chairman WALSH. Chief clerk?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; chief shop clerk. And we have 1 man at $128.25, 1 man $109, 2 men at $96.20, 4 men getting $89.80, 8 men $83.05, 10 men at $76.95, 13 men $70.55, 1 man at $69.25, 21 men at $64.15, 33 men at $57.70, 1 man at $54.05, 16 men at $51.30, 1 man at $44.90.

Chairman WALSH. In what capacity?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Now, in addition to that, I might say, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Hoover calls my attention to the fact that a large number of these clerks are working at an hourly rate. There are 107 of them earning $63.83 per month.

Chairman WALSH. Give us the largest number that get one specific sum per hour.

Mr. CREIGHTON. In that list?

Chairman WALSH. In that 107.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Twenty-one getting 20.6 cents. They work only with the gangs at the shops in which they work. If they work on the 8-hour basis, the clerk works on the same basis, and if they work on the 12-hour basis, the clerk gets 12 hours.

Chairman WALSH. Do they sometimes work less than a day? Are clerks put on and put off less than a day?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; they will go with the local force that they may have.

Chairman WALSH. How long has that system or development been in the shop?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It is to be explained, however, that very seldom will a clerk work less than a half a day.

Chairman WALSH. How long has that been in use in the shops?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That the clerks work at the hourly rate?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; how long a time?

Mr. CREIGHTON. So many years, so far as I know; we have had it an indefinite period. Now, the machinists, that includes blacksmiths, boiler makers, molders, forgemen. There are a total of those of 2,213—this is all our shops now; I am not differentiating between them; 2,213 of those men are earning $2,413,926.10, or $1,090.79 each.

There was something said here yesterday, I believe, about the very low earnings, if I mistake not, of the blacksmiths. Now, I haven't looked at this list, but probably Mr. Hoover can assist me here to see what the blacksmiths do earn.

We have a total at the Altoona machine shops; there are 15 blacksmiths who earn an average hourly rate of 38.8 cents per hour; I think it was said by somebody that we paid them $1.20 a day.

Chairman WALSH. I recall as low as $1.50 a day was made. What was the lowest? Go ahead.

Mr. CREIGHTON. The lowest we have here on this is 1 man, at 24.4 cents per hour; 2, at 28.2 cents per hour; 1, at 29.5 cents per hour; 1, at 41 cents per hour; and 8, at 48.8 cents per hour. The average earnings per man—I am giving you the hourly rates—are $88.41, the full earning per month. In addition to those men working at the hourly rate that I have given you, we have 119 men working on piecework in that same shop. The average earning of a man engaged in piecework is $123.20 per month. Carpenters, we have a total—and that includes, by the way, cabinetmakers and car repairers—we have 1,388 earning $1,221,859, or an average of $880.30 per year. Then, the shopmen, that includes all the various crafts not included in the above, they amounted to 6,333, earning a total of $4,675,423.75, or an average wage per year of $738.26. Watchmen, 95 watchmen—that is, the police organization which you may have heard of—95 watchmen, with a total earning of $66,255.72, an average wage of $697.43. Engine house men—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). What was the typical wage paid those men if you can gather from the purpose you have there? How much to each man per month?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There is, one man—

Chairman WALSH. Is that a report of the Altoona shop alone?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is a report of the Altoona shop, and it is typical, however, of our other shops, the wages are practically the same.

Chairman WALSH. Do the 97 watchmen—does it include the Altoona shops alone?

Mr. CREIGHTON. They include the Altoona shop, the machine shops, the car shops, the Juniata shops, and the South Altoona foundry.

Chairman WALSH. Covering this territory you mentioned a while ago?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Give us the average.

Mr. CREIGHTON. We have 1 man, at 29.5 cents per hour; 2, at 21.8 cents per hour; 4 men, at 20.6 cents per hour; 4, at 17.9 cents per hour; 12, at 16.6; 3, at 15.4 cents per hour, a total of 54, earning an average monthly of $56.56, their average rate being 16.7 cents per hour. I don't think I read engine-house men. We have 681, the total earning being $558,247.70, an average wage per man of $819.75. Fuel and water station men, 31; a total wage of $21,888.80, or an average wage of $706.09 per year. And car cleaners, oilers, and so forth—and that, if I mistake not, was mentioned by Mr. Pierce—we have 52 of them, earning $30,230.45, or an average wage of $581.35.

Now, all other employees are classified here under one lot that includes laborers of all kinds and miscellaneous employees. There are 981 earning an average of $748.41.

Chairman WALSH. Can you run through the memorandum you have on the sheet, and give us the average wage to a common laborer; just give us some of them?

Mr. CREIGHTON. We have here about seven classifications of laborers—is that the Interstate Commerce classification or our local classification?

Mr. HOOVER. Our local classification.

Mr. CREIGHTON. The great bulk of them are under the head of laborers, ordinary, so I will read that. One at 44.8 cents per hour; 1 at 42.3 cents per hour; 1 at 41 cents per hour; 6 at 38½ cents per hour; 2 at 37.2 cents per hour; 1 at 34.7 cents per hour; 4 at 32 cents per hour; 4 at 30.7 cents per hour; 5 at 28.2 cents per hour; 3 at 26.9 cents per hour; 28 at 25.7 cents per hour; 34 at 24.4 cents per hour; 24 at 23.1 cents per hour; 13 at 21.8 cents per hour; 85 at 20.6 cents per hour; 31 at 19.2 cents per hour; 20 at 17.9 cents per hour; 229 at 16.6 cents per hour. That is a total of 492 ordinary laborers, earning an average of $52.83 per month.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many hours a day?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That would depend of course upon the manner in which the shop was working. It might be on an 8-hour day, a 9-hour, or 10-hour, or it might be some overtime involved.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What amount of ordinary laborers do you pay; there was a very considerable number of men there between 25 and 44 cents an hour?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What kind of an ordinary laborer do you pay $4.40 a day on a 10-hour day?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I presume, Mr. Garretson—I couldn't tell you, personally, what this ordinary labor is that gets 44 cents per hour.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is the maximum that is named there?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; and I think it is inclusive simply of the classifications of men for convenience of the report.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There were a very considerable number of men above 25 cents per hour?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And all the way up to 44 cents per hour?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is an utterly unusual rate for an ordinary laborer.

Mr. CREIGHTON. It don't seem to be here; here is the report, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I am not taking your situation; I am taking the situation in general.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, it depends on——

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). What is it you pay your highest skilled mechanic laborer, 44 cents?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May they not be gang foremen?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, no; the men are all classified. There is no question about them being laborers of some kind or another.

Commissioner AISHTON. Are any of them laborers on piecework basis?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; not those that I mentioned. I have some there; if you desire I can read it—an ordinary laborer—we have 87 pieceworkers earning $69.47 a month. I would like, if it is the desire of the commission, to file with you a statement showing exactly the character of service performed by these laborers at their various rates.

(The witness later submitted a statement in regard to laborers, which is printed as "Creighton Exhibit No. 3.")

Chairman WALSH. In times of retrenchment, Mr. Creighton, what governs the selection of the men that are laid off?

Mr. CREIGHTON. When there is a reduction of force we scan very carefully all the lists and retain in the service the most loyal and efficient employees.

Chairman WALSH. In matters of discipline, is there any appeal from the action of the specific foreman who discharges the man?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There is always an appeal on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad in that every employee, whether represented by an organization or not, can appeal to his superior, and in turn, through the various ranks until he reaches the general manager. There is no restriction whatever on the matter of appeal on the part of an employee, the best evidence of which is that the general manager just now, through his labor board, is entertaining appeals in some 50 cases on the part of one of our organizations, some of them having been decided three times, but they are introducing new evidence, and we rehear them whenever they have new evidence. There is really no limit to appeal on the part of any of the employees.

Chairman WALSH. Coming up to the strike of 1911, what arms or weapons did the company have on hand, if any, at Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I do not remember that they had any on hand at all.

Chairman WALSH. Did they manufacture or purchase any, Mr. Creighton?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; not as far as I recollect. My recollection is—and this, of course, will have to be verified later by evidence probably of Mr. Harper—but my recollection of that circumstance is that we secured those weapons from the purchasing agent's office in Philadelphia, who keeps them during times of peace or stored in Philadelphia for use whenever they may be needed..

Chairman WALSH. What do the weapons consist of that you got from the purchasing agent?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Revolvers.

Chairman WALSH. And clubs, or anything else?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No. The ordinary club is simply a policeman's club, which can be turned out at any shop in a moment, and is only to be used for the purpose of defense, and they are furnished to watchmen on the premises.

Chairman WALSH. Did you manufacture any preceding or during the strike of 1911?

Mr. CREIGHTON. They are always manufactured. They are just ordinary maces or clubs about that long [indicating], and it is cheaper for us to turn them out of the timber that we have about the place, and they are used like a policeman uses his club in the hand.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any increased manufacture of them at that time?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; there is no manufacture, except at a time like the strike of 1911.

Chairman WALSH. How many were manufactured then, if you know?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, I don't know. There could not have been very many, because I would assume that our total police force there would not have exceeded 200 or 250 men.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ask to have the State constabulary brought in in 1911?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make that suggestion to anyone?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I did. I told Mayor Hoyer at the time of this particular excitement—and that, by the way, was during the strike, when the crowds were surging through the streets in front of our office on Eleventh Avenue, in the heart of the city, in such numbers that the street cars could not run, and there still seemed to be the feeling on the part of the mayor that there was no real reason for anticipating trouble, and yet one could not get across the street without being carried off his feet. I told him that if he could not take care of us that there was, we hoped, a remedy in the State constabulary, and that I would have to appeal to some one to take care of the property.

Chairman WALSH. You heard the statement of the former mayor in regard to this Luther-Gallagher matter. I want to ask you a question or two about that.

Was Luther, who was charged with assaulting Gallagher, an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in any capacity at the time it occurred?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would like to read a little statement which I wrote last night which, I think, will in a very few words—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Could you answer that question yes or no?

Mr. CREIGHTON. He is an employee of the Juniata shops, as an officer in no way connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. This squabble, or whatever it might be termed, was entirely foreign to the strike, and its introduction was entirely wrong. In so far as we are concerned, the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). One moment, please. Was Luther a county detective at the time?

Mr. Creighton. Luther was a duly elected constable of the borough of Juniata.

Chairman WALSH. What did he do in the Juniata shops?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I can not tell you. If I mistake not, he was a laborer.

Chairman WALSH. An employee?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; an employee in the Juniata shops.

Chairman WALSH. And had been constable for some time at the time this occurred, had he?

Mr. CREIGHTON. For I year, I think. Constables are elected for a year.

A VOICE. For five years.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Whatever it may be.

Chairman WALSH. You may proceed and read any statement you have, Mr. Creighton.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I have just written a number of little explanations here, which I feel I would like to call to your attention in connection with the mayor's evidence of yesterday [reading]:

"There are a number of Mayor Hoyer's comments which, so far as I am concerned, need correction, or explanation, in order that their true import may be understood.

"With reference to the Gallagher case, I wish to state that it should be clearly understood that this case should in no wise have been introduced into this testimony. The man Luther charged with the attack was an ordinary employee of our Juniata shops, and was not a member of our police force, although he was a duly elected constable of the Borough of Juniata. The man Spangler referred to as standing near at the time, was a county detective. He was not in the railroad company's employ.

"The attack upon Gallagher was attributed at the time to various causes. He charged it to the railroad company's officers. Mrs. Luther, it was reported in the papers, copy of which I herewith submit in evidence, stated that Gallagher had insulted her. When this fact was made known to her husband, he took his wife to their home in Juniata and returned to the Senate Hotel and attacked Gallagher, no doubt using him up badly. The presence of our officers on the pavement and in the vicinity of the Senate Hotel within sight of this occurrence is readily explained by the fact that under my orders, for the purpose of knowing every movement of the organizers, some of our officers kept the organizers under surveillance all the time, and were there for that purpose.

"You will note that Mayor Hoyer does not charge our men with participation in the assault; as a matter of fact, so far as the P. R. R. was concerned, the occurrence was nothing of interest to us, and was the ordinary street brawl following a personal squabble."

That is strictly true.

Chairman WALSH. Have you those newspapers to which you have referred?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; they are here.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is that the conclusion of that portion you want to read?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; I want to read some more, but I want to make some comments on some other statements made by the mayor. That is the end, however, of this particular instance.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know that Mr. Gallagher died shortly after that incident?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I do not.

Commissioner AISHTON. It was stated in some of the papers this morning that Gallagher did get well.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I really don't know whether he did or not.

Commissioner AISHTON. The fact is that he did die shortly after that time.

Mr. CREIGHTON. It may be so; I am not clear; I really do not know a thing about it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. were not interested in that particular incident at all, what about the statement made by this ex-Mayor Hoyer, that the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. came to him for the purpose of interesting him in "letting up," as he termed it, on the prosecution of the men who had assaulted Gallagher? He referred to the master mechanic or superintendent of motive power of the Altoona shops, coming to him personally, and saying that the judge had been fixed, that the district attorney had been fixed, and that the prosecution was fixed, and everything fixed but the mayor. Now, why should the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.'s officials interest themselves, if the statement is true that they had fixed everybody but the mayor to "let up" on the assailants of Gallagher, if they were not interested in it at all?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I read that portion of the testimony last night about 8 o'clock when we got our transcript of the notes, and was then impressed by what the mayor had said. As a matter of fact, I had not personally noted that. I must have been out, because if I were here I certainly would have asked to have some questions put to him at the time. I immediately called Mr. Reading on the long-distance telephone and read to him this portion of the testimony of the mayor and he stated unqualifiedly that he had never said anything of the kind to Mayor Hoyer, and both of us who know the judge know very well that a person who would have endeavored to do anything of that kind would have received very short shrift. He is an exceedingly upright man, and no one in the community would think of charging him with being a party to any "fixing." I am inclined to think that the "fixing," or the use of that term on the part of the mayor, was an inadvertence and really not intended in the sense that one would ordinarily attribute, or use that term. It sounds harsh, and it reads very harshly in the minutes, I will admit; but certainly Mayor Hoyer would not for a moment think of accepting as true a statement of that kind from anybody, and I can assure you that there was nothing of that kind possible. Secondly, there was no attempt, nor have we ever attempted, to fix the court or fix any officer to settle any dispute we ever had with labor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you think that the mayor, on a matter of such great importance as agreeing to discontinue any efforts of prosecution of a man whom he says personally was a criminal because of the vicious treatment of a man he felt was viciously treated, that he would have said before this commission that a certain person—a well known officer of your company, in charge of the Altoona shops, the superintendent of motive power, and known by everybody—that the mayor would have been mistaken to the extent of saying he had come to his office, if he had not?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I do not know what reply to make to that, sir, except to say, as I told you, I called my office on the phone last night, long-distance phone, and read the notes to him, just as they appear in the—just as he stated there, and he unqualifiedly stated that he never said anything of the kind to Mayor Hoyer.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did he indicate that he did not make an appeal to the mayor? For instance, if not to "let up," to let the man come back to town, or that he did not call up the mayor at all?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There were constant interviews with Mayor Hoyer, as indicated in his evidence yesterday; there was not a day that passed by during this agitation that I did not have the mayor and his chief of police, A. D. Clark, the representatives of the newspapers, and prominent citizens in my office. There was constant intercourse with the mayor, and it was not unusual that they appeared there twice a day. At those times it is possible that any matter of that kind might be up for discussion. I can assure you personally that I never had any discussion with him about the Luther case; it did not interest me, except that I regretted it occurred at the time of this disturbance.

Chairman WALSH. Might I suggest, as we expect to close on this subject to-day, that you take that statement of Mr. Hoyer and have this gentleman who is involved make an affidavit covering that matter? And state the substance of it as he remembers it and let it be filed here.

(See Chenery exhibit at end of this subject.)

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Luther was never tried after he came back, was he?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is in the report; I can not tell you of my own knowledge whether or not he was.

Commissioner LENNON. I would like to have come into the record from some source whether Luther was tried, and if not what disposition was made of the information that was filed against him by the chief of police; how it got out of court.

Chairman WALSH. The court record shows that the prosecuting witness failing to appear the case was dismissed.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I personally do not know anything about that.

Commissioner AISHTON. Who was the prosecuting witness?

Chairman WALSH. Gallagher.

Commissioner AISHTON. He is dead; that is not a matter of record, as to his death?

Chairman WALSH. No.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It is not a matter of record?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It is not a matter of record with us; he did not die immediately after the accident, and apparently did not die for some time afterwards.

Chairman WALSH. Will you look after that matter I suggested, Mr. Creighton?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I did not have anything to do with that.

Chairman WALSH. I thought you might like to have procured the affidavit of the gentleman who was involved in that and have it put in the record.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; but I would suggest, in order there may be a fair presentation of the case to you, that you ask the mayor to get his; they tell me there were two. In talking about this to Mr. Reading he told me there were two charges against Luther; one was the ordinary city charge for—I can not tell you what the charge was.

Chairman WALSH. Fighting, the paper says.

Mr. CREIGHTON. And he was fined; and then the Commonwealth charge. He was brought before a magistrate.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anything about a charge that any officer of the Pennsylvania police hid the defendant away from the officers?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I know nothing about this case other than what has appeared there in the newspapers and what I have already stated to you.

Chairman WALSH. How many of the men of the 573 were still out when the meeting in the schedule room took place?

Mr. CREIGHTON. What meeting do you refer to?

Chairman WALSH. There was testimony by the mayor that you had a meeting in the schedule room, in which he made certain requests of you.

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is the reason I asked you to ask him those questions yesterday. I couldn't understand from his testimony what date he referred to.

Chairman WALSH. Let us assume that the strike started on Monday.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I think it started Wednesday.

Chairman WALSH. Well, maybe we can not get at that at all.

Mr. CREIGHTON. May 31, 1911, if anybody knows what day that was.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall a conversation that you had in which Mayor Hoyer was present, in which he asked you to take back the men, and that conversation occurred the evening of the day indicated by your company, after which none of the men would be taken back?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Then that was on Friday.

Chairman WALSH. Do you remember such a conversation?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I remember of such conversations with him there.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know of one of the evening of that day?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would not like to say, because, as I told you, at this time we were together sometimes until 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning, and we were almost in each other's company constantly.

Chairman WALSH. How many of the 573 men returned to work?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I don't know that I have any detailed statement to that effect.

Chairman WALSH. Could you approximate it?

Mr. CREIGHTON. How many returned to work?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; of the 573 that went out.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I think in total, at the end of the trouble there, there were about 250 that did not come back.

Chairman WALSH. Please tell us what you know of the movements of those men after leaving your company.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I don't know anything about it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know what became of them?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It seems that we have had appeals from a number of them that desired to be restored to the service of the company.

Chairman WALSH. Did yourself or any officer of the company to your knowledge make any effort to prevent them from securing employment elsewhere than in Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. When they sought employment in other States or other cities, what answer did you make when they referred to you or when you were called upon to give them a service letter?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I can not say that it ever came to my knowledge that any of these men asked for service cards to be presented to employers elsewhere.

Chairman WALSH. Do you recall, Mr. Creighton, having answered inquiries in other places, or would you do that?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It would not be me; some one of my subordinates possibly, or the man in charge of that particular man.

Chairman WALSH. What would the service card show in a case of this kind, or do you give any specific directions in respect to that?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; I give no directions whatever.

Chairman WALSH. What would the ordinary service card show, that they went out on a strike?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It would show exactly the cause for being relieved.

Chairman WALSH. What would it show?

Mr. CREIGHTON. In this case?

Chairman WALSH. Left on a strike or resigned, or what?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I don't know in this case, because I don't know what we would attribute the man's leaving the service to. There are a number of causes assigned for leaving the service under the general head of a strike; there are lots of things incident to the strike. A man might have been extremely belligerent, or done something to the company's property, which might be specifically designated under some particular head. We have always been very truthful in our statements of the reason of a man leaving our service, leaving him to use his service card as he desires.

Chairman WALSH. The information that you have on these cards, with reference to these men, is it given to anyone else—any other corporation or person?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; they are given to the employee himself upon his request, or, if he signs an application with an employer with whom he desires to secure work, that is received by us in the ordinary mail and we reply to it, upon the feeling on our part that his signature is his veritable signature.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Under the reference system, Mr. Creighton, if these men apply to another railway company—I am not carrying it further than a railway company—for service under their system of reference, if they come back to you for a verification?

Mr. CREIGHTON. We give them no information whatever unless the individual himself requests it. We do not furnish information to any other railroads, Mr. Garretson.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Does not the ordinary form of application blank used in the transportation service in itself request of you to furnish that information?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And in every case, then, it is given?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It is not, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It is not?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Not on our railroad. We do not furnish information of that character except upon the personal appeal of the applicant.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Transmitted directly through you or——

Mr. CREIGHTON (interrupting). Left with the employee. If he asks that his record be transmitted, we transmit it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Does not the standard form of application embody that request that the man signs?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I can't tell whether it does or not; it depends entirely upon the railroad to which he is applying for employment. There are different forms for it; if his signature is on his application for employment requesting us to furnish his record to this railroad, we will, of course, furnish it; but if not, we would not do it. We do not comply with requests of an officer of any railroad for the service record of an employee unless that employee asks for it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The idea being that is a legal relief?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It is certainly not customary; I can not tell you whether it is illegal or not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did you use brake clubs on your division?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What resemblance is there between a brake club and these wooden billies?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Personally I can not tell you, unless it is a little longer than the mace or club that is here designated as an officer's club.

Commissioner GARRETSON. A brake club would make an excellent riot club?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I imagine it would.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, in the statement I notice, as well as in the verbal testimony of yourself and Mr. Hoyer, you issued a letter to the pastors of the town in regard to exercising, according to their judgment, their efforts in a certain direction. Do you believe that the influence of the pulpit, regardless of what the faith may be, is a legitimate weapon in either political or industrial trouble?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Mr. Garretson, under the circumstances that existed at that time, we felt that we were acting properly in using or attempting to use any influence at our command to avoid trouble. We had, as I recited yesterday, and I desire to repeat it to-day, endeavored to keep in touch with every interest in the city of Altoona in this trouble, and the action taken was largely the joint action of the various interests involved. It was not just publicity features and the issuing of statements and appeals to the public, and this appeal to the pastors was not my personal conclusion entirely. It was the result of these meetings which I had with these people in the community. I say frankly to you that I don't believe that there was a strike conducted with a greater deference to public opinion than that was.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Deference on whose part?

Mr. CREIGHTON. On my part.

Commissioner GARRETSON. How about the other party, the strikers themselves, did they show proper regard for public opinion?

Mr. CREIGHTON. You know what my opinion of that would be, of course——

Commissioner GARRETSON (interrupting). Let's follow this pastor business through a little bit further. In one case that appeared before this commission it was made perfectly apparent that unless the preachers in communities dominated by the corporations preached the gospel according to the tenets laid down in the manager's office he ceased to preach. Would you consider that legitimate?

Mr. CREIGHTON. By no means, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. What is the difference, except in degree, between attempting to influence by communication the pastors of the churches or to be in a position where the screws could be put on?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would answer that by saying that had I been a pastor and appealed to in an instance of that kind, I should have represented to my parishioners what I thought to be the possible outcome of an unusual gathering such as there might have been incident to this agitation. We were probably more interested and more fearful—I use that term in the proper sense—that something might happen. Here was a holiday or Sunday when there was nothing going on and there were nearly 12,000 shop employees who might attend a meeting of that kind; and, with the possibilities of some excitable individual starting trouble, there is no limit to what might happen. We had the experience of 1877 at Pittsburgh. It was only a matter of five minutes that the whirlwind struck Twenty-eighth Street and then on down to the Union Station, and we had more at stake at Altoona than in 1877 at Pittsburgh, and a very small incident started the trouble there. Now, I asked these gentlemen to use whatever influence they had at their command with the parishioners not to gather at these meetings and to be peaceful and orderly. I talked to some of them on the telephone and I used every persuasion at my command to accomplish what I was after to avoid trouble. I felt it was right, and I still feel it was right.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Would you have considered it right if those organizers had used exactly the same tactics and had been able to influence every pastor in the city to advise his parishioners to go out on strike and to go to these meetings? What, then, would have been your opinion?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would have used more strenuous efforts to have overcome their persuasion.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You would have called on the mayor to do some more arresting?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would have done everything I could to offset it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In other words, we had before this commission a minister of the gospel who testified that he did not have a single laboring man in his congregation, but that he was approached by a business association of the town and notified that unless he withdrew a certain statement that he had made in a sermon in regard to a labor difficulty that was on in the town that he would be driven from his parish. Would that be the next step that was justifiable, in your opinion, in attempting to influence the pulpit?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You would not have any sympathy with that?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I certainly would not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You would not go any further, then, than moral pressure?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would not go any further than asking for the moral support of the people of the community. We acted very largely upon the advice of these people that I have already mentioned as being in consultation with. I made no effort to make a move without first having some—having the same approved by these people. If you recollect, in my original testimony yesterday I mentioned the different interests I had secured for this meeting. I wanted to make certain that I would not be placed in the position which apparently the mayor tried to place me yesterday. I say this very frankly. I don't say I don't think he was doing right from his standpoint, but I do say that I had here the representatives of the board of trade and had the newspaper men and had the mayor and the chief of police, and I had in addition to the representatives of the board of trade a number of business men who were not on the board of trade, and nearly all the walks of life were represented in that preliminary meeting and, I may say, any subsequent meetings. This initial meeting was simply a representative meeting of the meetings that were occurring every day in my office.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There were no elements in that meeting, either press or business, who were in any way influenced by your company or whose interests lay along the same lines as your company? They were just as open to influence by the other side, were they?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; certainly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Both the press and the commercial interests?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Certainly, sir; but it is well to state what you can readily appreciate. Here is a town that is practically dominated by the Pennsylvania Railroad in the sense that it is all Pennsylvania Railroad. There is not an influence there but what ought to be with us in sentiment and feeling and to work with us.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is, in your opinion, they ought to.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Why, certainly; they are our own employees, and they are loyal if left to their own devices. I would like to say in this connection that here is an instance—there were 11,500 men peacefully pursuing their work in the city of Altoona, and as a matter of aggression about 15 organizers came to our town for the sole and express purpose of crippling us at Altoona in order to make successful the strike at Pitcairn, on the western division. That was the whole scheme of operation. Now, here was a peaceful community, fifty some thousand people practically represented by our employees. We have at least 5,000 more employees than the shop employees—that is, the trainmen living in the town and men engaged in the yards, and so forth—that are not included in our shop employees. Here were fifteen or sixteen thousand men invaded by that small body of agitators who endeavored to create the unrest which has been discussed here, and our effort was to prevent that for business reasons, at least. In the normal operation of the railroad we are required to maintain and have our duty to the public, and we in this case fortunately were able to carry that out; but we used only legitimate means. So far as influencing the community is concerned, here is a peculiar situation at Altoona, and you can readily see that in a one-industry town certainly every industry or every walk of life is interested with us, or should be if we are operating properly, and we hope we are.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Therefore you took no chances in associating these two elements with you to receive your desires?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Which two elements?

Commissioner GARRETSON. The business element and the press.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I should—I say we had them right with us.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, I say you were perfectly sure of their agreement with you?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Certainly; because they were all advisers in this course.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And they were advising you for what you considered and what they considered their own interest in the course you took?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Generally, you know, we are selfish.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Sure; that is the only certain thing you can bank on.

Mr. CREIGHTON. In life; yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, you say these men came and created unrest. Is that correct, or was the unrest there and these people simply furnished the channel for its expression?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There was absolutely no unrest in the city of Altoona. It was peaceful there then as to-day.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Isn't there one difference? To-day it may be like the peace of God—it passeth all understanding?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Or the kind you find in a cemetery?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But was it the same kind of peace before 1911?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It certainly was. It is best evidenced by the statement made in one of these books—I have forgotten which one—that during this strike there were 5,000 of our own employees openly and publicly protested against the presence of these agitators in our community, and of their own volition hired the opera house and had a meeting, openly protesting, by personal speech and otherwise, the presence of these people in the community. The men were not dissatisfied.

Commissioner GARRETSON. None of that was inspired by the foremen?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Absolutely none of it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Absolutely spontaneous?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Absolutely spontaneous; I want to say that.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They had no trouble, then, getting a meeting place?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Who?

Commissioner GARRETSON. This meeting for spontaneous expression?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Certainly not. Our campaign had not been started. If it had been, they would not have gotten any meeting place contrary to our authority.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Aishton would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Creighton, your official position is general superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Altoona, is it not?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir. I have six of the superintendents of divisions of the lines east of Altoona, Philadelphia to Pottsville, and the coal branches.

Commissioner AISHTON. And you are the recognized authority of the Pennsylvania Railroad in that territory on all matters pertaining to the operation and conduct of the railroad company's affairs?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. You heard Mayor Hoyer's testimony yesterday? I think he said that one point of difference between you, where you first got crosswise, was on the matter of your trying to incite a riot in Altoona by requesting him to arrest people without a warrant when they were peaceably conducting their business. Have you anything to say in answer to that?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir. I, in a general way, as previously expressed—Mayor Hoyer and myself differed, as the testimony in the case shows, very widely on the possibilities of difficulty at Altoona. At the time of the strike, the afternoon of the strike, there were gatherings in unusual numbers on the streets. The strikers were in—they actually occupied the street in front of my office from curb to curb, so that the street cars could not run. The mob carried everything before it between the Senate Hotel for four blocks east, and the meeting place—

Commissioner AISHTON (interrupting). What do you mean by "carried everything before it," Mr. Creighton?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Why, just simply rushed—

Commissioner AISHTON (interrupting). Wiped the people off the street?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Wiped the people off the street.

Commissioner AISHTON. Stopped the street cars?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Stopped the street cars; and they filled the streets from house line to house line. Now, this is no romance; it is the real fact that I am telling you; what actually did occur—

Commissioner AISHTON (interrupting). I think that is what the commission desires to know.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I do not care to invest it with any inflammatory language at all. I am simply stating the facts as they were. At that time, as soon as we saw that condition of affairs, I asked the presence of the mayor and the chief of police, Mr. Clark, and after a little while they came to my office; came in through the back way, because they would not have been able to get through the front; and I called their attention to this condition of affairs—that if it was allowed to go on there was no limit to what might actually occur—and we had a good many men to protect our property, but we were, as I stated before, vulnerable, because of the large front we had to protect; and I felt that we ought to have some action on his part. I was not able to get any action, as previously expressed. It was clearly a case of lack of appreciation of the dangers incident to the gathering of the large crowd and the possibility of a spark igniting the whole people.

Commissioner AISHTON. What were these men doing that were gathered in the street?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, the usual things that a crowd of that kind do. They were following first the organizers, who were leading them from point to point in defiance of the mayor's command not to speak on the public streets.

Commissioner AISHTON. Had the mayor issued such a command?

Mr. CREIGHTON. He had notified them that they could not speak. He informed me that he had notified them that they could not speak on the public streets; and, notwithstanding that fact, they erected stands and they spoke on the public streets. He notified them they could not parade, and they defied him and paraded. We requested—these parades were participated in by 600 to 1,000 or 1,100 people on several days, and they would gather outside of the city on the public thoroughfares and then march into the city in formation. And I begged him that he would meet them at the city line and tell them to disperse or disperse them, because of what I again repeated that I thought it was a very serious menace to the peace of the community. He refused in every instance, stating it was a peaceful parade, and so forth. Fortunately, it did ultimately develop that no difficulty occurred, but the possibilities were there.

Commissioner GARRETSON. During all this parade, in your opinion and in your judgment, and under the circumstances, there was danger of a general conflagration and riot?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There was that danger; and my appeal to the mayor was simply from the sentiment and appeal of citizens I have just mentioned to you who were all in my office at the very time. There was one night when things were extremely acute, and I begged of the mayor to issue a riot order and disperse the people who were on the street, and he continued to refuse; and that was the night I told him we would be forced to call on the governor for some help if he could not take care of it himself.

Commissioner AISHTON. What action was taken by the mayor then?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, finally he issued some sort of notice and had it posted throughout the town, and they did disperse—that did disperse the crowds, along about 2 o'clock in the morning. Now, my appeal to him was the appeal of these people with whom I was then in consultation. It was not a personal matter. This thing, I am frank to state to you gentlemen, it was not my own thought. It was the combined effort of everybody with whom I was in consultation and who at various times every day were in my office.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is, citizens of the town?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Citizens and representatives of the newspapers and board of trade.

Commissioner AISHTON. Mr. Hoyer testified yesterday, I believe, that Altoona had a population of 52,000 people, and that their police force consisted of either 42 or 51 men, or something like that.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Say, 50 men.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was there any increase made in this police force during all this time of apparent public disturbance?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No.

Commissioner AISHTON. There were no men employed?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No.

Commissioner AISHTON. Any request made on the mayor to increase the force?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; I made that request.

Commissioner AISHTON. That he afford additional police protection?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was any furnished?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. None was furnished by the city?

Mr. CREIGHTON. None was furnished by the city. No, sir; no increase in his organization.

Commissioner AISHTON. No; this 42 or 51 men, whatever it was, was the only protection?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is all there was.

Commissioner AISHTON. The only protection afforded by the mayor and the city to your company?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is all.

Commissioner AISHTON. I believe you stated there were 7 miles of front—that is, that your shops extend all along the river there, or valley—

Mr. CREIGHTON. Along the railroad.

Commissioner AISHTON. For a distance of 7 miles?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. How much of that 7 miles is in the city limits?

Mr. CREIGHTON. About 3 miles of it.

Commissioner AISHTON. Leaving about 4 miles of it outside the city limits?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That, I suppose, is the usual shop layout, buildings, repair tracks, switching tracks, and everything of that kind? Is it crossed by grade crossing providing an outlet and access?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; no grade crossing.

Commissioner AISHTON. How many bridges are there?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Two bridges east of the city and three street bridges and one footbridge in the city.

Commissioner AISHTON. Are those bridges owned by the city, crossings from outside in the shop ground, or owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. CREIGHTON. The bridges themselves are owned by the city, and we have a right to enter them from our premises to the street.

Commissioner AISHTON. From any city public bridge there is a right of exit; that is, an elevated structure?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Now, I understand there was some trouble on some of these bridges; I think the mayor testified there was trouble on one bridge, and the question was asked by the chairman this morning about this picketing, and whether these men were making requests. Now, at the time that these men created the disturbance on the bridge, the whole shop operations were in progress on the ground underneath, were they not; on your repair tracks, and so forth?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. How many men were working in there without thought of striking, or without striking, not counting the conductors or trainmen or engineers?

Mr. CREIGHTON. These men that we referred to were the employees in the erecting shops.

Commissioner AISHTON. I don't refer to that particular shop, but in your entire shop proper; how many men were going on with their usual work?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I suppose twelve or fifteen hundred in the yards at different places.

Commissioner AISHTON. There were twelve or fifteen hundred in the yard?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; and on the repair track and where they sorted metal and places of that kind.

Commissioner AISHTON. And also in your shops; does that include your machinists and boiler makers, and so forth?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, no.

Commissioner AISHTON. These men were working at this time?

Mr. CREIGHTON. In the shops?

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, we had 11,500 men working in the shops.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is what I wanted to bring out; you had 11,500 men working in that 11-mile stretch at their usual occupation?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. How many strikers were there, approximately? I think you said 800.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; about 800.

Commissioner AISHTON. The men that were on the bridge, that were making these requests and taking this other action, were the strikers or their representatives?

Mr. CREIGHTON. They were there in sympathy with the organizers, and upon the organizers appealing to them they preached to them over the railing of this footbridge. This is a footbridge that has been spoken of.

Commissioner AISHTON. What did these men on the bridges do? You said they threw some missiles?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Now, this particular instance was a little different from the others, but on these bridges we had as many as five or six hundred men collected at times. Well, where we have our eastbound repair yards, and at a point where the stairways went down from the bridges.

Commissioner AISHTON. Were they making peaceable requests to those men to stop work?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Not very peaceable.

Commissioner AISHTON. Explain to the commissioners; some of them are inexperienced in that kind of things, and I would like to have them know.

Mr. CREIGHTON. The bridges were public thoroughfares, and the men would gather on them and fill the bridges and congest them so that our men could not get to their work; could not use the stairways that led down to the ground where they were employed in the car repairing, and trackmen, and so forth.

Commissioner AISHTON. Had they used any abusive language to your knowledge?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Oh, yes, sir; it is what is customary.

Commissioner AISHTON. Did they call them scabs and scratch on their arms?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Sometimes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And when those names were used they would lead to personal assault?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Possibly.

Commissioner AISHTON. That actually took place, did it, on this occasion?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; it had taken place constantly, and this force of deputies of about 50, which I had as a mobile force to be moved from one point to another, was the only force I had at my command to disperse this crowd of people, outside of the city limits.

Commissioner AISHTON. These occurrences—I just want the commission to have a mind picture of what was really going on there, and as evidencing the necessity or the wisdom of your requesting the mayor for some kind of action to stop that kind of thing, and if there is anything more on that line that the commission ought to know, I would be very glad to have you state it.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I want to state, as far as the outlying conditions were concerned, we did get ultimately the active support of Sheriff Orr, who swore in at our request fifty-some deputies, and he personally was in charge of those deputies at our headquarters at Twelfth Street, holding them there in readiness to take them in our automobiles, which have been referred to, to any point of expected attack, and he was the man that we largely depended upon for protecting us at points outside of the city limits. We got no protection whatever inside of the city limits except the customary passive protection on the part of the mayor, who would send to our shop gates, of which we had probably 15 or 20, a number of his officers, who would stand by placidly and say nothing or do nothing actively to protect us. We, on our part, had to preserve at those gates an extremely large force, because we could not go out in the streets and could not get to our work, but in the outlying thoroughfares this force that I have spoken of, it would be taken to a place such as has been indicated, where a crowd was gathered, and interfered with our men, and the sheriff with his deputies would clear the way and allow the men to go to and from their work.

Commissioner AISHTON. During all of this period of disturbance, there were approximately 11,500 at work in your shops?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And there were 800 men—that would make about 10,700 men peaceably at work?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And 800 men that were out trying to influence the other fellows by such means as they thought best?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. The mayor yesterday laid a good deal of stress on a conference in the schedule room, and I think you testified that you could not recall just what time that took place, but my recollection is that you had issued a notice that on June 2, at 7 a. m., all the men that wanted to return to work must be in their places, or were out of the service?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And this meeting was on June 2, in which the mayor endeavored to have you extend that time and let the men go back to work?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That was the difficulty, of finding out what date the mayor had in mind. I would like to explain about this schedule room.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Hoyer was right about that, it was the evening of the same day?

Commissioner AISHTON. That is the mayor's testimony, I think. I just wanted to clear it up so that Mr. Creighton might refresh his memory from the record and submit to the commission just what took place on that day.

Mr. CREIGHTON. There is no doubt of what took place that day, because it was taking place every day, because in what is known as my schedule room meetings were held constantly. We were constantly in conference with our fellow officers, or our superintendents or subordinates. We have a room known as a schedule room, but the name is a sort of misnomer, it doesn't mean what it says, because we make up no schedules in that room any more, but it is a large room and has a long table that we can gather around and have a meeting, and this is the room that I invited those men in to this conference, and other conferences.

Commissioner AISHTON. On this occasion, June 2, you invited the mayor to this conference?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. The meeting was not solicited by the mayor or chief of police?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; it was at my solicitation in every instance.

Commissioner AISHTON. But at that meeting the mayor brought up the question of extending the time?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And giving those men further time?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. The mayor made a statement yesterday—

Mr. CREIGHTON (interrupting). In that connection I would like to emphasize, Mr. Aishton, that notice of appeal made to us on the part of the citizens.

Commissioner AISHTON. I was just coming to that in a minute. The mayor, I think, left an impression on the minds of the commission that you were averse to extending the time, but that you made the proposition to the mayor that if there could be a petition circulated, that was as he expressed it, "to save your face"?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Save my face?

Commissioner AISHTON. Yes, sir; I think that is in the record, at least that is the impression I got, that you would be willing to consider the matter on something of that kind. What are the facts in regard to that?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Merely as stated in this report. The first notice was issued on the afternoon of the strike, on May 31, in which notice I told the men that they would be required to report on June 2, 1911, at 7 o'clock a. m., and failing to do so, they would be considered as having left the service. Now, those gentlemen with whom I consulted thought that they would like to have us be a little more generous, and they of their own volition circulated or presented us with this petition, which I read to you, asking us to extend the time past June 2, and I recollect as stated a while ago, I think it was on Friday. We paid no attention to that notice in the returning of the men, and allowed the time to lapse, and we took men back until, I recollect, on Monday.

Commissioner AISHTON. So that the mayor's understanding about the way that petition was circulated does not agree with your knowledge and understanding of the manner in which it was started?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; not at all. I didn't have to save my face, he has no reason for saying that at all, because I was acting in consultation with the others.

Commissioner AISHTON. I simply wanted an opportunity to have it put in the record as contrary to the mayor's statement. Mr. Reading was the master mechanic or superintendent of motive power at Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; Mr. Reading was.

Commissioner AISHTON. And I don't know that it is necessary to raise any further question on that account, to call attention again to the mayor's statement yesterday before this commission to the effect that Mr. Reading had stated to the mayor that they had had fixed, "That we had"—that is the language he used—"we have fixed the judge and prosecuting attorney, and it is up to you." Now, Mr. Reading is your subordinate?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. You as general superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad are responsible for the policies of the Pennsylvania Railroad and for the carrying out of the policies of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Altoona and the territory you have charge of?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. If any movement of any kind is made, it could not be made except through you?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It could not.

Commissioner AISHTON. And there was no such move made, as I understand from your testimony?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There absolutely was not.

Commissioner AISHTON. The Pennsylvania Railroad or you, yourself, had no interest in this man Luther?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It is all merely incident. There is no reason whatever for bringing it up in this at all.

Commissioner AISHTON. Luther was not an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was not in your employ in any capacity?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; and was not on our police force.

Commissioner AISHTON. He was a constable of Juniata Township, and had been elected some months previous and had a term of five months to serve?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I don't know how much time he had to serve. We had nothing to do with his election, and the matter was one of his own volition from beginning to end.

Commissioner AISHTON. If it is not understood, Mr. Chairman, I wish it would be understood that Mr. Creighton will furnish an affidavit sworn to by Mr. Reading as to the circumstances referred to, and put it in evidence as a matter of record.

(See Chenery exhibit at end of this subject.)

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want it also understood that the mayor, Mr. Hoyer, be asked to furnish an affidavit in addition to his testimony, as to what he has stated was the circumstances.

Chairman WALSH. Mrs. Harriman has some questions to ask.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Mr. Creighton, there has been a good deal said about conferences that you held with city officials; now, I very much wish to know whether before or after the disturbance you have described with the 750 or 800 men marching through the streets, if, on the part of the railroad officials, there was any attempt made to confer with the labor organizers or representative committees of the men?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There certainly was not. They were intruders, and we had nothing in common with them. They came there with the express purpose of disrupting our organization and creating unrest and creating a strike for the express purpose of requiring us to settle a dispute 100 miles west; and under the circumstances we did not deem it our duty to consult with this character of men whose presence in the community was simply for that purpose of disturbing our usual and ordinarily normal prosecution of the company's duty to the public.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. Did you feel that this 750 or 800 men were absolutely satisfied with conditions before the organizers came in?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Which men?

Commissioner HARRIMAN. The men that went out on the strike; the men who were influenced to go out on a strike by the organizers; were they perfectly satisfied before?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There was not one iota of discussion of a strike until those men arrived there. They were not all there during the entire time. At one time the majority of them were there, but during this strike at one time or another 15 of these men were there. They came in singly and in parties of two or three; as they needed support, they would send for a man of peculiarly persuasive influence in order to get results.

Now we, as has been developed at this hearing, used all the means at our command to ascertain the real facts connected with the current conditions on our railroad; there was absolutely no intimation or indication of trouble east of the Allegheny Mountains until this trouble at Pitcairn; then, finding themselves unable to accomplish anything at Pittsburgh for the settlement of the difficulty to their satisfaction, this weapon was used of sending their organizers into Altoona so as to create unrest and discontent at that point. We naturally would not, Mrs. Harriman, feel it was our duty to at all consult one or more men of this character in order to have quiet and order where there already was quiet and order; and the whole object of our having these meetings in my office was that we could get these citizens to use their means of not allowing any improper action on the part of these people, we being entirely circumscribed in our actions within the confines of the railroad company's property. Our whole scene of operation was, you might say, within the fence lines of our own domain.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. If you had right so completely on your side, might you have not been able to persuade those leaders, if you had given them a chance to air their side, to convince them that they were in the wrong?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It did not so appear to me.

Commissioner HARRIMAN. What did you say to them?

Mr. CREIGHTON. There was nothing to discuss with them; we had nothing in common. They came there for the purpose of creating disorder in our ranks, and I did not feel it was the proper thing for me to do to ask them to desist.

Commissioner AISHTON. Have they presented to you any demands or requests of any specific nature; have you ever to this day received any demands or request of a specific nature from organizers or heads of this organization?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Only in this way I spoke of; this self-appointed committee of 48 who were appointed by these organizers at the meeting held on that Sunday afternoon at Juniata.

Commissioner AISHTON. You would hardly feel at liberty, as an officer of a railroad, to negotiate with these 800 men regarding the affairs of 10,700 men, with no knowledge on your part, in view of the fact that those 10,700 men were peaceably at work and had nothing to do with the other 800 men?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Those 750 or 800 men, as I stated, in no wise represented the general organization of the Altoona shops. At the time these meetings were held there were close to 11,000 men peaceably at work carrying on their daily work, and these other men were creating the disorder in the streets and in the vicinity of our railroad, and endeavoring to get more of the peaceable employees out on strike.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Arising out of the replies to some of the questions that have been asked you by Mr. Aishton, I find it difficult to reconcile some of the statements made or to understand just what your viewpoint was; you may reconcile it without any difficulty. To start with, you stated there was no unrest among the employees until it was created, and that the organizers were only able to create it in 800 men. Then you stated, in reply to questions, that there were 11,500 men who were absolutely loyal and who remained at work all the time without unrest; and then you stated that on account of your intense apprehension as to what these men that were out might do you insisted on the mayor arresting these men; that you had deputy sheriffs sworn in; wanted the police force of the city increased; and stated you would have to have the constabulary. How could that take place when there were only 800 men against 11,500 men that were loyal?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I could answer that by stating that if you had been in the city of Altoona and seen the effect of 800 men parading, with the organizers at their head, followed by a band, followed by the usual crowd that consorts with a body of that kind, you could readily understand that the possibilities of trouble were there. You know, in difficulties of this kind, that in 9 cases out of 10 we are told, you know, that the striker creates no trouble; it is the mob that goes with it; and that was our anxiety in this case. The 800 men parading the streets—that act of itself created disorder in the city, and it carried with it the usual mob of boys and men out of employment who were not themselves actually engaged in this strike, but they were part of the mob that filled the streets.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Where did this mob come from, if there were 11,500 employees loyal and at work in a town of 52,000 population? There you have got close to the family unit.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Are the streets especially narrow in Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No.

Commissioner GARRETSON. This mob of 800—for how many squares did it fill the streets, from curb to curb, and stop all foot traffic, vehicles, and street-railway traffic?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would say that for three blocks the streets were so blockaded the street cars did not run.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Until the parade walked three blocks?

Commissioner AISHTON. I thought you said they stood in front of your office?

Mr. CREIGHTON. They did stand in front of my office; and, in addition, it is quite apparent, if one will think a moment, that a parade may gather a crowd.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I have paraded.

Mr. CREIGHTON. You have paraded and know what I mean, and perhaps have gone through some of these experiences we have been discussing, and you know the character of the people that usually assemble; they come from every nook and corner of the community.

Commissioner GARRETSON. With this army of 11,500 loyal men of your own do you wonder that the mayor was not impressed with your intense apprehension?

Mr. CREIGHTON. The 11,500 men—or 11,000 men, to be a little more precise—in an agitation of that kind there is always an element of uncertainty as to what others of them might do. You recognize, Mr. Garretson, as well as I recognize, that an agitation of this kind at any time is likely to draw out this gang or that gang, and they might go out at different hours of the day, a few here and a few there, and our effort was not to permit those things and to avoid the effect of more men withdrawing from the service.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I can readily understand that if there was unrest; but if there was no unrest I can not understand it.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, Mr. Garretson, the fact that there were 800 men—which is, of course, a relatively small number—on the streets of Altoona following organizers, making speeches on the open streets, that might of itself constitute a very serious condition of affairs in any orderly community of the size of Altoona; and certainly we, and particularly myself, representing the interests of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., had to recognize anything that might in any sense contribute to the difficulty of that situation.

Again I repeat what I said about Twenty-eighth Street. No man who lived through—any man who lived through that knows very well it was not the force of numbers at all; it was a local incident that created all the trouble there and precipitated the fire and riot and great loss of property and paralysis throughout the entire State of Pennsylvania at least.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It spread a great deal farther. I was in the tail of it out farther west.

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is exactly what I, as a representative of the railroad company, was endeavoring to prevent at Altoona, and I want to say again that notwithstanding the mayor's effort to minimize all this difficulty, there was a real difficulty there, or why should the citizens of Altoona have been with me on repeated occasions?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I suppose if their interests were in common with yours it was perfectly natural they should be.

Mr. CREIGHTON. That was the situation exactly, and about the only one that did not take any real live interest at all was the mayor himself; I say that frankly, I think he had the wrong conception of the effect of 800 or 1,000 men parading in a community of that kind behind those organizers, and that it would not create disorder of one kind or another.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I can understand your position because I have seen the time when I thought that the 20 general managers I was dealing with were the most unreasonable and most apathetic men I ever saw, when they did not agree with me.

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is one of the difficulties we have. We do not always agree with each other.

Commissioner AISHTON. As an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., dealing with large numbers of men, you make a special study, do you not, to discover the causes of unrest, and attempt to remove them, if possible?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. You feel, as an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., that one of the principal assets of the road is the good will and loyalty of its employees, do you not?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; we prize it very highly.

Commissioner AISHTON. And you take every means that you know of to remove causes of unrest?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon has a few questions to ask.

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, at this point, that I have some comment to make here, and I hope you will not drive me away before I have had a chance.

Chairman WALSH. You will have a full opportunity; but as long as this discussion has started, we had better let the other commissioners finish; but you may make the comment you desire before you close.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Creighton, did any violence—did any injury take place to individuals growing out of these parades, so far as you know?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I could not cite any, Mr. Lennon.

Commissioner LENNON. Is it still your judgment that had the mayor pursued the policy that you advised at the time and had used the force to drive these people off of the streets, that the city of Altoona and its citizenship would have been better served than by pursuing the policy which he did?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That was my view at the time, and I think so to-day; I think we would have had a settlement of the difficulty probably some days in advance of the actual settlement. That question, of course, is just my judgment and question of opinion. I exercised my judgment in appealing to him to have certain things done, and he simply did not agree with me.

Commissioner LENNON. These parades and assemblages of men in all cases evidently dispersed without doing injury?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, they each had their influence toward the possibility of creating disorder; I know we feared that more than anything else.

Commissioner LENNON. No substantial disorder occurred because of the carrying out of the mayor's policies, did there?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Except the particular thing that I mentioned where the streets were very badly congested on several occasions. To say the least it was to the discomfort of the community, and what I feared was that it was liable to precipitate this difficulty at our shops.

Commissioner LENNON. You spoke of occurrences on some of the bridges that crossed the track; were you present? Do you speak from your own observation?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; I rode about in an automobile and saw those things.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you consider it a crime for men to quit work, or, in other words, to go out on strike?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Not a bit, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you believe that men have a right to organize?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you permit them to exercise that right if they remain in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and in the shops at Altoona, where you are the principal officer in charge?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; qualified by the comment that was made by Mr. Atterbury, that our interests are not jeopardized by any discussion of the question of the closed shop and affiliation with organizations that may approve of sympathetic strikes with interests that are in no wise connected with our own operation. But so far as the organization of our own men is concerned, we spend a great portion of our time in consultation with these men. Their committees are in weekly conference, I will say, with our officers at all points on the system.

Commissioner LENNON. Did these organizers that came apparently from outside of Altoona behave themselves, in so far as their personal conduct was concerned? Did they keep sober or engage in brawls? Were they profligate or did they behave themselves decently while in Altoona?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I prefer not, unless you—there were some things connected with their personal conduct which I do not think it would help us to mention here. Our means of ascertaining facts connected with what they did there were complete; they did do a good many things that I hardly think would amount to anything for me to mention here. So far as their work connected with organization was concerned, that was conducted in the usual business manner; they used emissaries of all kinds, and were on their part, I know, just as earnest to organize the men as we, on our part, were to prevent it, considering the ultimate end and aim of this character of organization.

Commissioner LENNON. Then, so far as this particular incident was concerned, you did use what influence you had to prevent the men from organizing?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; in this case, because it was the expressed intention on their part to use it for the purpose of settling a dispute elsewhere on our railroad, and we were asked to meet representatives of organizations known to be favorable to the closed shop and sympathetic strike, and that, of course, considering our obligation to the public, we feel ought not to be involved in any wise in our labor questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you hold that the principle which underlies the sympathetic strike, that which actuates labor in entering upon a sympathetic strike, is reprehensible?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. You think it reprehensible for men to help each other?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is your way of expressing it; but to those of us who are charged with doing things, it certainly seems wrong that men with whom we have no dispute should be called out, to our detriment, to settle a dispute that may occur hundreds or thousands of miles away from us, simply in order that the grievance of some one else may be settled by force. We do not feel that we ought to suffer in that way; it is a different viewpoint. The sympathetic strike is approved generally by certain organizations; but we have never felt it was a fair thing to the employer, and that, again, is a different viewpoint.

Commissioner LENNON. Does not the same principle exist to a greater or less extent in the cooperation of corporations and large moneyed interests; I mean this same spirit of helping each other?

Mr. CREIGHTON. We all ought to help each other, Mr. Lennon. I quite agree with you in that. Anything that will help one another, but will not disturb any interest in the whole body politic, we feel is a good thing.

Commissioner LENNON. One matter came out in your testimony I want to ask one question about. In these conferences that were held and called by yourself, or by your representatives, of the editors, and chamber of commerce representatives, I did not hear that you mentioned an invitation to any wageworkers to attend these conferences. Why was that? Were there wageworkers in Altoona that were not involved in this controversy at all?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes; we had 11,000.

Commissioner LENNON. I mean were they not employees other than those employed by your company—carpenters, bricklayers, waiters, and such; clerks?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; I did not ask them; I do not think there would have been any objection to it. Here were employers of labor, and that thought never occurred to me. I would not have had any objection, however, to it.

Commissioner LENNON. That is, you were employers of labor, and you invited other employers whom you believed were in sympathy with you to cooperate?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No; I would not say that, Mr. Lennon; I was not aware that these other people were in sympathy with me prior to my invitation that they meet with me to discuss this situation. It was a perfectly frank and open discussion of what we thought was an impending difficulty, and which actually later on occurred, and they were called in without reference to whether or not they agreed with me. I hoped they might be sympathetic to the extent that they could assist me in avoiding difficulty in our community.

Commissioner LENNON. Did you have no acquaintance, or the representatives of your company have no acquaintance with wageworkers in the city of Altoona that were worthy citizens, that had the good and welfare of the community at heart, that were as much interested in justice and right, as were the proprietors of newspapers and representatives of the chamber of commerce, and who could have been called into such conferences?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I believe there was any number of them, but it never occurred to me. It is one of those things that at the time did not appeal to me, I just simply—that phase of consulting with those people never occurred to me; I would not have objected to it at all; I would have been very glad to do it if I had thought of it.

Commissioner LENNON. It was not prompted by a feeling, perhaps, not particularly considered as a feeling, that they earned their living by working for wages, and they might prove to be in sympathy with the men on strike?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir; I would have selected men in Altoona that were not at all in sympathy with this movement. I would like at this point to say that my attitude toward labor and toward the welfare of labor is exactly that of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I always was interested in the betterment of mankind in various ways. Our history indicates that. We have endeavored to recite here the various things that can be done for the welfare of our men. As far as I am personally concerned, I have spent a great portion of my life in work of that character, and simply mention it in order that you may understand that we are not so tyrannical in our views in reference to the pursuit of labor because they may happen to be an employee. We respect labor, and personally I have the greatest respect for it. I have, as I say, been personally interested in welfare work for 20 or 30 years. I am to-day the chairman of the State organization of Young Men's Christian Association in the State of Pennsylvania, carrying on the work of helping mankind in one way and another to better methods of living, and I only mention this to indicate to you that there is no disposition on our part to encroach on labor to its discomfort or annoyance.

Commissioner LENNON. Is that welfare work; is it not prompted largely with a view of offsetting the efforts of the working people for organization?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It is not, sir. I am speaking personally, for myself, it is not; it is an interest in the man himself.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, we will say, suppose I come to Altoona and endeavor to organize the men, tried in a gentlemanly way, would there be any interference, direct or indirect, with my carrying on that work if I wanted to carry it on for a year.

Mr. CREIGHTON. It would depend entirely on our information as to what your ultimate end might be.

Commissioner LENNON. My ultimate end would be to raise wages and decrease the hours of labor and better the conditions of the men in the shops.

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is all right, as long as there are not along with those laudable endeavors the proposition of a closed shop and sympathetic strike, with possibly one or two other matters. The main thing we fear in operation is the closed shop and sympathetic strike, they are the two drastic matters that the railroad man is in constant dread of. We know what it means, we have had it in the West recently, and all over the country at various times, and have absolutely insisted always upon the open shop and the absence of any effort to make our system otherwise by strikes of men at other points.

Commissioner LENNON. If I was to appear there in Altoona for the American Federation of Labor, to which you ascribe certain ideas of organization, then you would oppose in so far as you might be able the possible carrying on of that work?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would repeat what I did in 1911 by every proper and legal means, and endeavor to prevent the organization under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor for the reasons expressed, feeling that I was doing my duty by the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I took it that while on the one hand, Mr. Creighton, you believe that individuals ought to aid individuals and groups of men ought to aid groups of men, that when such aid involves injury to a third innocent party you regard it as unrighteous?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Unrighteous? I hardly know whether I would apply that as a term in the business sense; I would say it was wrong and something to be avoided.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If it was wrong, it would be unrighteous?

Mr. CREIGHTON. From the standpoint of an officer, I would certainly oppose anything of that character that might prevent me carrying out my normal work as an officer of the railroad.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, your objection to a sympathetic strike is that if some group of workers and some employer have trouble—have a dispute—that it is unrighteous for them to inflict injury on you as an innocent employer?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; to use me as a means for correcting trouble at another point. That was exactly the situation in 1911. We had no interest in the controversy at Pittsburgh; they were purely local to that point, and consequently I felt that it was entirely wrong to be subjected to the annoyance that we were, and to the very large expenditure that we were called upon to make simply that those men might satisfy that grievance over a hundred miles west of us.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And there was inflicted injury on an innocent party, and whenever that is done it is wrong?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the sympathetic strike, in your opinion, does inflict injury on innocent people?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you oppose it?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you consider that, for instance, if the machinists on the western end of the Pennsylvania were on a strike and the machinists at the Altoona shop went out on strike, do you consider that as a sympathetic strike for the same employer?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is not the point. Here is the case: We might have been just as well two shops on different railroads. The information we had was precise and to the point—that these organizers were to come to Altoona for the express purpose of organizing our men in order that they might paralyze our railroad at that point, in order to make their strike at Pitcairn effective, which it was not. They had pursued their opposition there to the ultimate end without exactly getting the results, and inability to perform its functions, and they thought then they would come to Altoona and by creating a strike at Altoona that they could be successful at Pitcairn.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That you would consider to be a sympathetic strike?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If the machinists, for instance, at Pittsburgh—we will use the cities that we know—suppose your largest shop was at Pittsburgh—I am simply using that name because it is well known—that the machinists were on strike in Pittsburgh against a reduction of wages in Pittsburgh shops, and they had to go on strike against a reduction of wages, and they went on strike, and that the company moved the locomotives, or the locomotives were taken from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia, saying it was the next largest shop, for repairs, and if the machinists in Philadelphia should refuse to work on those engines, you would consider them on a sympathetic strike?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I certainly would, for they have no local grievance.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They are working for the same employer and the same company.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir; the same employer; but it might extend from Chicago to the seaboard, and it ought not to be started at some other point.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then, all the employer would have to do would be to move his rolling stock from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia, and that would settle it?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Your comment was that we had men that were dissatisfied with the conditions of employment at Pittsburgh, without any reference to the conditions at Philadelphia?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CREIGHTON. And then I would say frankly that I would consider the introduction of that trouble by organizers into the city of Philadelphia just simply as a sympathetic strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, Mr. Creighton, I want to read to you some of the testimony given before this commission yesterday by Mr. Maurer, the president of the Federation of Labor of the State of Pennsylvania, and to invite your comment on it. It reads as follows:

"Q. You say that you and the State federation of labor are opposed to the State constabulary?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Are you also opposed to the National Guards?—A. Well, to tell you the truth, all organized labor is opposed to the National Guards in the past. It has been opposed.

"Q. Now, are we to understand that, as you know the situation, that if organized labor had its way it would wipe out the National Guards?—A. There is not much to wipe out any more. Poor little tin soldiers that they are; I can not help but pity them as I look at them.

"Q. May I ask you to answer my question?—A. Yes, sir; if I had my way about it, my dear sir, there would not be a soldier on earth. I think it is a disgrace to our twentieth century civilization that we are still at each other's throats murdering each other.

"Q. How would you protect life and property from the lawless?—A. Quit pursuing people and they will be peaceful. People that are not robbed never revolt.

"Q. Then you don't believe there are such things as criminals?—Oh, yes; sure.

"Q. How would you protect yourself against the criminal?—A. Oh, the criminal? The criminal that we don't find is all right; you can not bother with him, because we can not catch him, but the fellow we catch he is too dumb to be a criminal, and that is why we catch him; he don't have the qualifications of a criminal.

"Q. I don't suppose you profess ignorance of the fact that in labor troubles labor representatives do violate law and resort to crime and blow up houses and bridges, and how would you protect the employer and his property against conditions of that sort?—A. You have reference to the structural iron workers?

"Q. Yes, sir.—A. That is a condition entirely. The one responsible for that condition was the employer, or those who exploit labor themselves. They advocate to-day, we heard it here, we always hear it, of no organization, that they believe in dealing with the individual, and they teach people that way; that is the theory of the individual, that he can work out his own destiny. The McNamaras were strict individualists, in so far as they believed in individualism, but not in political action, and they believed that they could do as they pleased. The power was used against them, and they used the same weapon.

"Q. If you were an employer, how would you protect yourself against the McNamaras?—A. If I was an employer, I would be like any other if I expected to succeed in business.

"Q. Please answer my question. If you were an employer, how would you protect yourself against the McNamaras?—A. I told you I would be like most any other employer.

"Q. How would you protect yourself? If they come and blew up your property?—A. They would blow it up; I couldn't stop it. I don't know that I would do anything else than what the other men are doing now. I would try to protect my own interests. The individual is not to be blamed; you must get the system and not the individual.

"Q. If you were an employer, and you had a dispute with your workers, and you would not agree with them, and they blew up your premises and killed a lot of innocent people, would you try to prevent a repetition of those circumstances?—A. I might answer you if I cared to be untruthful that if I was an employer I would not have such conditions.

"Q. Suppose the workers ask what you felt was an unjust demand, and a thing that you could not meet at all; you know that workers are sometimes human, and are made out of the same sort of clay as the rest of us, and they are as likely to be as unreasonable as employers; suppose the employee asked what you thought was an impossibility, an unfair and unjust position, could you submit or not?—A. If I thought it was impossible, I could not do it.

"Q. You could not agree with your worker then?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Suppose they resorted to violence?—A. I never knew of one yet that did, unless they were goaded on by the men that wanted them to do violence."

I want to invite your comment on these two points: First, do you agree with Mr. Maurer in his statement that he never knew of a worker that did resort to violence unless he was goaded on by the man that wanted him to do violence; and second, I want to invite your comment, as a man of broad experience in labor matters, as to what in your judgment would be the condition in the State of Pennsylvania, for example, in times of labor troubles, if the State constabulary and National Guards were wiped out?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would hesitate very much, Mr. Weinstock, to attempt to make much comment on Mr. Maurer's testimony. I am familiar with Mr. Maurer's history, and I don't agree with his policy; I heard his testimony yesterday, and in no sense would I agree with his views on the labor question. In my judgment—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just a moment, Mr. Creighton. Mr. Walsh calls my attention to the fact that the hour of adjournment is at hand. Will you defer your answer until after lunch?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. We will now stand adjourned until 2 o'clock.

(Whereupon at 12.30 p. m. Friday, May 7, 1915, the commission took a recess until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

TESTIMONY OF MR. G. W. CREIGHTON—Continued.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You will remember, Mr. Creighton, my last question. My last question, in substance, was an invitation for your comments on the attitude of Mr. Maurer when he said that he had never heard—that he never knew of a labor man yet that had resorted to violence unless he was goaded on by the men that wanted them to do violence; and his other point was that he, in common with organized labor, believed that the State constabulary and militia should be wiped out. And your comments on those two statements were invited.

Mr. CREIGHTON. Just at the moment I do not suppose I could recite any particular experience of the actual commission of an offense at any particular point; but there is no doubt in my mind that we could—almost anyone of us could—discover evidence of an offense of that character directly by those engaged in the strike. We do know that was the wholesale difficulty in 1877, when there was a general assault upon the property of the railroad company; and in our own case our officers were practically driven to secrete themselves for their personal protection, to avoid serious consequences at the hands of the strikers. That was one experience.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were those strikers members of organized labor?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Well, the men were all engaged at that time in this work—striking. They were all strikers, and somebody read—the history here recites that all the means at the command of the State were necessary to ultimately secure order. For some days there was no order. There was disorder of the worst kind at very many points on the system, and I can hardly conceive of what the general conditions socially might be if a difficulty of that kind would arise again and there be no legally constituted means such as the National Guard or the State constabulary to protect the public.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you think the wiping out of the constabulary or of the National Guard would make for peace and law and order?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I do not, sir. I think rather to the contrary.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was the State constabulary brought into this trouble that you have been telling us about this morning of 1911?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So far as you know, has the State constabulary been brought into labor troubles in Pennsylvania in recent times?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I personally have no knowledge of that, sir. They have been used generally throughout the State for the preservation of order. They have, as far as I know, headquarters at different points within the State where small bodies of these men are located in charge of a subordinate officer, for the purpose of patrolling and looking after a prescribed area and seeing that peace is preserved, just as the ordinary local police officer within any community.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have seen the State constabulary in action?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Personally I have not, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that you can not speak from personal knowledge?

Mr. CREIGHTON. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As to how they conduct themselves when called upon to render a service in a public disturbance?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Not from any personal knowledge, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is their general reputation in the State, as far as you know, in every respect? Are they looked down upon as an undesirable lot?

Mr. CREIGHTON. It has been my impression that their reputation has been of the very highest order. They are a very carefully selected lot of men; they are men who have probably had more than the ordinary advantages in the way of education; some of them have served in our Army; they are men who probably prefer a life of that kind, as some do. Their conduct, as far as I know, is above reproach. I never heard it criticized, except in a general way, that it was in Mr. Maurer's testimony yesterday.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you heard Mr. Maurer's testimony. You heard the sweeping manner in which he condemned the State constabulary as being unfit and undesirable. What justification, as far as you know, for that sweeping condemnation on his part?

Mr. CREIGHTON. None whatever, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think he does the State constabulary an injustice?

Mr. CREIGHTON. A very grave one.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know what the general public's opinion is in Pennsylvania about the State constabulary?

Mr. CREIGHTON. The general public, I believe, have the very highest opinion of the general morals of the service, and of the individual members in that service. The officer in command, Capt. Groome, is a citizen very much respected in the city of Philadelphia, his home town. His reputation as an officer in that character of work is probably second to none in this country, and I believe that has been attested to by the efforts of other States to secure his services to organize a similar force.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Mr. Maurer, among other things, made this statement: He said in the American Cossack, referring to a little book that he said he had written himself, proved that they were—that is, the constabulary—partial in their conduct and used to break strikes, and used by the Lehigh Traction Co. as guards and as attorneys for the strike breakers; paid strike breakers' fines and arrested men on trumped-up charges and railroaded them to jail; that they invaded the homes of foreigners and searched their homes under the pretext of looking for firearms, "and I was informed, and believed my informant, that they robbed some of these people under the pretense of looking for firearms. They arrested them and took them to the steel company's property, and locked them up and held their court there. They paraded the streets, beat men right and left, trampled old people down, and rode to the Majestic Hotel and shot through the doors and shot one man to death and other men down, and trampled people down with their horses, and did everything possible to incite and create a reign of terror and fear and thereby break the strike."

Has any knowledge come to you, Mr. Creighton, as an old citizen of Pennsylvania, that would corroborate that statement?

Mr. CREIGHTON. I would say nothing about that testimony, as the trouble occurred a good many miles from my home, and I know nothing about it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. He goes on further to say [reading]:

"I might add that so unpopular has this department become in the State that notwithstanding the fact that the press of other States have been trying to laud it and eulogize this department to the extent that the other States would adopt it, to show you that it is not as popular as the press would have you believe, for the past four years they have tried to increase this department, and I happened to be a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature for the past three sessions myself, and know whereof I speak."

According to this witness's testimony, one would be led to believe that the constabulary was extremely unpopular in the State of Pennsylvania, is that your judgment?

Mr. CREIGHTON. Not as far as I know. There has been opposition on the part of certain people of the character voiced by Mr. Maurer, but that does not represent the sentiment of the whole community by any means. I would say it was rather a small minority, neither does it represent the sentiment of the large part of the community in any large degree.

Commissioner AISHTON. Just one question and answer, in answer to one of the questions regarding your attitude toward a sympathetic strike. I think you said the objection was that it interfered with the railway company's transaction of business and with the employee. Now, Mr. Atterbury, in his testimony, said that the objection on the part of the Pennsylvania Railroad to a sympathetic strike was on account of a grievance they had, that they had no control over, and which they had no power to remedy themselves; that the service of the railroad and the welfare of the public on its lines would be seriously interrupted. Is that the reason that you have for an objection to the sympathetic strike?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is the underlying point involved in all labor questions.

Commissioner AISHTON. Then an issue over which the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad had no control?

Mr. CREIGHTON. That is the primary reason for our objection to the sympathetic strike, that it interferes with our duty to the public to operate our property in a normal way. In other words, our duty is primarily to the public, and a sympathetic strike in a very large degree would interfere with that public function.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. I believe you have a statement that you wish to read?

Mr. CREIGHTON. If you will let me glance at some notes I have here, sir.

Mr. Chairman, in that evidence given by Mayor Hoyer, he mentioned one incident in which, in his experience as mayor of the city of Altoona, an officer—I do not think he mentioned directly who—an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad had attempted, or had succeeded in interfering in some of his official actions. I have thought over that matter last night, and, as nearly as I could place that incident, he must have referred to an incident in connection with a paving contract which created a great deal of discussion in our city. A large number of our reputable people, including myself as a representative of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., a very large taxpayer, felt that the investigation as to several kinds of paving had not been properly pursued, and we asked for a little further exploitation of the whole problem, but the contract was ultimately let, and in furtherance of that scheme we—and when I say “we” I mean this committee of citizens, which included a dozen or fifteen prominent people, owners of property—we combined together and employed an expert of the United States Government on paving—I have forgotten his name, but connected with the department here—to examine paving in various cities and give us an opinion. Having obtained which we asked his presence in the city of Altoona and had a meeting of councilmen, and we simply insisted on being heard, after which hearing our case was so clearly proven to the body that we reversed their former action and we advertised for the work; and possibly I think that is the one matter referred to by the mayor that he may have been annoyed about—by that insistence on our part; but we were acting then only as one interest, we paying our proportion of the charge for this expert on paving. I can give you a history of that, if you desire; I just at present have not got the fact in my mind.

Chairman WALSH. You may submit anything further you wish on that.

Mr. CREIGHTON. There are some notes here which I am just simply looking over; I do not want to read them, because I think I have covered these notes in the testimony I have already given.

Chairman WALSH. Unless there is something more, Mr. Creighton, which you wish to say, I believe we will close now with you, because there is such an insistent demand to get through with this subject this afternoon, because so many of the witnesses want to get away.

Mr. CREIGHTON. If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I want to say one thing further with reference to the question of service card, and so forth, which you asked me about this morning. I would like to state for the company that everyone leaving the company is given a service card clearly indicating his term of service and stating the cause of the severance of his service with the company. I have been trying to post myself since I left the stand this morning. Upon receipt of inquiry from other railroads we pass to them a form upon which the individual is asked for certain information. In asking Mr. Hoover, who looks after that in my office, he said we have probably had half a dozen last year, and I want to say we have no so-called black list; nothing of that character.

Chairman WALSH. That will be all. Thank you, Mr. Creighton.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. W. LEE, JR.

Chairman WALSH. State your name please.

Mr. LEE. J. W. Lee.

Chairman WALSH. We have been over the general topic of this pretty well, and I know that you are one of the ones who wishes to get away, and we will ask you to make it as brief as possible; we have a number of special topics that we would like to conclude this afternoon. I believe you were asked for a general statement of the publicity organization and the scope of your activities?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. In as brief a manner as you can and still make it comprehensive enough to throw light on it, please tell us about that?

Mr. LEE. I will read this statement, if you will allow me.

Chairman WALSH. All right; do so.

Mr. LEE (reading): "The object of the publicity bureau of the Pennsylvania Railroad is to keep the public advised of the company's activities, in short to take the public into its confidence. Where matters are in controversy we endeavor to see that the company's position is thoroughly understood by the public. The company started its publicity work some nine years ago by first inaugurating a plan of full publicity regarding all accidents on its lines. Since that time the work has been extended to cover the activities of all departments.

"In the matter of accidents we make public the exact reports received by the general manager, and we make them public immediately on receipt of them, very frequently before the newspapers have even heard of the accident. As a matter of fact a carbon copy of the actual report sent to the general manager is shown to reporters who come to our office and a copy of it is sent to the newspapers. We give newspaper reporters and photographers the run of a wreck, assisting them in every way to get all of the information they desire. We do not endeavor to conceal anything. We are willing to be judged by the facts. In this connection we have from time to time issued notices to the press telling of our policy of publicity concerning accidents."

I have those here, if desired.

Chairman WALSH. You can submit them in the record as exhibits.

(Two circulars issued by the Pennsylvania Railroad entitled, respectively, "Notice to the Press—Relative to Method of Making Public Details of Accidents," dated Dec. 18, 1911; and "Methods for Supplying Information to the Press," dated Jan. 10, 1914, were submitted in printed form.)

Mr. LEE (continuing reading): "If people are injured or killed, we announce it as soon as we learn it, and give the names of the people as soon as we can get them. If the cause of an accident is stated in the report received by the general manager, it, too, is made public at once. In the same way, if we go a year, or two years as we just have, and do not have a single one of all the 181,000,000 passengers carried killed in a train accident, we make that fact public.

"We make an effort to see to it that what the press publishes about the railroad shall not consist of complimentary notices about the railroad or our offices, but real facts of consequence. We endeavor to see to it that in all matters the public learns what the railroad believes to be the truth. We take special pains that it learns those facts which show that the management is doing its job as best it can, and which will create the idea that it should be believed in. We tell our story, tell it frankly, tell it fully, tell it often, and tell it with a view to its being understood and carrying conviction.

"An essential principle back of the publicity policy of the Pennsylvania Railroad is this: If it is going to be able to work out its problems properly it has got to be believed in. It must get embedded in the public mind what is, in all truth, the supreme fact of the situation, namely, that it is doing its work as best it can, and doing it, in the main, exceedingly well—doing it as well as, if not better, than the railroad business is being done anywhere else in the world.

"In short, we endeavor to secure the help of the public in working out our problems. To do that we must acquaint people with our problems.

"The first plan of distribution we worked out was to give information verbally and in printed form to the press in Philadelphia, and then to send, when we had time, copies of that information to the papers throughout our system direct. There were some very curious results of that. We found, for example—on one occasion having sent it to the papers direct from Broad Street Station—that some of our officers at outlying points were asked the next day the meaning of a particular article, and they didn't know anything about it. It then became perfectly obvious that the local representative of the company in each city must of necessity know what was being given to the papers in his district. We then developed the plan whereby representatives of the company at various points were appointed to deal with the press in each place. In some cases it was the general superintendent, in other cases the superintendent or the agent or some other employee, as the case might be.

"We consider that this information that we send out is in the nature of a report to the public on how we are performing the obligation we have to give the public good and efficient service. We never pay any newspaper anything to print anything as news, or as an editorial, regarding our service. We want the papers to feel that if we give them any information they can do as they wish with it—publish it or throw it in the wastebasket. What they do does not affect in the slightest the attitude of the company toward them. This policy of the railroad has been commended by the press as a broad one.

"Mr. Rea said, shortly after he became president of the Pennsylvania Railroad: 'Do not ever ask any newspaper not to print anything that is so. If it is bad, let them print it, because in that way the matter will probably be brought to my attention, so that we can have it corrected. The only thing we want to ask of newspapers is that when they do mention the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., or they mention railroad matters generally, they publish the truth in small matters, as well as great.'

"I might say that these instructions given by Mr. Rea are typical of the principles the company follows in its publicity work, as well as all of its other activities.

"Having perfected our system of distributing matter through local representatives, a scheme which we have now enlarged so that it now covers the entire Pennsylvania Railroad system, we have yet found that it is not wise to depend entirely upon the newspapers; that there is a very much broader field to cover, and that we must study methods of getting the attention of people, to get into their minds ideas which we could not get to them through the newspapers. We began to study our own constituencies. We found that we had 85,000 shareholders—the company has now over 92,000—who are certainly direct constituents of the Pennsylvania Railroad proper. The subsidiary lines have about 20,000, so that it can be said that the Pennsylvania Railroad system has approximately 112,000 shareholders. Bondholders we estimate at something over 200,000, though a great many of them are not registered. We have, also, our employees, of whom there are between 200,000 and 250,000 on the lines east and west of Pittsburgh. Of course it is a very difficult thing to get at so many men. We have often thought of publishing a magazine, but that would be a very large undertaking. We therefore have started out by publishing leaflets, giving certain details of operation. We don't send them to everybody; but we get out one, for example, and send it almost entirely to the men on a certain division; in another case we will send it very largely to the men on a grand division; in another case we may send it to the locomotive engineers. The idea is to get before our employees facts of interest which the management feels will be instructive and of benefit to these particular men.

"In addition to our employees we have our passengers—about 150,000,000 a year. This means that every day of the year some 500,000 people take our trains. To get them interested is a large undertaking; therefore we are starting out on a plan of publishing bulletins to be posted on our station bulletin boards. The theory is that in publishing these, with more or less frequency, and getting even a small percentage of these 500,000 people a day that take our trains to read them, we will be able to implant in their minds thoughts and facts—not too heavy—which will cause them to think and to discuss the affairs of our company and railroads generally with their neighbors.

"We shall begin shortly placing in the cars of our trains small folders containing information of interest to passengers.

"We feel that we are just beginning in our publicity work. We are continually trying to find new angles from which to approach the public with information about the work the railroad is trying to do.

"The publicity bureau is in charge of the publicity agent, who has sufficient assistance to carry on the work. At the present time there are eight other people in the department besides the publicity agent."

Chairman WALSH. Are you the publicity agent?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is your staff?

Mr. LEE. I have one man who assists me in the preparation of material; chief clerk, who handles accident reports, the general-matter distribution, and who has charge of the stenographers and clerks in the office.

Chairman WALSH. Are the documents presented to this commission gotten up under your supervision?

Mr. LEE. No; I couldn't say that they were. I had charge of the printing of those documents—the two brown books. They were prepared after a series of meetings in the general office, at which all the facts we could get together were assembled, the points that the company thought pertinent and of interest to the commission were turned over to me to have put in printed form. I attended all of those meetings.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson wants to ask you a question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Lee, a very well-known publicity man testified before this commission some time back that the mission of a publicity man was to place before the public that which the interests which he represented wanted the public to know. You do not agree with that?

Mr. LEE. Well, I think I will bank on what I have just said here.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. O'Connell—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). I was going to say that I have bound copies—something—

Chairman WALSH. Yes; anything you desire to submit may be put in, and also anything we have not asked that you think you ought to put in you are at liberty—

Mr. LEE. I will be glad to give you anything you wish.

(Witness here presented two bound volumes entitled "Information for Employees and the Public," vol. 1, 1913, and vol. 2, 1914, issued by the Pennsylvania Railroad.)

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Mr. Lee, when Mr. Atterbury was on the stand—I think Mr. Atterbury—he was asked regarding this statement made on page 36 in the History of the Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Referring to Mr. Pierce?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In this statement he says that Mr. Pierce made application to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to handle its legislative matters, which was refused—the application. We asked Mr. Atterbury if that would be confirmed—

Mr. LEE (interrupting). Mr. Long, I think it was.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Either one; and I think they referred to the fact that you would probably know.

Mr. LEE. Well, I might say that in the preparation of that book there were so many incidents that happened on different parts of the line that the officer who had general charge of assembling this matter assigned to the men on these different divisions those who knew about the different troubles to get all the facts that they could. Reports of these different facts were then assembled. We have here with us all the supporting data for everything that is in those books. That particular point to which you refer was based on information supplied by Mr. J. C. Johnson, superintendent of telegraph, who, I understand, is to testify before you.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He will be a witness here?

Mr. LEE. Yes; I understand so.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. J. C. Johnson.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. C. JOHNSON.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, Mr. Johnson?

Mr. JOHNSON. J. C. Johnson.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. JOHNSON. Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. JOHNSON. Superintendent of telegraph for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you held that official position? Also, please indicate what other positions, if any, you have held on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and a little history of your service.

Mr. JOHNSON. I came with the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. as telegraph operator in January, 1885, and was promoted from time to time from telegraph operator to train dispatcher, chief train dispatcher, assistant train master, and division operator and assistant train master, and chief clerk to the superintendent of telegraph, and in 1910 was made superintendent of telegraph, and I have held that position ever since.

Chairman WALSH. When was that, pardon me?

Mr. JOHNSON. 1910.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would address yourself to the inquiry of Mr. O'Connell, just put to the last witness, concerning the reference to the difficulty with Mr. Pierce. You know just what he asked?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Cover that before I get to your regular questions, please.

Mr. JOHNSON. Shortly after the convention of the B. L. F. & E., I think it was, in Washington, in 1912 or 1913—1913, I believe it was—Mr. Pierce wrote to Mr. Long that he would like to have an interview with him, and, as is the custom, that was referred to me. Mr. Pierce was then in Harrisburg, and in order to find out what he wanted to see him about I sent one of my men up to see him, and he said that he had some matters of importance he wanted to talk over with him in regard to legislative matters; and I told him then that he could come down to my office and see me; and after talking over the labor situation for some little time he said he would like to handle the legislative matters for the Pennsylvania Railroad. He thought he was thoroughly capable of doing it, considering his knowledge as a national organizer for the firemen; and I asked him what he expected, and he named his salary, and wanted that, and in addition to that his expenses—

Chairman WALSH. What salary did he name?

Mr. JOHNSON. Four thousand dollars a year; and I told him that that was a pretty big matter and would require some consideration, and if he would keep me advised as to his whereabouts I would write him and state whether we wanted his services. He told me then that he was going West to see some insurance company, if I remember right; but I never received his address, and never have given an official answer that his services in that respect were not wanted.

Chairman WALSH. Did you give the information you wanted in there?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You gave it to Mr. Long and he had it incorporated?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. State briefly what the general scope of your duties are as superintendent of telegraphers?

Mr. JOHNSON. I am, in addition to that, a staff officer of the general manager, and any matters that he may want me to look after are assigned to me.

Chairman WALSH. I think you were the gentleman that was pointed out as in charge of the police detective department?

Mr. JOHNSON. The police department is under the charge of the superintendent of police, who reports to me and receives his instructions from me.

Chairman WALSH. I believe we have the superintendent of police here—that is, Mr. Harper—and I will not go into that with you, because, you understand, we are trying to get through with this matter to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe the organization of your detective department, please—as to the number of men, how you employ them, and all about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no connection whatever between the confidential department and the police department. That is entirely separate. While they both come under my direct charge, they are entirely separate.

Chairman WALSH. We are accepting that, and will go to Mr. Harper about the police. Will you please proceed?

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, the confidential work is entirely in my hands on the whole system. It is my business to gather and keep myself informed of any information in regard to labor matters or any other matters that need confidential investigation, and when the investigation is made I give the general manager, or such officers of the company as require it, such information as I think will be of interest to them. We have our force in that respect—it varies with the exigencies of the service. We may have 15 or 20; we may have 40.

Chairman WALSH. How many have you now?

Mr. JOHNSON. At the present time I would say about 35.

Chairman WALSH. And how many did you have at the beginning of the trouble in 1911, or immediately prior thereto?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think about 35—I mean 25.

Chairman WALSH. And did you increase it during the trouble?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. To what extent?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I suppose we added about six men.

Chairman WALSH. Is there some particular reason now, without going into the details of it, for having 35 now instead of 25?

Mr. JOHNSON. I can not say there is a reason now except that we are making some investigations looking after the drinking question; we look after that periodically pretty severely.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would go ahead and give us the details of all the work that these men do for your company.

Mr. JOHNSON. You understand I don't handle them; they are not my men. When I want anything done I simply confer with the superintendent or general superintendent, or possibly if the case is very important I may confer with the general manager of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, and I tell him what I want.

Chairman WALSH. Do you use Pinkerton men altogether?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, at times there may be some local detective on a local matter that we may have attend to it.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have any in the employ of your own company?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Either known or unknown detectives?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I don't want to interrupt you. Go ahead with your statement and explain it in your own way, and we will probably get along faster.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have many friends of ours in the railroad that tell us things, but they are not considered in the light of secret men.

Chairman WALSH. Are they paid for the information?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; not any more than they get wages as employees.

Chairman WALSH. Do they ever get any gratuities or rewards of any kind?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; if we send a man to make investigations for us—for instance, a conductor—we may send him to some other railroad to see how they do things there, and we would pay him his wages and in addition his expenses.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, the confidential work, you understand that covers a great deal more than keeping yourself informed on the labor question. At the present time we are working with the Government together, on some Black Hand matters, and things of that kind. We have a few men working in that direction, checking up all the time, and watching things closely.

Chairman WALSH. Men that check the conductors?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; and the auditors and baggage-masters and watching things of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do you have any contract with the Pinkerton Agency, any written contract with them?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Just tell the terms of how you employ these men.

Mr. JOHNSON. I don't know that I would like—I don't know that I am at liberty to divulge anything for the Pinkerton Detective Agency.

Chairman WALSH. As far as the Pennsylvania Railroad is concerned, what do you pay them, what is your contract?

Mr. JOHNSON. We have a sliding scale with them, and it depends on the number of men we have. It runs from $4 to $7 a man.

Chairman WALSH. Per day?

Mr. JOHNSON. Per day.

Chairman WALSH. That is, $4 a man?

Mr. JOHNSON. That all depends on the number, I say, the number that we have.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what determines it, what number determines whether it shall be $4 or $7?

Mr. JOHNSON. The dividing line, I think, anything under 30 men, I think it is, we have to pay them $7; above that the scale slides.

Chairman WALSH. And the money is all paid to the Pinkerton Agency?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do the detectives deal with you personally after they come on the road?

Mr. JOHNSON. I don't know any of them at all.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did you have Pinkerton men in the different departments of the railroad acting as employees?

Mr. JOHNSON. There may be; yes, sir. All I ask of the Pinkerton people is to bring me the information needed. They have to get it the best way they can.

Chairman WALSH. How is information transmitted to you?

Mr. JOHNSON. By reports.

Chairman WALSH. Do you meet the operative at all?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Do any of these detectives do what might be called police duty?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; I don't think they have any commissions; I don't think they can make arrests.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you any corps, Mr. Johnson, with which you are in direct connection among your various classes of employees which constitutes a regular bureau that furnishes you such information as may be of interest to you?

Mr. JOHNSON. Among our own employees?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes, sir; in all classes.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; as I stated to the chairman, we have among our employees men who are our friends, that tell us things that happen; but we have no regular corps.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You don't have any of the operators that report what takes place over the wire, or baggagemen that make examination of transit mail or company mail?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all done by the Pinkertons?

Mr. JOHNSON. I don't know anything about examination of the mails. Their instructions are to see that mail carried by the railroad is purely railroad matter, and that comes under the general superintendent of transportation, and I don't know what method they have any more than they expect a baggagemaster, if he gets hold of any mail that he don't think is right, that he should turn it in to be examined.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And his curiosity may be quite wide, to know what the men in sending letters to each other may be writing?

Mr. JOHNSON. He has no authority to open mail.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is it done without authority, to your knowledge?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not to my knowledge.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Then, if a man came into possession of a list of names, of course, in a purely legitimate way, that gave a list of 75 employees, giving their number, the amount of money they received, how that money was paid to them, the method of their reporting there for instructions or transmitting their information, they would be Pinkertons, and the men occupying positions with you as conductors or engineers, firemen, brakemen, baggagemen, yardmen, and shopmen of their class, they would not be under your direct supervision, but under the Pinkertons?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AIGHTON. Just one question, Mr. Johnson; I understood one of your officers to say that these men were used simply to develop the situation, that the officers made the investigation.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is entirely so.

Chairman WALSH. Do you have charge of any arms or ammunition, or other weapons the company might own?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Who would have them—Mr. Harper?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Who would?

Mr. JOHNSON. I heard the question asked here two or three times. I do not know of any place on the system where we have anything stored for that purpose. At the times we have had our troubles in the past we have got through our purchasing agent a supply of revolvers.

Chairman WALSH. So far as you know, there are no arms or ammunition kept on hand?

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to explain. After the trouble was over they were returned to the purchasing agent, and I understand he has a few hundred, I don't know how many, just a few hundred, lying there in a safe same place in Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. Who would know of that, if anyone, who is here?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know of anyone; I think that is entirely in the hands of the purchasing agent.

Mr. MYERS (from the audience). We would be glad to give you that information.

Commissioner AISHTON. They are kept stored, in the general practice of the railroads, with the purchasing agent or his subordinates, the storekeeper, who keeps the general stores of the company?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you know whether the Pinkerton people in hunting this information, or any information they might desire, as to any activity on the part of organized labor on the system—whether the men employed on the system are men of the particular trades that are liable to be involved in trouble?

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand so.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. For instance, if the telegraphers were active on the system, would the men who would be put on the system likely be telegraphers?

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand so; yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you suppose, if it was essential to have Pinkerton men there, they would try to place them in the national organization of the telegraphers to secure information?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know about that; if they wanted information, I suppose they would.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you get information that is indicated as coming from the general officers of the organization?

Mr. JOHNSON. No.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Your information would not indicate that it comes direct from the national organization?

Mr. JOHNSON. No.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do you get information of any kind to indicate that the Pinkerton people are reporting information secured at the headquarters of the various organizations, such as the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. If there is anything further you desire to say, Mr. Johnson, that we have not asked you about, you are at perfect liberty to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is nothing; I want to be frank; there is nothing to conceal.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Harper.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. C. HARPER.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. HARPER. J. C. Harper.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. HARPER. Superintendent of police of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. HARPER. At Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you resided there?

Mr. HARPER. Since February, 1907.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would sketch a little history of your service with the railroad company, please.

Mr. HARPER. Or the purpose of the organization?

Chairman WALSH. No; your own service. Have you always been superintendent of police?

Mr. HARPER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I mean your personal service with the company.

Mr. HARPER. I came from the telegraph department; I have been with the company 30 years.

Chairman WALSH. How does it happen that the police department should be under the telegraph department?

Mr. HARPER. It is an awful handicap, but, nevertheless, it is a fact. The public do not understand the importance of the superintendent of telegraph; he is a bigger man than his title indicates.

Chairman WALSH. He is on the staff of the general manager, is he?

Mr. HARPER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Is that how he comes to have charge of the police?

Mr. HARPER. Yes, because the general manager is too busy a man to handle my matters, which are trifling.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would be brief and give a little history of your police organization, and begin with the classification. I believe it has been submitted to you; the number of uniformed officers, the number of plain-clothes men, the number of special-duty men.

Mr. HARPER. The organization of the police service was effective November 1, 1907. You understand as a general proposition that until that time it had been purely divisional; each division had its own police, and one division did not know what the other was doing in that respect. Do you want the figures collectively?

Chairman WALSH. The number of uniformed officers, plain-clothes men, the number of special-duty men, if there are such; that is the way I have classified my question.

Mr. HARPER. The number of men with State authority, 361; number of men with city authority, 33. Incidentally I might mention that the 33 men with city authority are located within the confines of Philadelphia. We have but one actual policeman on the road without authority. This makes the total of actual policemen 395. In addition, the police rolls are burdened with 291 men known as watchmen, without any police authority.

Chairman WALSH. Crossing men and the like?

Mr. HARPER. They are crossing men—men who have been incapacitated in other departments by reason of injury, loss of arm or leg, or defective sight; and they are used as crossing watchmen, watchmen at freight houses, gates, or they follow a tour of clocks for fire prevention, and so forth.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe the authority these men have and the territory in which they act—whether or not they settle at one place, or whether any number of them are transferred from place to place along the road, or how that is.

Mr. HARPER. As I have already outlined, the State authority to the policeman is issued by the governor of the Commonwealth.

Chairman WALSH. Directly by the governor?

Mr. HARPER. Yes, sir; a commission from the State of Pennsylvania; and that commission gives the individual police authority for a period of three years, and must be renewed every three years.

Chairman WALSH. Are they renewed every three years?

Mr. HARPER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Are there any others that may operate in other jurisdictions?

Mr. HARPER. Yes; in the State of New York for a good while we did not make any effort to obtain police authority from that State; but when we opened our terminal in New York City we did. It was a very large proposition, and in the meantime we operated under city authority.

Chairman WALSH. How many have you in the city of New York?

Mr. HARPER. Now, I can not give minute figures on that, but I can give you approximate figures as of December 31.

Chairman WALSH. We do not want that much detail. How many have you?

Mr. HARPER. I will have to give you the New Jersey division, which takes in that territory.

Chairman WALSH. You have that in documentary form there?

Mr. HARPER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. So you can submit it?

Mr. HARPER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Very well; please submit it, and we will not go into that detail now.

(The information requested is printed among the exhibits at the end of this subject as Harper Exhibit.)

Chairman WALSH. How are the men armed?

Mr. HARPER. These uniformed men are armed with a .32-caliber revolver.

Chairman WALSH. Clubs or other weapons?

Mr. HARPER. If a man feels he is not physically capable of taking care of himself—and, of course, mentality goes with the physical—he is furnished with a leather club about 10 inches long; we do not furnish our men with handy billies or blackjacks. A blackjack puts a hole in your head, whereas the leather don't do you any harm, but temporarily stuns.

Chairman WALSH. Where are your leather ones made, or are they purchased?

Mr. HARPER. The purchasing agent purchases them. I can not tell you off-hand where they come from.

Chairman WALSH. To your knowledge, are any arms held in storage at any point on the road?

Mr. HARPER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Just describe their character and where they are located.

Mr. HARPER. In a safe in the department of the general purchasing agent at Philadelphia, Broad Street Station; there are 90 guns there. They were purchased for the purpose of arming officers on divisions where a number of post-office safes in our stations had been blown by bandits. In the winter of 1907 I went to Philadelphia—just as an illustration, between Philadelphia and Paoli, a distance of 25 miles, there was not a safe that was not blown up at least once during that winter.

Chairman WALSH. That is, the safes in the stations?

Mr. HARPER. Yes, sir. In one place, Wynnewood, the safe was blown three times, and so on down the line. There is absolutely no use of the police going after that element with revolvers, and that was the purpose of buying these guns. We did not have safe blowing any more thereafter. Those guns are in a safe, well protected.

Chairman WALSH. You do not know whether there are any other arms than those stored at any place?

Mr. HARPER. We might have two or three hundred revolvers that were purchased in bulk in order to get a low rate of cost. You understand that we are governed by the principle that if you are going to give a policeman a revolver it should be a good one, as an inferior make is a dangerous thing; so that for the sake of safety and uniformity we adopted the Colt revolver, which is the standard small arm of the United States Army.

Chairman WALSH. And those are kept where?

Mr. HARPER. In this same place.

Chairman WALSH. Have you trains equipped for police service?

Mr. HARPER. Any what?

Chairman WALSH. Any trains or cars or engines?

Mr. HARPER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. You have nothing of that kind?

Mr. HARPER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. There was a reference made to Lucknow, the Lucknow encampment.

Mr. HARPER. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Explain that, if you will, please, Mr. Harper, without being asked any direct questions.

Mr. HARPER. A policeman is on duty 24 hours a day, and 25 hours if possible—I have been on duty 25—and he is not docked if he is off a day, nor is he granted a vacation for extra time on duty. We believe that our policemen are exceptional men, and we try to treat them as such; so that Lucknow encampment was an arrangement with the company to give these men a vacation to get them together to become better acquainted with each other, particularly the captains.

Chairman WALSH. Did they consist of your uniformed police, those with the Lucknow encampment?

Mr. HARPER. Those with uniforms had such equipment with them, and those who did not have them went in civilian clothes.

Chairman WALSH. How many were there?

Mr. HARPER. We split it. All told, we had 340 men, half the first two days and the other half the next two days.

Chairman WALSH. Proceed, now, Mr. Harper, please, where I interrupted you.

Mr. HARPER. I was going to give you the number of uniformed men.

Chairman WALSH. I do not care for that; just complete your answer. Just give us your answer about the encampment—as to the whole matter. It was reported to our investigator that the Lucknow encampment was held at a time when an agreement was being entered into between some of the union organizations, or being settled by some union organization with the officers; and they were encamped and drilled at a place where they could be seen by the people going back and forth, and the inference was that it was being done for the purpose of intimidation or having some effect on the making of the contract; did you understand it that way?

Mr. HARPER. It is possible that something was going on with some of the train-service men. There is something going on practically every day; but I pay no attention to it. That does not enter into my manipulation of the police service. Your other statement, that these men were gathered at a point where they could be noticed by travelers or the men——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). That is not my statement.

Mr. HARPER. Anyway, that is all wrong, because they were camped in the most obscure place that you could find. They were sent out there for two or three days' vacation, and they were encamped along an old canal bed south of the Pennsylvania line, where they were not seen from the railroad; in an old cornfield, and this old canal bed has a row of trees down both sides.

Chairman WALSH. And the assembling of them at that point at that time had no significance, so far as any labor trouble was concerned, so far as you know?

Mr. HARPER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What date was that?

Mr. HARPER. June, 1913, I think; I do not know positively.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Harper, unless you have some further statement you desire to make you will be excused permanently.

Mr. HARPER. I have nothing to say, except to reiterate——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). With all due respect, do not reiterate.

Mr. HARPER. I have nothing further to say.

Chairman WALSH. Very well; you will be excused.

Mr. Auston.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. R. T. AUSTON.

Chairman WALSH. State your name, please.

Mr. AUSTON. J. R. T. Auston.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. AUSTON. At Philadelphia, Pa.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. AUSTON. President of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you occupied that official position?

Mr. AUSTON. Since 1910; I was grand secretary from 1907 to 1910.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a telegrapher; were you originally a telegrapher?

Mr. AUSTON. A telegraph operator since I was 11 years old.

Chairman WALSH. How did you happen to come to the Minneapolis Convention?

Mr. AUSTON. The Minneapolis convention of May, 1907?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. AUSTON. I was in the employ of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Co., but previous to the convention I was with the Western Union at Denver, and took a leave of absence and went to Minneapolis as a visitor or member in good standing, with up-to-date card to June 30, 1907, which represented 20 continuous years of membership.

Chairman WALSH. Did you pay your expenses to that convention?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes; my own expenses and those of my wife.

Chairman WALSH. Did anybody pay the expenses—any of your expenses during the period of that convention? Or any of the expenses of that convention, that you know of?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What salary did you receive during the early part of the existence of the organization?

Mr. AUSTON. At Minneapolis, when the division or split, as we call it, occurred, I was asked my rate and I told them I could get along, I thought, on $150, and they thought they could not pay that, and they were all friends of mine, and I said, "Make it $100, and I will come and help you anyway," and my salary to 1910, if I remember right, was $100; then I believe it was raised to $125, and now it is $150 a month.

Chairman WALSH. Has your salary always been paid by the members of the organization?

Mr. AUSTON. My salary has always been paid, when it was paid, out of the revenues of the organization.

Chairman WALSH. I gather from what you say that sometimes your salary was not paid.

Mr. AUSTON. In the first years of the organization—in 1907, when we returned from Minneapolis, they handed me $65; and I also used finances of my own in financing the organization.

Chairman WALSH. Did the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., either directly or indirectly, pay your organization expenses or guarantee them?

Mr. AUSTON. No; under no circumstances whatever.

Chairman WALSH. It has been suggested that they guaranteed your credit with a printing concern to the extent of $1,000.

Mr. AUSTON. That is an absolute falsehood, which can be proven by the affidavits of the printers. I told them I wanted a $1,000 credit, and it was up to them whether I could have it or not, and they gave me credit; and I ran an $800 credit.

Chairman WALSH. Has the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. approved of your organization?

Mr. AUSTON. That is a question I could not answer. They have done business with us, but whether they approve of our organization or any other, I do not know; I never asked them.

Chairman WALSH. Tell us what business you did with the company?

Mr. AUSTON. When the controversy came to a head on the Pennsylvania lines—understand I never worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in my life, and I never was in their service—the whole general committee, with the exception of one man, members of the O. R. T., of St. Louis, changed their buttons and came to our organization. In 60 days we had over 800 members in good standing. The committee kept right on with its transactions just the same as it did before; in fact, when the disturbance arose in 1905 after the general chairman was out of favor, the committee still kept on doing business with the company without any organization at all behind it, and paid dues to their old secretaries, two in Philadelphia; the committee kept right on doing business, and if the time was not so brief I could bring in a complete schedule of the dates of the meetings, and their results, and so forth; as all general committee work is.

Chairman WALSH. Was there a threatened strike on the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1912?

Mr. AUSTON. In 1912, if I remember right, about in June, there was a movement made by Mr. Perham's organization, who kept a large corps on the Pennsylvania all the time to disrupt it, arranging to bring a committee before the management of the company and force official recognition, which they had never enjoyed at any time from 1907 to that date, 1912. It resulted in the committee being brought into Philadelphia, headed, as I understand, by Mr. McGrail, of the Pittsburgh division, and Mr. Perham himself; and I believe you have all the data in regard to that controversy between Mr. Perham and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Chairman WALSH. Well, at that time did you undertake to secure telegraphers for the Pennsylvania to take the places of the men who might go on strike?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir; no, sir. The statement was made by these men, the organizers of Mr. Perham, that I maintained a labor bureau on Filbert Street in Philadelphia and sat behind the desk and enrolled men for such positions.

Chairman WALSH. Did you send any operators to the Pennsylvania during the time this strike was going on?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir; no, sir; I maintained a neutral position.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Auston, if there is anything else you would like to say, about which you have not been interrogated, you may do so.

Mr. AUSTON. I would like to read a brief statement and pass it into the records of the commission.

Chairman WALSH. Can you epitomize it for us and then submit it, and we will take it up as a whole?

Mr. AUSTON. I believe we would save time to just let me read it.

Chairman WALSH. Does it cover any point I have asked you about?

Mr. AUSTON. No; other points.

Chairman WALSH. Now, please omit any points you have been asked about, if you can, Mr. Auston, and read anything now that you want to put in, but please omit these matters that I have asked you about.

Mr. AUSTON. I will start right in [reading]:

"The new organization in 1907 took over the existing general committee, Pennsylvania lines east, and its officers, and continued doing business with the Pennsylvania Railroad management, the same as it had for several years previous.

"After we organized, President Perham, of the O. R. T., appealed for an injunction to debar us from using 'Order Railroad Telegraphers' in our title. The appeal was denied by Judge Holland, of the superior court, Philadelphia.

"Immediately after the close of the Minneapolis convention, in 1907, the new organization was called company organization by Mr. Perham and his agents. A number of organizers were placed on the Pennsylvania system to disrupt the new organization. The work of attempted disruption and the sowing of falsehood and prejudice by the circulating of scandalous reports, while not injurious to the O. R. T., D., A., and S., or retarding its progress and growth, might be said to be the direct causes of unrest among the telegraphers employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Pittsburgh and Erie, who have been misled and deceived by the specious statements and despicable untruths.

"The general committee, working under the guidance and supervision of our organization, has had many conferences with the managements of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Philadelphia & Reading Railway, the Long Island Railroad, the St. Louis Terminal, and that of other systems, and at the present time has important matters pending final adjustment on some systems.

"Our general committees have been very successful in securing additional compensation, better regulations, and improved conditions, and in no instance is there any indication of a lack of harmony between any of them and the railroad managements whom they have conferred with.

"As the Pennsylvania Railroad east appears to be the system now being investigated, I desire to state that the general committee, guided by our laws, can conclusively prove that from a financial point of view wages of telegraphers and other employees represented have been increased thereon since 1907 to a greater extent or percentage than the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of St. Louis, Mo., has obtained in the same period on any railroad in the United States."

In connection with this statement I desire to file with this honorable commission some data showing the rates of pay on the Baltimore and the Delaware divisions of the Pennsylvania system and on the West Jersey & Seashore division as they existed January 1, 1914. This is made necessary because Mr. Perham quoted rates on those divisions which have been wiped out to a considerable extent by wage increases secured by our general committee. Also, because the rates quoted were minimums only and rates paid at positions where the responsibility was not very great.

(The statement referred to by witness is printed among the exhibits relating to this subject as Auston Exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. AUSTON (continuing reading). "Mr. Perham stated to this commission that the total membership of his organization was 45,000 and that the total number of telegraphers in the United States was 53,000. To my knowledge his organization has very few members on the Pennsylvania lines east, although I am aware there is a claim made that it has something like 1,100. Information secured by me indicates that many delinquent members are still carried on their system division No. 17, Pennsylvania Railroad, and also that a fair estimate of the total membership would not exceed 400 in good standing up to the end of 1914.

"On the Philadelphia & Reading; the Central of New Jersey; the Lehigh Valley; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; and the Erie the membership in the O. R. T. is, practically, small. Reports received from southern and western systems exhibit a lack of complete organization; therefore it is evident that if his organization has 45,000 members it will be necessary to find more than 53,000 telegraphers to increase the total of nonmembers and properly man the railroads I have mentioned, upon which his organization is partially represented.

"Mr. Perham has branded me as a company tool and the organization I represent as a company organization. He has done this at meetings. He has done this in his complaint to this commission when he stated that the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen were fostered and financed by the Pennsylvania Railroad. He repeatedly stated the past few years that he had evidence, and that at this hearing he would prove his assertions and put the O. R. T., D., A., and S. entirely out of business. I am surprised that up to this time nothing has been openly presented to this commission in support of Mr. Perham's allegation. He has failed to meet the issue openly and fairly, as I have repeatedly challenged him to do. He has failed to prove up publicly. The charge affects my personal character, the repute of the organization I have the honor to represent, and the good name of its members, and it seems to me that it is cowardly procedure for anyone holding such a high position in the labor world—the ranks of organized labor—to defame personal character and then pass alleged evidence to this commission under a promise of secrecy, instead of giving it out publicly, even though he did withhold the name of any person he might think would be persecuted for giving him information. The only conclusion possible for a fair-minded man to arrive at is: Mr. Perham did not have sufficient confidence in his alleged evidence and preferred to have it submerged in the voluminous data he has filed regarding 'gum-shoe men' and 'bulls' in whom he seems to be greatly interested—more interested than in proving openly and publicly that I am a corporation tool and the organization I represent a company association.

"In 1912 when Mr. Perham and a so-called general committee polled a strike vote on the Pennsylvania lines east and made a demand on the management for official recognition, I filed a protest against the management of the company recognizing said general committee. This protest is filed herewith."

"My reason for filing the protest just read was that if the company received Mr. Perham's committee it meant our general committee would have to retire and give the Order of Railroad Telegraphers the right of way.

"At the time of filing the protest I had no knowledge as to what might be the decision of the Pennsylvania Railroad management, but I did know the opinion and feeling of our members regarding the matter; therefore it was my duty to put our position plainly before the officials.

"At this time we had some important matters pending adjustment, and anything tending to disturb our harmonious relations with the company would have been disastrous to the best interests of the employees, not only our own members but all employees of the telegraph, signal, and agents departments of the Pennsylvania Railroad system.

"I mention this filing of a protest for the reason that there have been misstatements regarding our position at the time Mr. Perham was considering the advisability of disturbing the transportation business if his demands were not conceded, which were, briefly, "Put the O. R. T., D., A., and S. out the back door and let us in the front door."

"Our organization has a sick benefit of $5 per week and a funeral benefit of $100, both paid directly from the grand division. Our locals are not permitted to have such benefit features. The dues are $9 per year, payable quarterly. We have distributed over $10,000 since 1908.

"The methods of procedure we favor have increased wages, secured better regulations governing seniority rights and promotion and other conditions of service. We have never found it necessary to call a strike vote on the Pennsylvania Railroad or appeal to any governmental board or commission. We have had some difficulties on other systems, but through the exercise of diplomatic tactics, patience, and publicity we have won our case without exciting any spirit of official retaliation.

"Our organization has a strike clause in its laws based on a two-thirds vote of members interested.

"I wish it clearly understood that we have no apologies to make for our plan of organization. Mr. Perham objects to injunctions restraining or preventing the holding of meetings. So do I, but I extend my objection still further. I do not believe that there should be a high court of organized labor in this country—a court possessed of actual or assumed prerogatives to say to all the workers of this country, 'We are the selected rulers of your destinies, and there shall be no other kind of labor organization permitted to exist except those bearing our seal of approval.'

"Such is the position taken by the American Federation of Labor, of which Mr. Perham is a vice president. It must be its position or Mr. Perham would never have spent thousands of dollars since 1907 in a futile effort to disrupt the organization I represent. Such position is, in my opinion, a sort of injunction served on labor to prevent any part of that great army from stepping out of an old rut and trying new methods and new procedure.

"So the injunction served on me is that I am a leader of an irregular organization, and that the only regular organization of railroad telegraphers is the one Mr. Perham represents. And still it is 'regular' for the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen to have conductors and baggagemen as members and the Order of Railway Conductors to have conductors, too, and for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen to have engineers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers to have engineers only.

"Whether regular or irregular, the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen asked no one how it should establish itself or what classes of railroad employees it should make eligible to membership. It, however, will always try and respect the rightful jurisdiction of any other organization that is really honestly and practically representing labor; but in the case of Mr. Perham's organization, the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, the organization from which many of us withdrew for causes too many to enumerate, we do not recognize its right to be the exclusive labor organization for railroad telegraphers, or, in fact, recognize it in any way under its present official management for the reason it has deemed proper to vilify and abuse and made efforts to disrupt the O. R. T. D. A. & S. ever since it was organized in 1907, instead of seeking some means to harmonize ill feeling and dissension caused by its own official errors of judgment.

"Our organization represents train dispatchers, directors, towermen, signalmen, signal maintainers, telegraphers, levermen, linemen, clerks, agents, and electricians who are employed on a railroad. We have no 'laborers,' as Mr. Perham stated in his testimony.

"Under our plan each class represents itself directly before the supervising officials through its own local chairman and division board of adjustment. Each local chairman, regardless of class, forms the general committee, and the chairman of that committee can be elected from any class by the local chairmen themselves. Our idea is to get the best men in the lead.

"In conclusion I wish to repeat that I do not believe any coterie of labor leaders has a patent on every plan of organization. I have no apology to make to adherents of the class idea for promoting an organization of railroad labor composed of different classes—three departments. I am pleased to be able to state our success has proved the plan to be feasible. The object of labor unions is to promote the welfare of those represented. We are doing that, and take considerable pride in the accomplishment.

"We began life with $65. In a month we had 700 members. When expenses press too hard, owing to organizing expenses, the organization was fostered and financed. I plead guilty to that charge, but I desire to state that Mr. Perham accused the wrong party. It was not the Pennsylvania Railroad or any other railroad; not the Steel Trust, as some of his organizers once reported. It was J. R. T. Auston, the present national president of the order, the writer of this statement.

"Respectfully,

J. R. T. AUSTON,
"National President Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen."

Mr. AUSTON. I thank you for permitting me to read that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is the total membership, Mr. Auston, of your organization?

Mr. AUSTON. At the present time in the neighborhood—we have a quarterly system—and, taking it approximately, I would place the membership on the Pennsylvania Railroad—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I am not speaking of the Pennsylvania Railroad, but the whole organization.

Mr. AUSTON. We have a little over 3,000.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is the membership on the Pennsylvania system?

Mr. AUSTON. Well, somewhere about, possibly, twenty-three or twenty-four hundred. We have not branched out much.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And out of your total membership you say 2,400 are on the Pennsylvania system?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does that mean the entire Pennsylvania system?

Mr. AUSTON. The Pennsylvania lines east. We have not touched the lines west.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have no membership in the West?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir; on the Milwaukee & St. Paul and on other roads.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I mean the Pennsylvania lines west.

Mr. AUSTON. Not but very few; we have a few in Pittsburgh, but I doubt whether any of the western lines are in there yet.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does your organization have printed monthly reports or a journal of some kind?

Mr. AUSTON. We have an official journal called the Railroad Wiremen Signal, published monthly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does that contain reports of your income and disbursements?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir; neither does yours, perhaps.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes; it does.

Mr. AUSTON. Yes; I think you are right. Our laws don't require that; and another thing, an organization that is growing up under difficult circumstances and surrounded by enemies will keep its inside business very close.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does your secretary and treasurer, or secretary or treasurer, as the case may be, or yourself, if you are the officer, publish a statement that goes to your membership direct?

Mr. AUSTON. The local lodges are furnished statements and the books are audited once a year by an auditor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does your national organization furnish to your lodges the income and disbursements of your national body?

Mr. AUSTON. We do at the biennial conventions.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. When was your last one?

Mr. AUSTON. We will have one this coming May 17.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then you have prepared a statement to present to that?

Mr. AUSTON. I have not yet, but I will if I can get away from here a few days.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You expect to prepare one?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Will you furnish this commission with a copy of your statement to the next convention?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir; but it is a little bit irregular. Ordinarily, if ours was the only organization, I would say "yes," frankly; but, as I say, I will have to get permission from the convention—the delegates, at least. I am under oath of office to protect my organization.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I ask that that request be made.

Mr. AUSTON. If it was put in the form of a demand, we would probably have to comply.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Let me ask this question: You have made through your organization an agreement of some sort, or arrangement, covering the employment of your people with the Pennsylvania system east?

Mr. AUSTON. Mr. O'Connell, when I came to Pittsburgh along in 1907 they had the seniority rule on a piece of yellow paper, called "the yellow kid," and we kept improving on that until we got it in book form, and we now have the rules and regulations, the rights of employees, and we have enlarged—

Commissioner O'CONNELL (interrupting). I am not speaking of that, Mr. Auston. You entered into some sort of negotiation with the Pennsylvania whereby you agreed upon rates and wages for telegraphers?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir; there was a mutual understanding and agreement.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Now, you say there is in your constitution a strike provision?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir; a two-thirds vote.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then you are not an antistrike organization?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir; I would not pay 50 cents into an organization that would not strike. You know for 35 years I have carried a union card.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Having that clause in your constitution, of course, means something to the membership. Suppose your members were in complete control of the telegraph situation at the Altoona station, on the eastern division, and one of your members was discharged in Altoona, on the Altoona force, for what you would consider an unjustifiable position, and you attempted to have those men reinstated and the company refused, under your law, if you made that two-thirds vote you could order that strike of your members for the reinstatement of those men. Do you hold that under that rule you have a right to call your members out at the Philadelphia station in support of the contention of your members at Altoona?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have that right?

Mr. AUSTON. Sure we have.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then your organization does, as was alleged this morning, have a sympathetic clause?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir; we have no sympathetic clause; we simply claim the right to represent all of the men on the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie that are organized. If such—which I hope won't occur—we will suppose such a case comes up with us, all of the ordinary pressure for harmony would be brought about to avoid a strike, and the membership, and if it comes to a strike every labor union must support the men that are discharged.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then you are, as I understand the statement made this morning, you are not the kind of an organization just exactly the Pennsylvania officers would want on their system?

Mr. AUSTON. I don't think so; I was told in the anteroom by a gentleman I just met this morning, "What you want a hearing for; you are opposed to labor organizations," and I said, "You don't know me; you don't know what you are talking about."

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The point I am trying to get at is, for instance, the general superintendent who was on the platform here just before noon-time stated that they were not opposed to an organization of labor on the system, provided they were organized along certain lines and without any entangling alliances, and were not in favor of a sympathetic strike; that a sympathetic strike meant that the men, for instance, at one station, speaking of shopmen, that the men on strike at Pittsburgh—there is a contention with the company—and the men struck at Altoona, or if the men go on strike at Altoona it would be looked upon as a sympathetic strike and not in accordance with their idea of an organization.

Mr. AUSTON. The opinion of another witness is not always my opinion. A sympathetic strike in my idea is this, that if the telegraphers were out on the New York Central, and called on them on the Pennsylvania lines to assist in order to drive them into a sympathetic strike to aid the New York Central men, that that would be a sympathetic strike. The illustration of a sympathetic strike given this morning between two shops on the same system is not an example of what I would term a sympathetic strike.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You don't agree with that idea at all?

Mr. AUSTON. No; not at all.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Suppose the New York Central, as you spoke of it, you had a strike on the Pennsylvania road and the New York Central furnished operators to take your members' places on strike on the Pennsylvania Railroad, what would you do in case of the New York Central if you had members working for it?

Mr. AUSTON. We would tell them not to come.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Suppose they did come; would you allow your men to work for the New York Central?

Mr. AUSTON. How about the members that don't come? The few that do come to the Pennsylvania line, you know as well as I do that they violate their obligation to the union.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But supposing the New York Central line, through its telegraph system, furnished the Pennsylvania Co. with men to take the place of your members who had gone on strike, officially, and done that, what would you do with the New York company if you had members working for them?

Mr. AUSTON. We would have a grievance against the New York Central.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you would strike that?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir; if necessary, because they interfered with the Pennsylvania line, just what we are against; we say we won't interfere sympathetically with other lines.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On account of the limit of time, I will ask you to answer my questions just as briefly as possible. I have in my mind a document filed with this commission by Mr. H. B. Perham, president of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, in which he makes certain charges against the Pennsylvania Railroad. I gathered from your testimony that you had been doing business with the Pennsylvania Railroad, and therefore you can probably answer some of these. The first is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. denies the right of organization to all employees except those directly engaged in transportation. Is that your idea and your experience?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The second charge is that the Pennsylvania—

Mr. AUSTON. Let me modify it. It is not true as far as my organization, or our organization's activities are concerned, because we are organizing clerks at the present time on the system, and have large locals.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you represent primarily the telegraphers?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir; three departments—telegraphers, signal, and agents departments.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The second charge is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. makes a practice of discharging men for the reason that they have joined a labor organization; also that it coerces and intimidates men who are suspected of having joined a labor organization and habitually discriminates against men who endeavor to exercise their right to organize. Have any of your members been discharged?

Mr. AUSTON. I know of none of ours or any other telegraphers being discharged for belonging to any organization.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The next charge is that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. brings into existence and fosters sham labor organizations for its employees which are labor organizations only in name and are merely formal organizations and the subservient tools of the management, designed to obstruct the progress of legitimate labor organizations.

Mr. AUSTON. The only one I know, the only organization that I would apply that to, would be the recently organized mutual benefit association of Pennsylvania employees, which I have attacked in our official journal and endeavored to work against.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As far as your own organization is concerned, this would not be true?

Mr. AUSTON. I don't think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The next is that the Pennsylvania Railway refused to mediate or arbitrate its recent difficulties with its telegraphers and deliberately arranged its affairs to meet a strike by placing inexperienced men in readiness to take charge of the signal towers without regard to public safety.

Mr. AUSTON. You have the data in regard to that controversy; it is not necessary for me to enlarge on it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is your point of view of it?

Mr. AUSTON. I do not see how the Pennsylvania management could do business with two factions; they were recognizing one, as I stated in my report; they must put one out of the back door and leave the other fellow in or shut the door and not allow them to come in at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. ever refuse to mediate with your organization?

Mr. AUSTON. No, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You heard Mr. Creighton's definition of what constituted a sympathetic strike. Did you ever hear such a definition of a sympathetic strike at any other time?

Mr. AUSTON. I will admit it is the first time I ever heard that sort of a definition of a sympathetic strike. I have been in several strikes myself and am pretty familiar with the different kinds.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You are familiar enough with the four train-service organizations to know that if that is a proper definition they are all sympathetic strikers?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The four organizations having contractual relations with the Pennsylvania system?

Mr. AUSTON. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. You will be permanently excused. I have been asked to announce that the only other witnesses that will be called on this Pennsylvania matter are John Guyer, J. T. Born, H. L. Grimm, and W. H. Pierce. All other witnesses on that particular subject will be excused permanently.

Mr. MYERS. May I say a word as to your investigation as to the hearing of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the taking of their testimony? As Mr. Atterbury, who spoke for the company, one of its highest officials, has had to leave to meet an appointment in Philadelphia, I wish to thank you and the members of the commission for the way in which you have conducted the investigation, and I wish to assure you that we stand ready at any time to put at your service any information that we may have which can serve to help you to solve this question that you are investigating. As very large employers of labor, and as men who have devoted our whole lifetime to this question, we are intensely interested in it, and as good citizens we want to aid you with every means in our power to reach a proper solution.

Chairman WALSH. We thank you, Mr. Myers.

Mr. Guyer, will you please take the stand?

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOHN P. GUYER.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name?

Mr. GUYER. John P. Guyer.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. GUYER. Newspaper man, at the present I am engaged as social worker and clerk for the directors of the poor for Dolphin County, Pa.

Chairman WALSH. What is the county seat of Dolphin County?

Mr. GUYER. Harrisburg.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I wish you would state in your own way, Mr. Guyer, what you call the mobilization of the Pennsylvania police at Lucknow in 1913, which has been testified to here?

Mr. GUYER. About May, 1913, I was city editor of the Patriot, and there came to Harrisburg, into what is called the Lucknow field, or end of the road or yards, I think there were 17 cars, and in them were said to be 450 railroad detectives. These men were there I believe four days. I think Mr. Harper referred to it as a picnic, and at that picnic they used their automatics or revolvers in target practice on the National Guard rifle range. They were in sight of the north central and lines east and west of the Pennsylvania—the lines north, south, west, and east.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did I understand that there was some arbitration going on at the time between the company and certain of its employees?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir; at that time there was a question pending in New York in conference with the managers' association and representatives of the B. R. T. and O. R. C., representing about 100,000 men, and they agreed to arbitrate under the provisions of the Erdman Act, and the day following the agreement to arbitrate I noticed—I had been up to see those men practice their target shooting—and I noticed that the picnic left the next day.

Chairman WALSH. When you went up there, Mr. Guyer, were you told that the men were there on an excursion?

Mr. GUYER. No, sir; I was told that they were there because they were expecting a strike.

Chairman WALSH. Who told you that?

Mr. GUYER. The people living in the neighborhood with whom I talked.

Chairman WALSH. Did you talk to any of the men that were there?

Mr. GUYER. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. To any of the officers?

Mr. GUYER. No; I heard reports. One of our reporters talked to Mr. Harper—Mr. White, I believe—and got the reason they were there, and we published a series of articles in the newspaper and told about their performances, etc.

Chairman WALSH. What statement did Mr. Harper make at the time with reference to what brought them there?

Mr. GUYER. If I can recall it, and he can correct me if I am wrong—

Mr. HARPER. I will correct you very emphatically.

Mr. GUYER. According to the reporter's story, what the men were there for, was, I believe, an outing, and it was the first assemblage of this kind that the police department had had on the Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. He made substantially the statement that he made here?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. On the statement that he made here?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were you there during any strike on the road?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What strike was that?

Mr. GUYER. The strike of 1913, or 1914, I guess it was.

Chairman WALSH. What was known as the strike—

Mr. GUYER. That was known as the Pierce strike, according to the common talk around there, Mr. Pierce led the strikers.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would give us the general conditions as prevailed and as concisely as you can, leading up to that strike?

Mr. GUYER. It would take quite a little time to do that. If you gentlemen would care, I would just as leave write out a statement of the conditions that I know about, and based upon my observation there as a newspaper man there at that time.

Chairman WALSH. I would be very glad to have you do that?

Commissioner AISHTON. Your observations at Harrisburg?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And the statement will be confined to conditions that you actually saw?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir. I will relate some of them, if you wish, to-day.

Commissioner AISHTON. I don't think it is necessary to take up the time, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. If you can state what you saw yourself briefly, do so; but if it will take some time, as you say, perhaps you had better not.

Mr. GUYER. It would take some time. I was admitted to meetings of the men most any time I wanted in, and, in view of all that I attended, I saw a great deal; and I saw the police of Pennsylvania crowd around the halls, so much so that they had difficulty in entering the hall, and the local police were called out. I don't think it is the regular Pennsylvania force, but this was an unusual force that they employed.

Chairman WALSH. Did you observe anything about the blockading of the hall by the company police in which the strikers desired to hold meetings?

Mr. GUYER. The railroad men said they were company detectives, or, rather, imported men, who were about White's Hall on one evening that I endeavored to enter there, and I had to wait there until they scattered out.

Chairman WALSH. How many men went out on strike at that time?

Mr. GUYER. It has been variously estimated from 700 to 2,000.

Chairman WALSH. Were these men brought in to take their places?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was the relation between the strikers and the men brought in to take their places?

Mr. GUYER. Occasionally there was bitterness exchanged, and at other times the strikers and strike breakers would come to strike headquarters and report the conditions that they saw in the yard limits and in the shops.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know anything about attempted bribery of strike leaders?

Mr. GUYER. Nothing of my own observation. It was so reported.

Chairman WALSH. And do you know anything further than you have testified about the policing or the use of detectives in the strike?

Mr. GUYER. I know simply what I heard a number of times; Mr. Grimm was followed a number of times and I was followed a number of times by men I presume were interested in the Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. It has been stated that you personally had some information as to what was called company domination over employees and economic pressure brought to bear by the company on citizens not directly connected with the company.

Mr. GUYER. That is quite extended. Mr. Chanery, your agent, spoke regarding the connection or control that the Pennsylvania exercised over courts and the machinery of the county government, and in that connection I think I told him that these employees, these police, had access to the jail and could incarcerate a man without the formality of a commitment and take him out without any more formality than to walk in and speak to the warden and take him out. They were in evident control. I think I mentioned the matter of Sheriff Wells, one of their shopmen, who was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for sheriff. He brought a letter to me at one time showing, or purporting to show, a letter written by Mr. Donohue, a clerk, to Mr. McCaleb, the superintendent of the division, in substance requesting him to get off the ticket or he would be dismissed, and I think I said to Mr. Chanery that the result was that Mr. Wells continued his candidacy and was elected by an overwhelming vote on the Democratic ticket, although Dauphin is nominally a Republican county.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I wish you would do as you suggested to Mr. Aishton, that you furnish a statement covering any facts in regard to these matters that might be of interest, of which you have personal knowledge.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chanery inquired regarding the full-crew law and the methods used by the Pennsylvania in creating public sentiment. In that connection, Mr. Chanery got from Mr. Maurer about one-eighth of the mail that he received on that subject, and with some clerks we tabulated it, and we found 19 form letters mimeographed, and amongst 2,600 letters that we examined we found but 7 which bore any resemblance of originality. A number of these were upon the stationery of the Pennsylvania, and I can submit them to you, possibly several thousand of these mimeographed typewritten letters with the names of Mr. Maurer written on it and signed, in some instances dated Pittsburgh and signed by John Jones or some one in a little suburb outside of Pittsburgh.

Chairman WALSH. Just submit a few of them, and we will take the names of the others.

Commissioner AISHTON. You have no personal knowledge of what these police were for?

Mr. GUYER. No, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. In the Lucknow encampment.

Mr. GUYER. No, sir; I didn't talk to them.

Commissioner AISHTON. You were city editor at that time of a newspaper?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And an item of news that they were there for mobilization, and from the railway, and this practicing, would be of greater value as news than if you would say they were on a picnic or an annual drill?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir; no question about it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Was not the entire press, especially the eastern territory, full of a strike up to the day that the agreement of arbitration under the Erdman, not the Erdman but the Newlands Act, was reached?

Mr. GUYER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was it not a foregone conclusion by the press that that would be reached?

Mr. GUYER. There was a very strong hope expressed that it would be.

Commissioner AISHTON. Was it not of general knowledge on the part of the press that that result would be reached?

Mr. GUYER. There was no way of telling beforehand that it would be reached.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you any knowledge from the press reports, and the other sources that were available to you, as to who the pressure had to be brought on to get them to agree to arbitration, the men or the company?

Mr. GUYER. I do not have anything official on that line, but all sorts of rumors were about.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You ought to have done like a lot more of them did that came to me. I was there.

That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Mr. Guyer.

Mr. GUYER. Do you want to make an inquiry in regard to this matter or shall I include it in my statement that I am to furnish in regard to the pressure brought to bear on the papers to prevent the publication of news favorable to the men?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; you may tell us about that.

Mr. GUYER. I covered the strike news, although I was acting in the capacity of clerk, but I covered the strike news, and Mr. Grimm was at that time city editor, and I was told by some men who claimed there was an effort being made to have the news changed and made favorable to the company, or something of that nature; and later on men in the new brotherhood reported to me that they had heard that the chamber of commerce and officials of the Pennsylvania, including its attorneys, had held a meeting with the three city editors of the local papers in an endeavor to have all the news published favorable to the company—to the company's interests—and Mr. Grimm, of course, subsequently told me such had been the case, but he is here.

Commissioner AISHTON. I want to ask that any statement submitted by Mr. Guyer, a copy of it be furnished to Mr. Long, general manager, for the Pennsylvania, for any reply that he sees fit to make to it.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. That is all, thank you, Mr. Guyer.

Mr. Born.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. T. BORN.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. BORN. I am postmaster of Wilmerding, Pa.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you lived at that place?

Mr. BORN. Sixteen years.

Chairman WALSH. What business—what was your business prior to being postmaster?

Mr. BORN. Machinist.

Chairman WALSH. By whom were you employed?

Mr. BORN. The last two years that I worked at my trade I was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would state, Mr. Born, what part you took, if any, in the strike of 1911 at Pitcairn.

Mr. BORN. Why, I was on the grievance committee.

Chairman WALSH. Of what?

Mr. BORN. Of the shopmen.

Chairman WALSH. How long were you employed by that company altogether?

Mr. BORN. Well, five years; but I had left—was out of the company's employ for two years.

Chairman WALSH. And when this strike came on you were with the company, were you?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what was your record with the company?

Mr. BORN. Well, I guess it was good, because after I left they were after me to come back—that is, the foreman—to return there when I left the place that I was in; to go back. So it must have been good or otherwise they would not have asked for me to come back to the Pennsylvania.

Chairman WALSH. How did you come to finally sever your connection with the company?

Mr. BORN. I was discharged.

Chairman WALSH. For what reason?

Mr. BORN. For being a member of the union.

Chairman WALSH. Did you attempt to return to the employ of the company?

Mr. BORN. Not after the strike.

Chairman WALSH. What was the cause of the strike in 1911?

Mr. BORN. Well, I was a member of the International Association of Machinists before I knew that the shop was being organized. I was only a member of the shop organization about two weeks before. The company seemed to think I was a member a longer time, but I was only a member two weeks when I was discharged. They had organized the shop long before I knew anything of it. The reason I was not asked to join the union—that is, the shop union—or that they did not let me know there was such a thing was on account of me being friendly with the superintendent of the plant and they thinking I might give away something said or done; but the cause of the organization was due to the "off and on" system that the company adopted. They had a new system there that when a man got through with a job he was to report to the clerk. If he was on good terms with the clerk he might get a job immediately when he reported it. If not, he would have to stand around and he would lose the time. They had the piecework system. Now, that was the cause of the organization of the men in the Pitcairn shops.

Chairman WALSH. Was there or was there not substantial unrest among the men on account of that?

Mr. BORN. Well, that is what started it; but later, when the company knew that they were being organized, the old hands were discharged—the old employees. Now, that is what we tried to work with the company, that they should reinstate the old employees. The strike would not have come off at the time if they had not discharged the old hands.

Chairman WALSH. How many of those had been discharged?

Mr. BORN. Quite a number; not only at Pitcairn but all along the line. I think it was done more to scare them from organizing.

Chairman WALSH. Could you approximate the number that was so discharged?

Mr. BORN. Well, I could not. I judge in the machine shops, the shop that I was employed in, there were in the neighborhood of—you see, at Pitcairn they employed about 5,000; that is, all classes, laborers, car men, blacksmiths, pattern makers; they worked in the cabinet shop, and different men working at different work.

Chairman WALSH. How were grievances adjusted between the employees and the management?

Mr. BORN. There didn't appear to be any adjustment at any time. That is what created the trouble. If they would have recognized them—

Chairman WALSH. Was there any machinery for hearing the complaints of the men?

Mr. BORN. No; not to my knowledge.

Chairman WALSH. Was there or was there not any complaint about the wages?

Mr. BORN. Well, there is where it was; it was on this "off and on" system is what made the wages so small.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, just sketch the trouble in that respect. How small were the wages, or how large—the earnings?

Mr. BORN. Well, if they worked through—had no trouble in getting their work—some of them made good money; that is, for not being mechanics. A man on the Pennsylvania at Pitcairn that was not a mechanic could make as high as a hundred dollars a month—and I thought that was good wages—provided he had the work.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any considerable portion of them that did not have the work that got the rate?

Mr. BORN. Oh, yes.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, what proportion?

Mr. BORN. Well, just at that time, or for six months, in fact, from the time they adopted that up until the strike there were a great number of them made a very small wage.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what was the wage and about what did it net them?

Mr. BORN. The greatest part of it.

Chairman WALSH. How did it run, generally?

Mr. BORN. Some made less than a dollar a day; some made good wages. Now, with myself, I had no complaint with the Pennsylvania Railroad, personally; they paid me good wages. I was a day rater. I was not on the "off and on" system. They treated me good. I couldn't say anything myself, personally, but good for the Pennsylvania; but their employees as a whole were not treated right; and that is the reason I went with them and helped fight their battle.

Chairman WALSH. Any complaint about the voluntary relief association?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was that complaint?

Mr. BORN. Why, they were compelled to join the voluntary relief association. I don't call it "voluntary," because you were compelled to join the relief association. You were in the Pitcairn shop at the time. I don't know how about the others.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any objection to joining it?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was the objection?

Mr. BORN. Well, they did not care about joining it for the reason that they did not know whether they would stay with the Pennsylvania Railroad; there is where the biggest part of it was. Now, the company took that money out and the employees, so far as we understood, that 10 per cent of that money went for the pension fund. Now, we may have been wrong—I may have been wrong—but we used that as an argument, that 10 per cent of that money paid in went for the pension fund. Well, if a man did not stay there until he was 70 years of age, all the money he put in that relief he would lose. Now, that is the reason why so many objected to the relief. I for one objected to joining the relief, and I was compelled to join the relief. I was told so.

Chairman WALSH. By whom?

Mr. BORN. By the foreman.

Chairman WALSH. What was the attitude of the company toward labor organizers?

Mr. BORN. Why, it was not good. It showed that by the discharging of the men.

Chairman WALSH. That is what I was going to ask you. Did they discharge the men who joined?

Mr. BORN. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, how many, and what were the circumstances connected with that?

Mr. BORN. Why, I venture—I believe there was one-third or over one-half had been discharged by the time the strike was called. Now, I was discharged February 27, 1907.

Chairman WALSH. You said you were discharged for joining the union. Why did you say that?

Mr. BORN. I was told if I would drop the union I could be held.

Chairman WALSH. By whom?

Mr. BORN. By my foreman.

Chairman WALSH. Who was that?

Mr. BORN. Mr. Steinburg.

Chairman WALSH. Were new men employed to take the places of these men discharged prior to the time of the strike?

Mr. BORN. No; not until the strike.

Chairman WALSH. Did seniority rights exist at any time while you were there?

Mr. BORN. No, sir—well, they did up to that time.

Chairman WALSH. What attempt was made, if any, to establish contractual relations with the company?

Mr. BORN. You mean, what measures were used?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORN. Well, we went before—well, we had correspondence with the officials of the company, the superintendent, the general superintendent, and the manager, for to have a hearing, that we could come to a peaceable settlement; and we were heard by the general superintendent, the superintendent, and the general manager. They treated us courteously, and I couldn't ask for better treatment; and they consulted with us; but they believed they had a right to discharge men if industrial conditions so existed, and that they had a right to use their own judgment. Now, they wanted us to go back to work and settle it afterwards—wanted us not to strike; but it was out of the question. We could not; the men compelled the strike unless the old men were reinstated.

Chairman WALSH. And who actually called the strike?

Mr. BORN. The men did.

Chairman WALSH. By a vote?

Mr. BORN. By a vote.

Chairman WALSH. How many men?

Mr. BORN. Well, each organization—I guess there was in the neighborhood of 5,000 men brought on the strike—more than that, between 5,000 and 10,000.

Chairman WALSH. How long were they out?

Mr. BORN. From the 1st day of May until the 15th day of June, I believe it was the 15th; I couldn't say positively the day they went out—they went back.

Chairman WALSH. What was the conduct of the strikers?

Mr. BORN. Good; could not be better.

Chairman WALSH. Any casualties there or disturbances?

Mr. BORN. There was trouble there the first day of the strike. There were detectives, and we thought they were the Pennsylvania detectives. Since I have been in here I have been informed they were Pinkerton detectives. They marched through the borough of Pitcairn—for what reason I don't know. I went before the council, the Pitcairn council, and asked them if they would not put on an extra police force and place men that were out on strike on the police force, as I believed that would keep better order than by putting strangers there; and the borough council agreed that they would, after I had explained ways of keeping order, and they immediately put on a bunch of policemen that were connected with the strike. There was no trouble in Pitcairn until the company—of course, the shopmen had pickets. They would try to prevent men from going over to work by speaking to them, and the company brought in a bunch of detectives and they came over to the borough to escort men to work, and that day there came nearly being a riot, but they kept it down. The extra police kept the detectives over on their side and from that day on there was no more trouble.

Chairman WALSH. You say there came near being a riot. Was there anybody hurt?

Mr. BORN. No, sir; nobody hurt; no blows struck; no.

Chairman WALSH. Or missiles thrown?

Mr. BORN. No; but there would have been if there had not been restraint.

Chairman WALSH. Now, were there police or not brought into the city?

Mr. BORN. No; not in the borough. The company tried to get the Cossacks there after that date.

Commissioner AISTON. Who did?

Mr. BORN. The company did—tried to persuade the sheriffs to bring the State constabulary on the scene.

Chairman WALSH. Were the State constabulary brought in?

Mr. BORN. No, sir; the sheriffs took hold of it after that and appointed deputies that were out on the strike.

Chairman WALSH. That is workingmen that were on strike?

Mr. BORN. Workingmen that were on strike.

Chairman WALSH. And were there any police brought in by the company—any uniformed police from outside places?

Mr. BORN. Not in the borough.

Chairman WALSH. Not in the borough?

Mr. BORN. No; but there were in other boroughs where we could not get the council's help to put on men who were connected with the strike.

Chairman WALSH. You mean there was no blow struck, during the strike, at all?

Mr. BORN. Only one case that was at Wall, and that was controlled mostly by the company—a borough called Wall.

Chairman WALSH. How far is that from Pitcairn?

Mr. BORN. Right across the railroad yards.

Chairman WALSH. Well, then, Pitcairn itself was absolutely without trouble.

Mr. BORN. Without trouble. Well, there was trouble one night with a fight.

Chairman WALSH. Did anyone get hurt?

Mr. BORN. One man got hurt by a detective—one of the company detectives or Pinkerton detectives. They are the ones that tried to agitate trouble.

Chairman WALSH. Well, were there any arrests made growing out of this strike?

Mr. BORN. In Wilmerding there were two or three.

Chairman WALSH. Were the persons convicted?

Mr. BORN. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Or tried?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Before a jury?

Mr. BORN. No; before the burgess's court.

Chairman WALSH. Now, briefly, a little of the aftermath. What became of these men that were discharged?

Mr. BORN. From the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BORN. Why, scattered to various parts of the United States.

Chairman WALSH. How many of them failed to get back?

Mr. BORN. Well, about one-third. I interceded for two or three, tried to get them back. I went to Mr. O'Donnell, and he turned me down, would not recognize them. One man in particular; he was on the committee—two men were on the committee—and they were both hurt by the company, and they did not have any part in calling the men out on the strike. They handled themselves properly during the strike, only they were on the committee. They tried to adjust grievances. And I could not see why the company could not accept those two men. They asked me to intercede for them, and I did, but they would not take them, and Mr. O'Donnell told me that we caused the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to spend over a million dollars, and they did not think that it was right to take men back who were the cause of the railroad company being at such expense.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any change in the status of the men that were returned to work, either in wages or conditions, or anything of that sort?

Mr. BORN. I don't think so; I have not learned of such.

Chairman WALSH. When were you appointed postmaster at Wilmerding?

Mr. BORN. Last September.

Chairman WALSH. You said you were a member of the machinists' union?

Mr. BORN. Yes.

Commissioner AISHTON. And then spoke about an organization of the shop crafts. That was a federation, was it?

Mr. BORN. It was a federation; but I still hold my membership with the International Association of Machinists, and still do—am still a member.

Commissioner AISHTON. And your connection with the matter of meeting with the Pennsylvania was acting as representative of the men of the shop crafts?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And the involved laborers?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And helpers?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir.

Commissioner AISHTON. And all the classes of employees?

Mr. BORN. Yes, sir; and on that committee there was one representative from each craft.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you.

Mr. Grimm, please.

TESTIMONY OF MR. HERBERT L. GRIMM.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. GRIMM. Herbert L. Grimm.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. GRIMM. State editor of the North American, Philadelphia.

Chairman WALSH. Of the Philadelphia North American?

Mr. GRIMM. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your newspaper experience, running back from this time.

Mr. GRIMM. Well, in 1913 I was city editor—you mean my entire experience?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; please.

Mr. GRIMM. Last fall I was acting managing editor of the Gettysburg Star and Sentinel, and prior to that time city editor of the Patriot for a year at Harrisburg. Before that I was New Jersey editor of the North American for two years.

Chairman WALSH. Did you act as representative of the Patriot at the meeting called by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and attended by the representatives of four Harrisburg papers, members of the chamber of commerce, and the Pennsylvania Railroad officials?

Mr. GRIMM. Yes; three Harrisburg papers.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would briefly state how that call was made, and what took place at the meeting.

Mr. GRIMM. The call was made for one of the owners of the Patriot, I think. The Patriot is owned by the McCormicks, Vance C. and H. P. McCormick. And Mr. McCormick was out on the primary campaign; he was then running for governor of Pennsylvania; and I was asked to represent the Patriot.

The meeting was called for the purpose, as I understand it, of making the chamber of commerce members and the newspapers acquainted with the situation with regard to the strike from the railroad point of view.

I do not recall the date of the conference, but it was in the afternoon. There were present about 10 members of the chamber of commerce, whose names I do not recall, but one was Mr. Musser, the president, and for the railroad Mr. Creighton, general manager of the middle division of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Mr. McCaleb, superintendent of the Philadelphia division; and two of Mr. McCaleb's assistants, Mr. Dennehow and Mr. Sweeney; and Mr. Charles Bergner, local corporation counsel of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and a couple of others, whose names I do not recall. It was a closed meeting, and nothing was ever printed about it.

Mr. Creighton was the first one, I think, to make an address. The meeting was held in the office of Mr. McCaleb, superintendent of the Philadelphia division, in the station at Harrisburg.

The impression I gained at the time, soon after Mr. Creighton began to talk, was that the meeting was called for the primary object of winning over the members of the chamber of commerce and using them as a club to whip the newspapers, who were standing with the strikers, into line for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. One of the parts of Mr. Creighton's address, I recall, he said he was at Atlantic City a couple of weeks before that, I believe, and that he was walking out on the board walk and picked up his Patriot and read across the top of the column "Terrible labor conditions in Harrisburg," and he said that was giving the city a black eye and was creating the general feeling that Harrisburg was a very poor town to work in, and so forth. Some of the chamber of commerce members would put in once in a while with, "That is right; that is right." And Mr. Bergner made an address along the same line.

Chairman WALSH. Who is he?

Mr. GRIMM. Bergner was local counsel of the Pennsylvania road. He accused the Patriot of deliberate lying.

Chairman WALSH. Had it?

Mr. GRIMM. No; I do not think so; I told him it had not.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. GRIMM. Mr. McCaleb made an address along the same line Mr. Creighton did. And then addresses were made by a couple of members of the chamber of commerce, who agreed that the news ought not to be used in the local papers because it would create a feeling of unrest generally. That is about all.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have anything to say?

Mr. GRIMM. I only tried to show Mr. Bergner that the Patriot had not lied. There were representatives of the other newspapers there, and they all made addresses or made replies and said they would be glad to use everything that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. submitted, and they also agreed to give them front-page space.

Chairman WALSH. What had the attitude of the papers been prior to that time?

Mr. GRIMM. Well, Harrisburg is essentially a railroad town and about 5,000 of the 12,000 voters are, I think, railroad men. Of course, we cover these railroads, and we had one man on the local staff whose duty it was to "do" the Pennsylvania Railroad and call on the heads of the different departments every day. He always had difficulty in getting anything, and frequently, depending on the humor the railroad officials were in, he was curtly dismissed. I have knowledge of that. We had a story—I do not recall what it was about—one evening, and as it was the policy of the Patriot—if it was attacking, printing any story about a man in public life or any corporation—to always give the party concerned a chance to give their side of the proposition. I called Mr. Dennehow out of bed at 11 o'clock. The Patriot is a morning newspaper. I called Mr. Dennehow at the late hour, in order to let him give the railroad side of the story. The next day he called my chief and told him if anything like that ever happened again they, the railroad company, would never give us a line of anything and that he would take it up with the owners of the paper. That was about two weeks prior to the strike.

When the strike took place Mr. Dennehow and Mr. Sweeney and other railroad men came around to my desk in the evening to know what I had on the strike.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any change in the attitude of the Patriot?

Mr. GRIMM. There was not. The Patriot is owned by men of wealth, who run it more as a hobby and to give expression to their personal principles and beliefs, rather than from mercenary motives.

Chairman WALSH. Then you continued to print the news on both sides as you had done before?

Mr. GRIMM. Well, we always gave the Pennsylvania Railroad a chance to state their side, and the only difference was that we gave the strikers the best position. It was a big story, and we played it up every day. We gave the strikers the lead of the story and the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.'s side of it at the end.

Commissioner AISHTON. In your judgment there was no undue influence used by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to control the publication of news in the newspaper, was there?

Mr. GRIMM. Yes; there was. They tried to influence chamber of commerce members, mostly merchants, to withdraw their advertising.

Commissioner AISHTON. Two weeks prior to the strike, at the time you got in the row with them over calling some one up at midnight, there was nothing of that kind, was there?

Mr. GRIMM. After that we always had trouble getting any news whatever out of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Commissioner AISHTON. They were a cold proposition, in other words?

Mr. GRIMM. They were that.

Commissioner AISHTON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson would like to ask a question.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did you hear the testimony of a witness here in regard to how the publicity department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. works, and the spirit that impels it?

Mr. GRIMM. I did not hear that testimony.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You did not hear that testimony?

Mr. GRIMM. No; I was in the back part of the room.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It was to the effect that absolute knowledge on all subjects of interest was given to the public. Now, if that was the attitude of the publicity department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., it was not worked overtime in Harrisburg during your experience, was it?

Mr. GRIMM. They probably gave what they thought was news.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you any information as to the mission of publicity men in general? Is it to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, or is it to tell what their employers want them to tell?

Mr. GRIMM. It depends on what newspaper you are working for.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. Grimm; thank you; you will be excused.

Mr. W. H. Pierce, please resume the stand.

TESTIMONY OF MR. W. H. PIERCE—Recalled.

Chairman WALSH. You have been recalled, as you understand, to make a reply, at your request, to make a reply to a statement contained in this publication with reference to your applying to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for a position, and so forth.

Mr. PIERCE. If you noticed, I just called the officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. outside and requested them to stay until I made this statement, so that if I said anything that was not absolutely so they could contradict it, and I hope the commission and the reporters will pay strict attention when I go over it, and if I don't throw more light on this thing in the next 15 minutes than you have heard here in the last week I will jump out of that window.

Chairman WALSH. Please get down to the matter.

Mr. PIERCE. I see in this report compiled and filed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. the following [reading]:

"Strike of shopmen and others at Harrisburg and vicinity.—The strike of shopmen and others at Harrisburg and vicinity was due to the agitation conducted by W. H. Pierce, formerly connected with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, as a national organizer, and who, after being unsuccessful in his efforts to be elected vice president of that organization at its convention in Washington, June 2, 1913, offered his services to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to handle legislative matters in the interests of that company."

I understand that was compiled by the publicity agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and that the eminent gentleman who compiled it had nothing to do with it. I never met him in the world until I met him here, although I dealt with him from a fireman's standpoint for a long period of time, as I have been assigned to that system for 3 or 3½ years, and I know the tactics of the entire system probably better than any man outside of the official family of that railroad.

Mr. Creighton, sitting here in this chair, did he act as though he was piqued in any way toward the Pennsylvania Railroad? No, he was a loyal employee of that company, and still he was overruled by Mr. Atterbury and Mr. Long, who ran around him with seniority rights. Why should I as president of our organization be piqued because I was not elected vice president of that organization? I want to contradict that statement, however.

Now, during the convention, when I was defeated, I was on a number of boards of appeal, which had all of the cases appealed from the decision of the president to this board, and the decision was handed down to the convention to approve of the decision, and three were members of the engineers who appealed their case; the matter was appealed from the decision of the president to the board of directors, and it was brought out at that hearing, which lasted for more than a week before the board of appeals, that there was crooked work going on on the Pennsylvania Railroad. We knew that those things were going on on the Pennsylvania Railroad, but we did not know to what extent, and no one had been able to find out, so one man who we expelled from the order accused the general chairman of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, A. I. Kaufman, from Conemaugh, with receiving $300 from the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in the shopmen's strike in Pittsburgh in 1911, and Kaufman sat right there and heard this accusation and never denied it. That night Kaufman came to my room and said, "I want to see you on important business." I had a private room and a public room also at the Hamilton Hotel up here. He started in to make a confession. I should say he was very much worried, and he started in to make a confession of receiving this money, and the gentleman is here who paid the money, J. C. Johnson, who has testified here as the head of the police department of the railroad company and also superintendent of telegraphs of that system. But Kaufman did not get a chance to complete his confession to me before other visitors came into my room, and it being the last days of the convention, the convention adjourned before the confession was completed, but I got enough to know there was crooked work going on. I went away on a vacation for a week or 10 days, and on my return I got a message from W. S. Carter to come to New York, and it was 1913, and Mr. Carter called me into his private room and said: "There are two men on two general boards," naming them, and the Pennsylvania board was one. "That is the most corrupt system I have ever seen," and I told him of this partial confession Kaufman had made, and he told me what he was going to do and for me to keep it to myself; he said, "We will ferret it out afterwards." I had never said anything up to this time, so when I met him in New York and he told me about these leaks, and he said, "I am only allowed $1,666.66 a year for a contingent fund to find out those things, and every time I put a Pinkerton or other agency man on, and they get the goods and get the evidence, they come to me and say it will cost me $4,000 or $5,000, or $6,000 if I want the evidence, and if I don't get the money, they take it back and sell it to the railroads." I asked him to go to Raymond Burns, a son of William Burns, and he said no, it wouldn't do, and he said, "Don't you know where there are men on the Pennsylvania Railroad you can put in who will get this stuff?" I said, "Yes, there are plenty of men with that incentive, who will do it," and he said, "You go back and you can agree to pay them $600 for their services, and we will keep them satisfied with giving them a job." So I went back home and I found many men. If there is any doubt about the veracity of this I hope the commission will go into the innermost secrets of it to find out about it; I am a free lance and have nothing against any man in the world, but I am giving this to you to clear up the stigma that hangs over both parties in this transaction. I hope that a law is passed that will make it a prison offense for a man to receive or give a bribe, and if you do not do that you will always have trouble and unrest in the labor world.

Upon my return to Harrisburg I could not find a man that would, for $600, go into the office of the railroad and find out the system and the railroad crooks on the Pennsylvania road. Being somewhat handicapped in the money line, I figured out that Long was in New York; I knew that Johnson was the head of the bull department. I knew he handled all of the crooks. I said to myself, "If I am fortunate enough to get in communication with this gentleman and get in there to see Johnson myself, I will learn something before he gets onto my game—I will learn something," and I will tell you how he got onto my game a little later.

I wrote a letter to Mr. Long, and I thought if it became public the words "legislative matters" would be easy to explain, and I said I would like to see him, because I was about to sever my connection with the B. of L. F. & E., and I wanted to see him on "legislative matters." I mailed that letter in the morning and waited for results. I had a meeting just outside of Harrisburg, and when I came back to the hotel from that meeting I found a card in my box signed, I think, by J. K. Linn, or James K. Linn, and it was a funny incident. Just a few days before that a fellow had told me about J. K. Linn; he was a man who was listed as assistant station agent at Harrisburg, but was never there. He was a direct representative of Mr. Long, and he said he had called on me and would return at 9 o'clock in the morning. I did not know Mr. Linn, and I was in the lobby of the hotel, and pretty soon I heard some one call my name, and I got up, and it was Linn, and he said, "Let's go somewhere private and talk over some matters," and we went to my room, and he told me he got this letter and Mr. Long was very busy in New York, but that he was going to arrange for a meeting between me and Mr. Johnson, and I lamented the fact that I could not see Mr. Long, because I was anxious to see him; but that was a lie, and I wanted to see Johnson. He told me he thought he could arrange it all right, and he called on the telephone and said he would let me know in a few hours. He said he was going to Williamsport on special business. So I waited there a short time, and he came back and told me they would meet me at 10 o'clock the next day, that Mr. Johnson would meet me, and so I gets on the train and goes to Philadelphia and am ushered into Mr. Johnson's office. He read this letter and then commenced to talk legislative matters, and in regard to fostering legislation in Washington, and we talked legislative matters, and he said, "It will only take part of your time for legislation, for the legislature meets only once in two years; what would you be willing to do outside of legislative matters?" I said, "Anything honorable." We got into the labor movement, and he condemned Carter and Stone and Garretson for their activities, and sided with him more or less in that proposition.

Now, if I make any misstatement, Mr. Johnson, why you correct it. He told me they were a menace in one way or another, and I agreed with him to a certain extent, and finally he came down to getting a man that he could depend on, and I mentioned Joe Compton. We all knew he was a crook, and he said that Compton could not be depended on, and I said, "How about Kaufman?" I knew he had paid Kaufman this money, and I wanted to know what he thought of the article he had bought, and he said he was a dub and no good, and he said the only man he could depend on to pull off a job was Enoch, the general manager of the trainmen. I thought that was pretty good. And about this time he said, "If you accept employment, will you tell Carter"? And I said I certainly would, and he closed the interview there. He said, "I will take this matter up and drop you a card, where will you be in a week or ten days"? that he was going on a vacation, and he told me to drop in in a week or ten days, but I never did, and I never got a card from him. I was just as honest with him as I am here; I never intended to accept employment.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has not money enough in the world to hire me, nor to buy one hair in my head, nor never had. My efforts up there were to find out who the crooks were; and I can sit here and tell you that afterwards Kaufman confessed the whole matter of receiving this $300. I can tell you the bank he deposited it in. He deposited $250 in the Conemaugh Savings Institution. There was a mortgage there on a piece of property in Conemaugh, and he paid $250 out of this $300 he received to that bank. And he went to Turkey's trunk store in Baltimore and bought a grip that cost him $16. The other $34, he went up to Baltimore with two fellows and had a good time, and came back to the Windsor Hotel and lost $10 playing poker. I ferreted this all out. Now, Mr. Parks, the general chairman of the engineers, confessed that he received $300 at the same time. There was $1,500 spent, if you could believe the clerk in the paymaster's department, they spent $1,500; Kaufman told me. He says, "I got mine," he says; "Park got his," he says; "Hendricks, I know, got his; and Capp, I know, got his, but I have no proof of it. That was called out at length.

Now, to this commission I wish to say this: So long as men will receive bribes, and so long as the people are able, like Joseph (Simon) Legree, or sell them on the block, like Joseph Legree did the negro, the country is going to have this unrest. I stand here to-day in the cause of humanity. I have not a chestnut in the fire—nothing to pull out and nothing to put in. I want to say that this unrest is not caused altogether by the general manager, but it is caused by men like Warren S. Stone, who went into Pittsburgh in 1911 and told the shopmen and Brother Grimm down there, who has just testified preceding me, will vouch for this statement, when Stone said that they had a wonderful machine, and if the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. didn't get right that they could oil up their machinery and give them a spanking. Lee comes on in 1913 and tells the men in Harrisburg and convinced them that he was going to stay with them and spend a lot of money, and he led them on. Don't you know that inspires those men to arm, to organize, the trainmen and firemen and engineers, to just assist them to a certain extent, and then when they get ahead to where the engineers' time came they withdrew all their support and left their own men up in the air as well as the shopmen. Now, I will say to you there is the lowest lot of crooks on the Pennsylvania Railroad that there is on any railroad in this country. Those officials down there know the several different men they can use, and I am not afraid to name one, Milton Robinson, at Harrisburg, who will either work for the company or the organization, whichever he thinks to his interest, and steal from the trainmen's organization first with one hand and then the other. He is a scapegoat and ought to be shot at sunrise. He is only one of a few just such crooks on that system, and until those men are eliminated off of that system they are never going to dispel unrest on that system. I want to say to you I could go on from now until morning telling you—

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Mr. Pierce, that may all be very interesting, but really what you were recalled for was to answer this one question, and I deem it fully answered.

Commissioner AUSTON. I think it has been fully answered.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask one question of Mr. Pierce? What became of Kaufman and the other railroad workers whom you charge with being grafters?

Mr. PIERCE. There is a point I want to touch on. I went and found this out, and when he came for reelection I took the floor and said he is a crook and do not reelect him to office.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What happened?

Mr. PIERCE. He was defeated.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was he expelled from the union for being a grafter?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; he was not expelled.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any of these men—

Mr. PIERCE. He transferred his membership, to keep from being expelled, from the Conemaugh, No. 881, to Altoona, 282 (?).

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you know of any men who were guilty of grafting on the employers who were expelled from the union for grafting?

Mr. PIERCE. I know of men who betrayed the union and were expelled. There was Milton Robinson and Derrick (?), and a fellow by the name of Huber (?) that were expelled for that and afterwards were reinstated by the national president.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What I want to know is were men expelled for grafting on the employers, not on the union?

Mr. PIERCE. Do you mean accepting money?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; accepting bribes from the employers?

Mr. PIERCE. Why, you know it is impossible to expel them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why?

Mr. PIERCE. On account of the system they have there. Why, if those officials wanted to tell you, they have got a majority of members they could put into all those lodges. They can elect about any man they want in a local lodge by manipulation.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Pierce, do you know——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I have not finished my question.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, I want my question to follow yours here.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, I want to finish my question and get his answer. Do you know of any specific cases where men have been expelled from the union they have been affiliated with for grafting on the employers?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; I do.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You can answer that question then. Name them.

Mr. PIERCE. Not the Pennsylvania, but on other roads, I could tell you; but we are not investigating other roads, I understand.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you know of any employers that have bought, or are alleged to have bought, union men or other men for dishonorable service that have lost their employment with the company because of so doing?

Mr. PIERCE. Now, I would have to give that some thought. That is a very broad question. You mean on the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, you know the Pennsylvania Railroad has got no more use for a sucker than you and I have after they get done using him. They despise him.

Commissioner LENNON. I mean the officer that does the buying?

Mr. PIERCE. Of being discharged? Do you mean to ask me, do I know of an officer who has been discharged from the service for buying men?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, no; if they did that, they would discharge Mr. Johnson, because he bought men, and he is still in their employ.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. You may be excused.

Mr. PIERCE. I want to thank you, Mr. Commissioners, for allowing me to state this, because I felt that I was in a sense in a very compromising position before this board and before the public, being accused of trying to sell out my organization; I wanted the actual facts known, and they will stand the closest investigation. And should you desire the men whom I went to to get them to do the job, and are unable to get them because they don't have the nerve, I will bring them here to you.

Chairman WALSH. The commission will now stand adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

(Thereupon, at 4.45 p. m., Friday, May 7, 1915, the proceedings were adjourned until the following morning, Saturday, May 8, 1915, at 10 o'clock.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday, May 8, 1915—11.30 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Garretson, Harriman, Weinstock, Lennon, O'Connell, and Aishton.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT OF MR. S. C. LONG.

Chairman WALSH. Now, I have been requested by the commission to read publicly into the record a communication from Mr. S. C. Long, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., addressed to the chairman of this commission. [Reading:]

DEAR SIR: Referring to the statement made to-day before your body by Mr. W. H. Pierce that Mr. J. C. Johnson, superintendent of telegraph of the Pennsylvania Railroad, had paid $300 to certain men connected with the train organizations on the Pennsylvania Railroad, we desire to submit the following so that there shall be no misunderstanding in this matter:

When the strike was declared at Pittsburgh in May, 1911, the company was fearful lest some of the members of the transportation brotherhoods might join the strikers. Accordingly the general chairman of each of the four brotherhoods, Messrs. A. I. Kaufman, general chairman, B. L. F. and E.; William Park, general chairman, B. of L. E.; J. B. Hendricks, general chairman, O. R. C.; and E. V. Kapp, general chairman, B. of R. T., were requested by the general manager to go to Pittsburgh and see that the members of their brotherhoods lived up to the agreements with the company and remain at work, with the distinct understanding that the men should not be asked to do any work other than that which they always had performed in the positions which they held.

These men did this, and their efforts were successful in preventing any of the members of their organizations from leaving the service of the railroad company. After the strike was over as each of these general chairmen had occasion to come to the office of Mr. Johnson, who was chairman of the labor board, in the performance of their duties as general chairmen, he thanked them for the very efficient service they had rendered the company and the organizations and told them the company desired to show some appreciation of their work, and accordingly they were each given $300, which they were told could be used toward defraying their expenses or any other purposes they might choose.

Nothing was asked of these men in return. What was done was entirely in keeping with the action of the company toward a large number of other employees, as set forth on page 14 of the "History of Labor Troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad," a copy of which has been filed with your commission.

Yours, very truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, May 12, 1915—2 p. m.

Chairman WALSH. We will be in order.

I have been requested by the commission to read publicly into the record two additional letters from Mr. S. C. Long, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

In the letter read the other day naming four men who were said to have received $300 each under circumstances detailed in that letter was mentioned Mr. William Park, general chairman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and we have these two further communications from Mr. Long:

PHILADELPHIA, May 11, 1915.

Hon. F. P. WALSH,

Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We desire to make a correction in our letter of May 7 mailed to you after the hearing before the commission closed on that date.

We find, after reaching home, that the amount given Mr. William Park, general chairman B. of L. E., Pennsylvania Railroad, was $200 instead of $300. This money was paid Mr. Park after the strike was over and everything cleared up and was to cover expenses and compensation in connection with his efforts during the shopmen's strike in Pittsburgh in 1911, to prevent employees, and particularly engineers, from leaving the company's service, urging them to remain at work and maintain our contractual relations.

We also desire to say that this money was returned to us by Mr. Park, with the verbal statement that the men he represented had paid him his expenses.

You understand that the total number of employees receiving payments after the strike was over was 511, while 295 other employees were given letters of commendation.

Yours, very truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager

And also the following letter:

PHILADELPHIA, May 11, 1915.

HON. FRANK P. WALSH,
Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In connection with our letter to you of this date, requesting to be permitted to correct statement in our letter to you of May 7, regarding payment of $200 to Mr. William Park, general chairman B. of L. E., Pennsylvania Railroad, to cover expenses and compensation in connection with service rendered during shopmen's strike at Pittsburgh in 1911, as an act of fairness and justice to Mr. Park, may we suggest that you send a copy of our letter, or have its contents conveyed in your own language, to Mr. Warren S. Stone, grand chief engineer Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Cleveland, Ohio.

Yours, very truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, May 27, 1915.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

STATEMENT OF MR. C. T. CHENERY.

Chairman WALSH. I will submit into the record now all of the data with reference to the further investigation made by Mr. Chenery in the alleged giving of bribes and taking of bribes in the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. strike. That includes the letters from the officials of the Pennsylvania Co., the statements of the men involved, and the statement of the local organization of the workers as to the action taken in regard to this alleged bribery, together with the letter from the general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, stating the amount of arms and ammunition kept on hand in Philadelphia.

(The letters and statements here referred to are printed among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Chenery Exhibit.")

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM PARK.

Chairman WALSH. The statements just referred to, which will not be read, will be merely filed. That does not apply to letters from Mr. Park, who desires that the same publicity be given to his letters as was given to the charge that he had accepted and retained this money, or the charge that he had accepted without explanation but returned it. Here is the further record of the case of Mr. William Park:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 11, 1915.

MR. WILLIAM PARK,
General Chairman B. of L. E., No. 941 Railroad Avenue, Sunbury, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the statement made before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations at Washington on May 7 to the effect that you were given $300 to cover expenses and compensation in your efforts during the shopmen's strike at Pittsburgh in 1911 to prevent employees, and particularly engineers, from leaving the company's service, and urging them to remain at work and maintain our contractual relations, which expenses and compensation were paid you after the strike was over and everything cleared up.

In order that the facts may be known to whomsoever they concern, and particularly the locomotive engineers, this is to certify that the amount paid was $200 instead of $300, as stated, and this amount was returned to me by you with the verbal statement that the men you represented had paid you.

We regret this was not made clear in the original statement.

In order that you may be fully informed, I am attaching a statement made to the commission.

Yours, very truly,

J. C. JOHNSON,
Superintendent Telegraph.

[Inclosures.]

Next is a letter from Mr. Park to Mr. Chenery, our investigator, reading as follows:

[Personal.]

MY DEAR MR. CHENERY: I am inclosing a copy of Mr. Johnson's letter to me answering my letter to Mr. Long of the 9th.

This letter is a fair and plain statement, and if Mr. Johnson wants to be fair and not try to discredit the train organizations he should have made this same statement to you rather than muddle it as he did by trying to tell what I have said the many times he has tried to have me take this money all in one short paragraph.

Note he says "in order that the facts may be known to whomsoever they concern."

I feel that the men I represent and myself are very much concerned, and that the people who saw the letter appearing in last Sunday's papers may see this letter from Mr. Johnson. May I ask you to have the press print the same, as a correction of his former letter?

I expect to go to Cleveland in a day or two. If you desire to reach me address B. of L. E., Convention Hall, Cleveland.

W. PARK.

Next is a letter from Mr. Park to Mr. Long, reading as follows:

SUNBURY, PA., May 9, 1915.

Mr. S. C. LONG,

General Manager P. R. R., Broad Street Station,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I note by to-day's papers in the proceedings or testimony before the Industrial Labor Commission, that a letter had been submitted by you, in reply to the charges by W. H. Pierce, that the chairmen of the four brotherhoods had been bribed, in which you are quoted as stating that when the trouble started in 1911, in Pittsburgh, the four chairmen were asked to go there and urge their members to live up to their agreements and that their efforts were successful, and on their return to Philadelphia they were presented with $300 to reimburse them for their expenses, quoting the names of the four men who were then chairmen.

That letter in the form it is quoted surely places me in a very bad position with all organized men, and particularly so with the men who have recently re-elected me for their chairman for the following reasons:

First. I was not asked to go to Pittsburgh by the company, they having only asked me to get into communication with the local chairmen, which I did, and hold copies of the wire I sent them.

Second. I was called to Pitcairn by the local representatives from that point, and later ordered there by Grand Chief Stone.

Third. I have once had charges placed against me for a similar charge wherein I admit that at this time (1911) I was handed a letter by Mr. Johnson, not knowing what it contained at the time, and inadvertently placed it in my pocket to discover after I left the city that I had accepted an envelope containing $200.

Fourth. Your statement, if correctly reported, states that I was given $500. The men I represent will naturally conclude and will have just reasons for doing so, that I did not make a truthful statement when I was tried on this charge, or that I had been given money more than once, and did not make it known.

Fifth. In the published report of your letter to the commission you did not state that I returned this money to Mr. Johnson, telling him that I had been paid by the men I represent in this case, and could not accept it from the company.

In view of these facts, together with the wide publication in this evidence, I can not allow the matter to stand as it does for the public to-day, if for no other reasons, on account of the taunts that may be thrown at my children by their companions.

I would therefore ask, can you and will you correct this statement that I was given $200 instead of $300, as quoted, and also that I returned the money to Mr. Johnson, the man who had handed it to me, giving this correction to the commission that it may be as widely published as your former letter?

I had hoped to leave home for the convention in the city of Cleveland not later than Tuesday evening, May 11, but I can not do so with this matter standing as it does, and if you can not make this correction I shall surely be compelled to seek an audience with that commission for the purpose of getting this question correctly before the people for my own protection.

Anxiously awaiting an early reply and hoping that you will see your way clear to promptly correct your former letters, and in such a way that it will reach the public as widely as before,

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM PARK,
Chairman Engineers Committee.

Accompanying the letter just read is an affidavit or supplementary statement signed by William Park, reading as follows:

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT TO QUESTIONS ASKED AND ANSWERS GIVEN BY ME TO MR. CHENERY, MAY 13, 1915.

In Mr. Johnson's statement of May 11 he quotes several remarks, and in such a way that they would appear to have all been made by me at the time I returned the money, which is not the case.

Mr. Johnson has asked me on several occasions since I returned the $200 to come in and get it, stating that it was intended to reimburse me for time lost and expenses while at Pittsburgh during the shop strike during 1911, and each time advanced some reason for me doing so, which I have always answered with some argument as to why I should not.

I will not attempt to deny this statement in general, but I must try and disconnect it to some extent, that the commission and the public may know and understand.

When I returned the money he (Johnson) took exceptions to it and explained what it was for, as formerly stated, and, among many other remarks made, I did say that it would not be understood in the way he put it, and if the question was ever raised a different construction would be placed on it from the way he understood it.

I had very good reasons to believe that the question would be raised, for I made no attempt to keep it an absolute secret. I had told many of my members all about it long before I ever heard of it through other sources, and before W. H. Pierce used it in his speeches to discredit the train organizations, and I told the members of my own organization all that he produced when he brought charges against me and had me tried before our general committee.

I do not recall ever saying anything about reelection but on one occasion, when I was asked to come in and try to get the money; among other things, I did say that I had charges against me now over that money and would have to stand trial at our next meeting; at this time I had no reason to say anything about reelection, for we were not to hold an election at that meeting.

After this trial, at which I had but one vote against me, or one vote for conviction, and one member refused to vote, I was again asked to come in and get the money or permit it to be sent to my wife, with the remark that it was all over now (meaning, I presume, the trial I had just gone through).

At this time I replied that it was not all over and that the question was likely to go to the convention before it was over. This was the only time the convention was mentioned to the best of my knowledge.

WM. PARK.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 14th day of May, A. D. 1915.

C. G. SHERMAN,
Notary Public.

ADJOURNMENT.

Chairman WALSH. The hearings of this commission will now stand adjourned without day.

(Thereupon, at 6.05 p. m., on Thursday, May 27, 1915, the hearings of the Commission on Industrial Relations were adjourned sine die.)

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT OF JOHN P. GUYER.

HARRISBURG, PA., May 12, 1915.

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Herewith I submit a written statement of those conditions affecting the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., of which your representative, Mr. C. T. Chenery, made inquiry, and which you directed should be sent you. Copy is also sent to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., as directed by Chairman Frank P. Walsh.

The following letter was received by me after Mr. Chenery had made inquiry concerning the dismissal of employees for joining the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees:

"Your name was given to me to hand my evidence or testimony to in the case of being discharged from the work train at Huntingdon, which is under J. M. Kinkade. On March 14, 1914, received a note from Mr. Kinkade to come to his office that evening.

"I accordingly went to his office as supervisor at Huntingdon on March 14, 1914, at 7.15 p. m., and after a short conversation he said to me: 'Have you heard about this Brotherhood of Federated Employees Union that is being organized?' I said I had. He then said to me, 'Do you belong?' and I said 'No.' He then said, 'I am certainly glad you do not.' He then said that John Galbraith, the present foreman, belongs to the brotherhood and that he would be relieved from duty after to-day, 'and I want you to take charge of the train.'

"I then told him, or rather asked him, if he was sure that Galbraith belonged to the brotherhood. He said he was sure and he said further that there is several more who belong to the brotherhood and 'I am going to get rid of them, to.' I asked him if he had the names of any others that belonged. He said, 'Yes.' I said, 'who are they?' and he read the following names: David Prough, W. F. Rhodes, Preston Coffman, W. H. Sutton, Chester Peightel, all of Huntingdon.

"He asked me if I knew of any that belongs, and I told him that was my business, and told him to put my name to his list of men who would be gotten rid of because they belonged to the brotherhood. We were all discharged and have not since been employed by the P. R. R. Co.

"I would like if you would place this before the commission as strong as you can, and if they need any or all of us let us know. A man dare not belong to any organization or political party that tends to better conditions for the mass of people. Socialists are hounded like dogs and have to be careful or they will lose their means of making a bare existence. I think it is high time for the Government, who assures to the people life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, to get to work and to look this matter of serfdom and wage slavery up. Men have no civil and political rights at all, it seems. The railroads of this country, and the Pennsylvania in particular, do as they please and all the so-called courts of justice are back of them.

"Hoping that this will be of benefit to men who are and want to be better men, I am, yours for a more sane civilization.

"WM. L. McELWAIN,
"Huntingdon, Pa."

Regarding the matter of the "Lucknow Encampment" of which you inquired, I find that the newspapers examined by myself and Mr. Chenery give the following accounts of it:

[From The Patriot, Saturday, July 12, 1913, front page.]

"Preparations are being made by the Pennsylvania Railroad in this city for the strike which is expected to occur in the near future among the trainmen, according to reports. A special train carrying a number of officials of the road and policemen from the Philadelphia division is said to be coming here to be stationed on a siding near the Linglestown road above Lucknow, where it will remain until all rumors of a strike have died out.

"A train arrived early this morning which consisted of five sleepers and two dining cars and a number of commissary cars. In them the officials and policemen will make their homes for an indefinite length of time. Upon its arrival in this city the train, it is said, will be equipped with Winchester rifles and other paraphernalia, which will be used to protect the railroad property in case trouble should arise among the men.

"Arrangements are also being made for providing water for this train during its stay on the Linglestown siding, it is said, and yesterday several thousand feet of two-inch water pipe was laid temporarily from the Lucknow shops to the place where the train will be stationed. Lavatories have been built and other arrangements made. Forty gallons of milk have been ordered to be loaded on the train upon its arrival in this city, and every effort is now being made to make the men who will occupy the cars as comfortable as possible during their stay.

"The train was expected to arrive in this city early yesterday morning, but late last night it had not pulled into the Union Station, where guns and other paraphernalia are awaiting it, along with a number of colored porters and waiters, who will care for the officials and policemen while they are stationed in this city.

"It was denied last night at the train dispatchers office that there was such a train coming to this city to protect the railroad property should trouble arise among the trainmen, but according to persistent reports the train is coming, and it is expected here early this morning. It was learned early this morning that the special trains carrying officers will be rushed here from all parts of the Pennsylvania system.

"Coming as far west as Chicago by Sunday night it is believed that fully 500 special policemen and officials will be in this city. It is proposed by the company to make this instruction camp to teach these men how to protect their property, and if trouble is started they will be sent to their respective divisions."

July 14, 1913, first page story:

"The large force of Pennsylvania Railroad police that came in to Harrisburg Friday and Saturday and set up camp along the Linglestown road near the railroad tracks laughed yesterday when asked if their mission to this city was to protect the railroad in case of a strike. The men stated that they were in Harrisburg on their annual outing and that they had nothing with them but their revolvers.

"There are about 450 men in the camp and they come from all points on the eastern division. Yesterday in full-dress uniforms they drilled under the burning sun. The officers stated that, should a strike take place, it would be their duty to protect the railroad.

"The drill yesterday took place before hundreds of spectators.

"It is customary during these annual encampments to take the men out one or two times and drill them, so that when trouble of any kind arises they are able to handle the situation. This is also done to keep the uniform system over the Pennsylvania lines from New York to St. Louis.

"It was denied by both the officials of this city and the members of the force that they had either Winchester rifles or ammunition. So far, the men have not done any target practicing and it was stated will not, as they have nothing to practice with.

"In the face of these denials, however, it is said that boxes of rifles and ammunition and riot clubs have been received in this city.

"The men represent the police force of the Pennsylvania Railroad of the lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie. They represent all capacities of the railroad, from the superintendent to the cop. The men are under command of Supt. Harper, of Philadelphia, who is head of the police of the eastern lines. They came from all the terminal points on the eastern lines, including New York, Philadelphia, Camden, Baltimore, Jersey City, Williamsport, Renova, Pottstown, Altoona, Pittsburgh, Erie, and many other cities.

"In quartering these men the company is using 13 Pullman sleepers, three dining cars, and two commissary cars. It was said they will leave Tuesday and Wednesday."

In same issue of Patriot, July 12, 1913, first page heading:

"Say railroads must recede to prevent strike—Leaders are authorized to declare formal strike any time—At Washington to-day—Interest will center at Capitol in conference with Wilson."

One-column box read: "What the railroad strike would mean:

"Railroads affected, 52, operating 50,000 miles of tracks in 18 States, including New England, Middle Atlantic States, Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana. Total gross incomes, $957,190,000.

"Annual pay roll, conductors and trainmen, on present basis of pay, approximately $85,000,000. Increase men now ask $17,000,000.

"Annual pay roll, conductors and trainmen, if strike is won, $102,000,000. The employees affected, 90,000.

"Number voting for strike, 75,734. Conductors, 11,808; trainmen—referring to brakemen and flagmen—60,829.

"Number voting against strike, 3,077—conductors, 1,446; trainmen, 1,631.

"Their chief demands are 20 per cent wage increase and adjustment of working hours.

"Organizations involved: Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen."

July 15, 1913, front page:

"The second force of armed policemen of the Pennsylvania Railroad east of the Ohio River arrived in this city yesterday morning to receive instructions on how to protect the railroad property in case of trouble. They proceeded to the instruction camp, which is situated along the Linglestown road near Rockville, where they will remain until to-night, when they will leave for their respective divisions and the camp will be broken up.

"There were nearly 400 men with the force which arrived here yesterday morning, and while they were coming into camp about half that number were returning to their homes. The latter force arrived here early Saturday morning, and have received their instructions.

"The instructions consisted of the handling of riot guns, target practice, and drills, and during the three days since the camp has been opened about 600 railroad policemen from New York, Buffalo, and from as far west as Chicago have receiving training.

"The entire day was spent at pistol practice, which was held on the Lucknow rifle range and was under the direction of Lieut. H. G. Olsen, of the Pittsburgh police force. Lieut. Olsen is a crack shot and is one of a team of four who during their service in the United States Army held the world's record as pistol shot.

"Nearly the entire force which arrived yesterday morning were instructed by Lieut. Olsen on how to handle their guns in case of trouble. He also demonstrated to the men his art of shooting by placing seven shots in the center of the target at a distance of 25 yards, out of as many trials. This gave the instructor a perfect score. A number of the policemen watched the lieutenant handle firearms, and before the day's practice was over nearly all of the men were making high scores. Pistol practice continued until 6 o'clock last evening, when the men were ordered to the dining cars for supper.

"Immediately after the evening meal all the patrolmen, attired in blue uniforms and white-top hats, proceeded to an adjoining field, where a dress parade was held. This drill was under the command of Capt. Robt. Cusick, of the superintendent of police headquarters at Philadelphia.

"Supt. of Police Harper confessed yesterday that the camp was held in order to teach the railroad police how to protect the company property.

"'I knew that this camp was to be held at Harrisburg,' said the superintendent, 'but I did not know when. I was on my vacation when the messenger came to me Friday morning stating that I was to prepare for the instruction camp. It was a very short notice, but until Saturday morning everything was in readiness, and on Saturday morning breakfast was eaten there.

"'When the train pulled into this city early on Saturday morning there were about 311 policemen on it, of which 120 were former Army men. Some of the cars, sleepers, and dining cars which were in the train had to be brought all the way from Chicago.

"'We have now in the service of the railroad force east of the Ohio River 525 uniformed men and 750 regular officers, including superintendents, inspectors, captains, and lieutenants. They are the best men we can find. We protect our police force to the best of our knowledge and equip them with the best firearms and ammunition which can be gotten. If we find any flaws in the revolvers or ammunition, we will throw them away and get new, for we do not want any accident to happen to the policemen which could be avoided. Just to-day we found at least 10 revolvers among the men who participated in the target practice which back-fired, and I ordered them throw away and new ones secured.'

"After the day's instructions were completed the policemen were entertained by a baseball game, which was played on an adjoining field between men picked from the main-line force and Baltimore division, the latter coppers losing to the score of 19 to 4."

On the same day's paper, same page (first), appeared the heading: "Railroad men will arbitrate under new bill—Conference at Washington ends in agreement with trainmen—Bill to be law to-night—Railroads and brotherhoods agree to armistice until to-morrow."

The commission will notice that the interview with Superintendent Harper was published almost two years ago, yet no denial of its authenticity or accuracy has been received by the newspaper publishing it—the Patriot. The number of men employed in police work was given freely by the superintendent, as was the entire interview. As stated before your commission, the police were withdrawn after decision to arbitrate was arrived at by the board of managers and the officials of the brotherhoods.

During his testimony Mr. Atterbury said, in effect, that the various superintendents see only the bad men who come before them for discipline. There have been reported to me details of conferences which men have held with various superintendents over grievances, in which the superintendent is said to have given out false information to one set of committeemen, charging, in detail, other members of the brotherhoods serving on grievance committee with having taken active interest in brotherhood matters only when their own class was affected. One man has told me how he forced one of the Pennsylvania's superintendents to retract such a statement, though not until some time had elapsed, during which time the injured man was obliged to suffer the odium of suspicion resting upon him in his brotherhood as a result of charges made against him. The charges were preferred by men to whom the superintendent is said to have given the false information.

Names of these men will be furnished the commission, but not for use by the company, which would doubtless discipline them for daring to tell of conditions.

Excepting for one brief instant when one of its superintendents "slipped up" and gave a partial exhibition of character as it really is, the commission has seen the Pennsylvania "with its gloves on." I have seen its bare hands reaching out for the jobs of men who disobeyed its requests for aid of various kinds to further its own ends.

One young man who had just been dismissed or furloughed without cause being assigned, according to his statement to me, had his relief taken away. His wife had just been confined. Shortly afterwards one of the company's representatives came to him and asked him to "break strike" on the Monongahela division, though they didn't use that term. His wife urged him to keep away from that division, which he did. He has never been employed by the Pennsy, nor has he received his relief.

Another man who was furloughed before the 1914 strike was told by a confidential employee of the company to turn in the names of his friends who had joined the new brotherhood, suggesting that by so doing he could be given his work again. This man's wife was pregnant at the time, according to both his statement and that of the wife, so he turned over the names of all the men he knew were in the new organization. Finally his wife learned of it and made him stop, but he had turned in all he knew. He never got his job and is not now working for the company.

An employee of 12 years' experience, with wife and large family, told me how he was treated by the company when the first talk of urging seniority rights was heard. His foreman was notifying him that he was to go on furlough. His "buddle," working on the same line of work, was a single man and owned some property. This friend offered to take the place of the man with family, to prevent the family's suffering. The foreman refused to permit it, and the men say it was mainly because the married man was a brotherhood advocate. The married man has secured work with the company again. The unmarried one has left the company's employ. Both these men told their stories to me shortly after the incident happened and both have repeated it since Mr. Chenery investigated conditions here, telling it to Mr. Chenery in my presence.

In his testimony Mr. Atterbury said that, owing to the great number of employees, it was impossible for the superintendents to know personally each man or to be on such friendly terms that they named their babies for them, yet these foremen certainly have opportunity to know of the conditions of the families of the men employed, and in the instance cited, the foreman was told of conditions, yet intimated he was acting under instructions.

It is such lack of knowledge or of realization of the fact that all men are our brothers, whose welfare is our own, which makes for the industrial unrest.

Sincerely,

JOHN P. GUYER.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT OF MR. S. C. LONG.

THE NEW WILLARD,
PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, FOURTEENTH AND F STREETS,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1915.

Hon. FRANK P. WALSH,
Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the statement made to-day before your body of Mr. W. H. Pierce, that Mr. J. C. Johnson, superintendent of telegraph, Pennsylvania Railroad, had paid $300 to certain men connected with the train organizations on the Pennsylvania Railroad:

We desire to submit the following so that there shall be no misunderstanding in this matter: When the strike was declared at Pittsburgh in May, 1911, the company was fearful lest some of the members of the transportation brotherhoods might join the strikers. Accordingly, the general chairman of each of the four brotherhoods, Messrs. A. I. Kaufman, general chairman B. L. F. & E.; William Park, general chairman B. of L. E.; J. B. Hendricks, general chairman O. R. C.; and E. V. Kapp, general chairman B. of R. T., were requested by the general manager to go to Pittsburgh and see that the members of their brotherhoods lived up to the agreements with the company and remain at work, with the distinct understanding that the men should not be asked to do any work other than that which they always had performed in the positions they held.

These men did this, and their efforts were successful in preventing any of the members of their organizations from leaving the service of the railroad company. After the strike was over, as each of these general chairmen had occasion to come to the office of Mr. Johnson, who was chairman of the labor board, in the performance of their duties as general chairmen, he thanked them for the very efficient service they had rendered the company and the organizations, and told them the company desired to show some appreciation of their work, and accordingly they were each given $300 which they were told could be used toward defraying their expenses, or any other purpose they might choose.

Nothing was asked of these men in return. What was done was entirely in keeping with the action of the company toward a large number of other employees, as set forth on page 14 of the history of labor troubles on the Pennsylvania Railroad, a copy of which has been filed with your commission.

Yours. very truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

STATEMENT OF MR. W. G. LEE.

[General offices Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 8, 1915.

Mr. JOHN H. CRANDALL,
Secretary Shorthand Reporting Co.,
Room 720, Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 6th advising me that, at the direction of Commissioner Alshton, of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, you inclose extract from the testimony of one W. H. Pierce before the commission, for which I thank you.

I do not believe it will be either possible or necessary for me to appear before the commission to refute any statement made by Mr. Pierce, but would be very glad to have you hand this communication to Commissioner Alshton if you care to do so.

As stated by Mr. Pierce to the commission, I attended a joint union meeting November 30, 1913, at Harrisburg, Pa., held under the auspices of the local lodges of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. There were present at the meeting something over 1,000 members of the four organizations named, all of whom heard my statement referred to by Mr. Pierce. At that meeting Pierce attempted to have a resolution passed before the meeting was really organized permitting members of the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees not affiliated with either of the four transportation organizations to be admitted to the meeting. The chairman ruled that only members of the four organizations would be permitted to remain in the hall, and as a result of this ruling Mr. Pierce left the stage and stood during the greater portion of the meeting in the rear of the hall.

I was reliably informed that Pierce was a self-appointed president of the organization known as the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees, and that he had repeatedly in public made the statement that he was supported or backed by the four transportation organizations. I said to those present that while my sympathies were with the unorganized employees the organization I had the honor to represent could only lend its moral support to them until properly organized in one of the various organizations already in existence, such as the carmen, shopmen, freight handlers, maintenance-of-way employees, etc. I stated plainly that I did not propose to antagonize bona fide labor organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor by even encouraging Pierce to admit to membership employees eligible to the organizations above referred to; that in order to secure the support of the transportation organizations it would be necessary for him to secure authority from the chief executives of the carmen, shopmen, maintenance-of-way men, and other crafts to admit to membership in the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees those classes, and that if such authority was secured or permission given for these classes to affiliate with the Pierce organization I would be only too glad, in conjunction with other officers of the transportation organizations, to join in any honorable attempt to assist them.

I made it plain to all concerned that under no circumstances could either of the transportation organizations be expected to strike in sympathy with any class of employees.

To prove conclusively the foregoing let me call your attention to the fact that the strike inaugurated by Pierce and his followers took effect at noon, May 7, 1914, and that under date of December 8, 1913, the attached circular¹ of instructions was mailed to all lodges and divisions of the engineers, conductors, firemen, and trainmen on the Pennsylvania system over the signatures of the chief executives of those organizations, and particular attention is called to the last two paragraphs of the circular referred to, which deal entirely with the Pierce organization. It must appear strange that in view of the fact that all lodges of the four transportation organizations on the Pennsylvania system had such instructions in their possession they did not know the position of their chief executives several months later when the strike referred to, called by Pierce, became effective. I also attach hereto special circular No. 20,¹ under date of April 15, 1914, dealing with an illegal strike on the Monongahela division of the P. R. R., which clearly defines the position of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The policy of the brotherhood is so well known, and so much literature has been sent out over the signature of the chief executive clearly defining such policy, that it seems unreasonable to suppose that even Pierce, who was, and I understand is, a member of the B. of L. F. & E., would not know the position that would be taken in case of a strike such as the one under consideration.

Accusations made against the undersigned by Pierce are unworthy of answer, and I learned many years ago that it is useless to attempt to lock the door against a liar or defamer. Nothing, in my opinion, has injured labor organizations more than men of the character of W. H. Pierce, whose only object seems to be to live without work and to deceive or impose as far as possible upon his fellow workers. If it were deemed necessary or advisable I have no doubt of my ability to place on the stand several hundred members of the four transportation organizations who attended the meeting of November 30 at Harrisburg, and who would corroborate the foregoing statement made by me at that meeting.

Tranking you for furnishing me the information, I am,

Very truly, yours,

W. G. LEE, President.

Will the commission be kind enough to wire me date I could appear before it a few moments?

LEE.

STATEMENT OF MR. G. B. ROWLAND.

[State legislative board Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of Pennsylvania, Rooms 503-504, Franklin Building.]

HARRISBURG, PA., May 11, 1915.

Mr. JOHN H. CRANDALL,
*Secretary Shorthand Reporting Co.,
Room 720, Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C.*

DEAR SIR: I note through the Associated Press news of the statements made by one W. H. Pierce before the Federal Industrial Commission at Washington, D. C., the following statement by Pierce:

"W. G. Lee came to Harrisburg and addressed a joint meeting of the shopmen and transportation men. Lee said to these men that if the Pennsylvania Railroad discharged one of the shopmen for joining the union, 'we have 135,000 union transportation men and $3,500,000 in the treasury, and will use every dollar and every man against the railroad if they discharge those shopmen.'"

I wish to say that the above statement of Pierce is absolutely untrue, as I was present at that meeting and remember distinctly the statements made by W. G. Lee to the shopmen's trouble in Harrisburg, which was:

"That he could only lend his moral support to the Federated Railway Employees until such time as they had affiliated themselves with the respective bona fide organizations representing their crafts, such as the carmen, shopmen, freight handlers, maintenance-of-way employees, etc."

There was at no time during his remarks that he promised them the support of the 135,000 brotherhood men or $3,500,000 in their treasury.

He also stated that "under no circumstances could either of the transportation organizations strike in sympathy with any class of employees.

Yours, respectfully,

G. B. ROWLAND,

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.*

STATEMENT OF MR. W. H. PATRICK.

[Keystone Lodge No. 42, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.]

HARRISBURG, PA., May 11, 1915.

Mr. FRANK P. WALSH,
Chairman Federal Industrial Commission, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Recently there appeared in the daily papers some malicious statements made before your commission by one Mr. W. H. Pierce against one of the members of Keystone Lodge No. 42, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, namely, Milton T. Robinson, of Harrisburg, Pa., and also the grand president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, William G. Lee, of Cleveland, Ohio.

By action of the above-named lodge I was instructed to inform you that the statements made by Mr. W. H. Pierce have been refuted by the lodge, and that they are not true.

Trusting that you will give this affair your consideration, I am,
Very truly, yours,

[SEAL.]

Secretary Lodge No. 42, No 2311 N. Sixth Street, Harrisburg, Pa.

STATEMENT OF MR. M. T. ROBINSON.

[State Legislative Board of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen of Pennsylvania.]

HARRISBURG, PA., May 17, 1915.

Mr. JOHN H. CRANDALL,
*Secretary Shorthand Reporting Co.,
Room 720, Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C.*

DEAR SIR: I have noted by the Associated Press news of the proceedings before the Federal Industrial Commission, sitting at Washington, D. C., of statements made before the commission, and wherein my name has been mentioned by one W. H. Pierce, and to which I take exceptions and wish to file with the commission my reason for so doing.

I note his statement in reference to a visit to Harrisburg by W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and of which organization I am also a member, and attended the meeting at which the following statement, quoted by Mr. Pierce, is supposed to have been made:

"W. G. Lee came to Harrisburg and addressed a joint meeting of the shopmen and transportation men. Lee said to these men that if the Pennsylvania Railroad discharged one of the shopmen for joining the union, 'We have 135,000 union transportation men and $3,500,000 in the treasury and will use every dollar and every man against the railroad if they discharge those shopmen.'"

This statement is absolutely incorrect. Mr. Lee did say "that he could only lend his moral support to the Federated Railway Employees until such time as they had affiliated themselves with the respective organizations representing their crafts, such as the carmen, shopmen, freight handlers, maintenance-of-way employees, etc." At no time during his remarks did he promise the support of the membership of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, either by membership or by capital. He did say that "under no circumstances could either of the four transportation organizations strike in sympathy with any class of employees."

As to myself, I note under date of May 7, where Pierce said that I, "Milton T. Robinson, of Harrisburg, ought to be shot at sunrise."

If I may interpret the meaning of his statement I should say that the statement should be reversed and applied to Mr. Pierce, as he is the only man I know who has not only tried, but has misled many good, reliable, and industrious men to follow him in a movement in which he as an experienced organizer of men knew that he was telling them something that was simply impossible to do. He knew as an organizer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers that the transportation brotherhoods could not under any consideration strike in sympathy with any other class of employees, and yet he has steadfastly maintained that they would, and thereby induced many employees to join the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees. If the term "traitor" should be applied to anyone, it is my opinion it is he who should be "branded."

When he says that the trainmen promised to go out on strike with the members of his organization, there is nothing to his statement, as no one was in authority to speak on that matter other than W. G. Lee, but there was a few persons unauthorized and of the same disposition as Pierce, and who are of the stripe who would do anything at the wrong time and nothing at the right time, who made such statements, but no one should have known the truthfulness of such sayings better than Pierce from his experience as an organizer, yet he continued to deceive his followers.

Very truly, yours,

M. T. ROBINSON,
P. O. Box No. 598, Harrisburg, Pa.

STATEMENT OF MR. H. B. HUBER.

[Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, general grievance committee, Pennsylvania lines east.]

HARRISBURG, PA., May 20, 1915.

Hon. LEWIS K. BROWN,

Secretary United States Commission on Industrial Relations,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been an interested reader of the press reports of the testimony presented to your honorable commission during its many sittings throughout the Nation, but particularly interested in the testimony offered by one W. H. Pierce, president of the so-called Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees, who, according to the Associated Press report, under date of the 6th instant, testified in part as follows:

"Mr. W. G. Lee, president of the trainmen—I should call him brother, but don't, because it's a disgrace—came to Harrisburg and addressed a joint meeting of shopmen and transportation men. Lee said to those men that if the Pennsylvania Railroad discharged one of the shopmen for joining the union, 'We have 135,000 union transportation men and $3,500,000 in the treasury, and will use every dollar and every man against the railroad if they discharge those shopmen.'

"The trainmen said to the shopmen, 'Strike, and we'll go with you.' But the trainmen didn't strike with them. If ever a man was guilty of high treason against his fellows it is W. G. Lee. He is the cause of suicides, great loss of property, and the breaking up of homes."

The meeting referred to by Pierce was held in Harrisburg on November 30, 1913, and I was one of approximately 1,000 transportation men who were present at this meeting—the term "transportation men" referring to members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The meeting itself was one of what we railroad men term "fifth Sunday" meetings, which are usually held in some large railroad center on the fifth Sunday of any month in which such occurs, and the attendance at such meetings is generally limited to transportation men, practically the only exception being when members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers are admitted. Officers of these organizations are invited to address these meetings, as well as men prominent in public life. At the meeting in question President Lee, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, was an invited guest.

Pierce, the president of the so-called Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees, was present at the opening of the meeting in his official capacity, but not as an invited guest, to the best of my knowledge. Pierce—who, by the way, was a defeated aspirant for a vice presidency of the firemen's organization at their Washington convention in 1913, and whose commission as an organizer of that organization expired at midnight, November 30, 1913, sought to have the meeting thrown open to the members of the "federation." After a short discussion it was decided that, in view of the fact that the meeting had been called for transportation men only, the members of the "federation" would not be admitted. Pierce immediately left the meeting in a "huff," but shortly returned in his individual capacity as a member of the firemen's brotherhood, and later on, at the request of the chairman, addressed the meeting.

I was an attentive listener to the address made by President Lee, but at no time in his discourse did I hear him make any statement that could be construed as inferring that Pierce or his organization could, at the least, hope for the support which Pierce testified President Lee promised would be given if the Pennsylvania dismissed any shopman for affiliating himself with the "federation." President Lee did make a statement, which in substance was that if Pierce was organizing the shopmen and other employees and affiliating them with his organization with the permission of the different craft organizations already in existence and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, then he could no doubt meet with the heads of the four transportation organizations and talk the matter over. Pierce did not then nor has he since, to the best of my knowledge, claimed that he had permission from any of the craft organizations representing other than transportation men in railroad service, such as the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, Brotherhood of Car Repairmen, International Car Inspectors' Union, etc., to affiliate this class of employees with his organization. He has repeatedly announced that he would not affiliate his organization with the American Federation of Labor.

There is no doubt in my mind but that Pierce was promised physical support in his then threatened strike by members of the transportation organizations acting in an individual capacity, but this was an assumption of authority on their part that was contrary to the general rules of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and similar laws of the other transportation organizations. The president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Mr. Lee, acting in his official capacity, can not call a strike of his own initiative, the general rules only giving to him the authority to approve or disapprove the action of a general grievance committee who, having received the approval of at least two-thirds of the membership on a railroad as the result of a referendum vote, can authorize or order a withdrawal from the service. Pierce, as a member and deputy officer of the firemen's brotherhood, was well aware of this fact.

The transportation organizations accept the open-shop policy; their members work side by side with others in their respective classes who do not belong to their organizations on the condition that these nonmembers work for the same rates of pay and upon the same conditions; and these organizations neither believe in nor practice the sympathetic strike.

It might not be out of place to suggest to your honorable commission that in considering the testimony presented by Mr. Pierce that you consult the report of Messrs. John A. Moffit and James A. Smyth, the commissioners of conciliation of the United States Department of Labor, submitted to the Hon. William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, under date of July 1, 1914. This report covers the work of the honorable commissioners of conciliation in their efforts to avert the—at that time—impending strike of Mr. Pierce's Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees.

Respectfully, yours,

STATEMENT FROM HARRISBURG (PA.) PATRIOT.

[From Harrisburg Patriot, Dec. 1, 1913.]

CONCERTED MOVE GREAT FOR MEN—SPIRIT OF HARMONY A NECESSITY TO SUCCESS, SAYS LEE—PIERCE RAPS COMPANIES.

A thousand railroad men attended the regular joint fifth Sunday meeting of the four brotherhood organizations yesterday at the Board of Trade Hall.

William G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, who has just finished the eastern arbitration proceedings, was the principal speaker on the occasion. He said he knew of no differences between the various brotherhoods. The especial need of affiliation of the four organizations on the Pennsylvania was urged. Lee declared that he worked for federation and harmony between the engineers and firemen in the Harrisburg and St. Paul conventions. All would stand by the new brotherhood with money and otherwise, he said. He dwelt on spies and gum-shoe men and said it was impossible to keep out the traitor. "With small favors they tempt employees with passes," he said. Government figures were used to show the high death rate on the railroads. For 1912, one killed every five and one-half hours, and those injured, including the killed, average one every 12 minutes. Railroad men can never get just compensation in consideration of these fatalities. He spoke on arbitratiton, concerted movements, and wage scales at great length and intimated that concerted action was one of the most valuable.

Senator E. E. Beidleman extended an address of welcome to the visiting members.

G. G. Boran, chairman of the State legislative board of the Brotherhood Railroad Trainmen, spoke of legislation and the work of the legislative board, dwelling principally on the public-service commission act and commented on the fact that employees and families will not be granted passes.

J. C. Blarney spoke on behalf of the B. of L. E. and took occasion to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the organization, which is the pioneer of the railroad brotherhoods. He alluded to the concerted movement as one of the grandest things and urged a spirit of harmony to prevail among all railroad employees and the four organizations.

W. H. Pierce, organizer of the B. of L. F. and E., who recently organized the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees, told of the achievements of organized labor as monuments of the brotherhoods, and, as he is from the rank and file, his heart is with those who earn their living by the sweat of their brows. The expense of handling grievances is much greater now than formerly, he said. One hundred dollars is now spent where 5 or 10 years ago $10 or $15 was sufficient to handle a case. "Petty grievances are now carried to the higher officials. Years ago they were settled in the yard-master's office," Pierce said. "This is done to create excessive assessments, discourage the men, and make them quit the brotherhood."

The brotherhood meeting held yesterday afternoon in the Board of Trade Auditorium was continued last night at White's Hall, Broad and James Streets, under the auspices of the B. of F. R. E.

Most of the speakers at the afternoon session were present, all speaking a word of encouragement for the new organization. Among the speakers were W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and W. H. Pierce, organizer for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. Both men extended hearty cooperation of their brotherhoods toward the new organization and offered support at all times.

STATEMENT OF MR. P. L. SMITH AND OTHERS.

[Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees.]

HARRISBURG, PA., May 17, 1915.

To whom it may concern:

We, the undersigned members of the different railroad brotherhoods, did attend a meeting in White's Hall on the 30th day of November, 1913, which was addressed by Mr. W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and heard him make this declaration:

(By W. G. Lee.) We have 135,000 members and $3,500,000 in our treasury, and every dollar and every man will be used against the Pennsylvania Railroad if they discharge one of you men for belonging to a union; and he further said if we stood by W. H. Pierce that he, Pierce, would lead us to a victory.

To whom it may concern:

I, R. B. Sheely, secretary of William M. Morne Lodge No. 673, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Harrisburg, Pa., do hereby swear that I was in attendance at a meeting held in the city of Harrisburg, Pa., on the 30th day of November, 1913, and heard W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, in the course of his address, make this statement, to wit:

"The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen has 135,000 members and three and a half million in their treasury, and that they (the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees) would have the backing of the entire organization if one of their men was discharged for joining the union."

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT OF MR. W. H. PIERCE.

[Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees.]

HARRISBURG, PA., May 27, 1915.

LEWIS K. BROWN,

Secretary Commission on Industrial Relations,

Transportation Building, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your request regarding information in regards to the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees, I hereby make an official statement covering the question asked me by your honorable commission.

A. I. Kauffman, who was general chairman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in 1913, made a partial confession to me that he received money from the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in the early part of July, 1913, and a full confession in the month of August, 1913. This will, I think, answer the two first questions.

No; the knowledge was not known generally. I had informed two members of Kauffman's own lodge at Altoona, Pa., and one member who lived in Harrisburg, and also W. S. Carter, national president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Peoria, Ill.

It did become known in June, 1914, in a general way to all members who attended meetings, and most of them were displeased with the action of the general chairman, and I attended the annual meeting of the joint protective board in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and there told the joint board that Kauffman was crooked and not to reelect him to office, and they defeated him.

I was then a member and am still a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. I belong to Lodge 477, located at Galesburg, Ill.

Mr. W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, did make a statement at a meeting held in the board of trade hall in the afternoon of November 30 and in White's Hall that same evening, in the city of Harrisburg, Pa., that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen had 135,000 members and $3,500,000 in their treasury, and that they (the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees) would have the backing of the entire organization of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen if one of the employees of the P. R. R. was discharged for joining the union.

He also said in White's Hall at the evening meeting that if the shopmen would follow W. H. Pierce, he, Pierce, would lead them to victory.

W. H. PIERCE.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Dauphin, ss:

STATEMENT OF CHARLES LIEBAU.

HARRISBURG, PA., June 12, 1915.

To whom it may concern:

At a regular joint fifth Sunday union meeting of the railway brotherhoods held at the Board of Trade Auditorium, Sunday afternoon, November 30, 1913, which I attended as a member of Lodge No. 673, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, I personally heard W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, distinctly state in the course of remarks, in speaking of the shopmen's organization, that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen had 135,000 members and three and one-half million dollars in its treasury, which would be used to back up the shopmen if any were discharged for joining the union.

The above is a true and correct copy.

EXHIBITS.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 1.

AN AGREEMENT.

The duly authorized representatives of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, for the purpose of more clearly defining their relations to each other and for the further purpose of avoiding disputes and securing harmonious cooperation in joint defensive action, do hereby agree:

1. That for the purpose of this agreement a joint board shall be created, as follows: The president and the general secretary-treasurer of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America and the president and the grand secretary and treasurer of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

2. That the joint board may adopt rules of procedure in the conduct of business that may properly come before it which shall not conflict with this agreement or the laws of the organizations parties hereto.

3. That meetings of the joint board shall be held upon the joint call of the presidents of the two organizations.

4. That the presiding officer at meetings of the joint board shall be elected by a majority vote at each meeting, provided that should a tie vote occur any other method mutually agreed upon may be adopted.

5. That three votes in the affirmative shall be necessary to adopt any proposition before the joint board, and when so adopted shall be binding on both organizations parties hereto.

6. That each organization parties hereto shall bear equally the incidental expenses of the joint board.

7. That when a joint demand is made by committees representing members of both organizations parties hereto involving either questions of wages or hours, all conferences and business with the employer relative thereto shall be conducted by joint committees of the organizations parties to this agreement, and in case a strike or lockout shall result each organization shall bear its own expenses.

8. That when a strike or lockout occurs where a joint demand has not been made, but where one of the organizations parties to this agreement shall be involved, it shall be compulsory, without further notice, for members of the other organization to protest against handling telegraph business other than that handled before the strike or lockout occurred, provided that nothing herein shall be construed to mean that a sympathetic strike can take place before being constitutionally legalized.

9. That telegraphers employed by a railroad company shall not be admitted to membership in the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America.

10. That telegraphers employed by a commercial telegraph company, brokerage firm, or press association shall not be admitted to membership in the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

11. That the officers of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America shall insist on all members of that union now in or hereafter entering the railroad service joining the Order of Railroad Telegraphers without delay.

12. That the officers of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers shall insist on all members of that order now in or hereafter entering the commercial telegraph service joining the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America without delay.

13. That nothing contained in this agreement shall be construed to mean that any telegrapher shall be prohibited from continuing membership in both organizations parties hereto.

14. That upon proof being furnished that a member of either organization party to this agreement worked for a firm, association, or corporation during the continuance of a legal strike charges shall be preferred against such member by the officers of the organization in which he holds membership, and such member shall be tried in accordance with the laws of that organization.

15. That this agreement shall be effective on and after the date of its signing.
Approved.

Mr. J. R. DONOVAN,
Division Operator, Wilmington, Del.

DEAR SIR: On account of death in family I have been out of town, and just received your letter. I am sorry you are in need of men at this time, as it is impossible for me to return for duty at once, owing to the fact the telegraphers' committee is expecting an audience with the officials any day, and it is necessary that I shall be present when this audience is granted. I will report for duty as soon as I am relieved, which should be in a short time.

HEADQUARTERS OF GENERAL COMMITTEE,
3415 NORTH TWENTY-SECOND STREET, TIOGA,
Philadelphia, Pa., August 24, 1912.

Mr. J. R. DONOVAN,
Division Operator, Wilmington, Del.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of August 23 received. I regret to have to say that I am unable to report for duty on Monday, August 26, as requested, for the reason that I am a member of the telegraphers' general committee, which is now in session and endeavoring to establish a schedule and wage scale on the Pennsylvania lines. I hereby protest against being dropped from the rolls and my position being advertised, and I notify you that such action on your part will cause me to make it one of the grievances we have against the company.

Yours, truly,

T. W. TRUITT.

WILMINGTON, DEL., August 28, 1912.

Mr. T. W. TRUITT,
Operator, Middletown, Del.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 24th instant received. As you have been working for this division for 24 years and received your living from them, I consider your first duty toward them when you are needed in the service. Any employees given leave of absence are likely to be recalled at any time when the service requires, and you, of course, understand the result of refusing duty and insubordination.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am attaching herewith a copy of the letter sent to Mr. Donovan on the 10th,¹ as per your instructions. You will notice I did not recognize that I had been discharged. This was due to the fact that Mr. Donovan has never officially notified me to that effect.

This letter was sent to Mr. Donovan through the United States mail, and I am very sure that he received it O. K., but up to this time I have received no reply from him. Would you advise that I make a second request or let it stand as it is?

With best wishes, I am,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I have received your favor 18th instant, together with the communication addressed to Mr. Donovan, division operator at Wilmington, Del., and in reply will state that in my opinion it will be well to write Mr. Donovan another letter, calling his attention to your communication to him dated January 10, and inclosing copy of same. If you do not hear from him within a reasonable length of time kindly advise to that effect.

With best wishes, I am,

MIDDLETOWN, DEL., February 3, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: As per your letter of January 20, I made the second request upon Mr. Donovan to be put back to work, and up to the present time I have received no reply to either letter. To make sure that Mr. Donovan would get my last letter I registered same to him and am attaching his receipt herewith.¹

From what I can learn from the other men they are being treated in about the same manner as I am. I hear that all the division operators have their orders, and could not make a reply to us if they so desired.

With very best wishes, I am,
Yours, fraternally,

T. W. TRUITT.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., February 6, 1913.

Mr. T. W. TRUITT, Middletown, Del.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your letter of February 3 received. It is sufficiently conclusive to establish the fact that you were discharged from the service for representing your fellow employees, as you had a right to do. We now have a very good case against the Pennsylvania Railroad on many counts. The delays have been very annoying, but it has given us an opportunity to get ready that otherwise we would not have had, and it may be all for the best.

The situation at Washington has interfered with us and our plans considerably, but we are not alone in that respect.

The organization on the Pennsylvania is standing up wonderfully well, and we certainly ought to win on that account alone.

With best wishes, I am,
Yours, fraternally,

H. B. PERHAM, President.

10294 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

[Organization committee Federated Railroad Trades, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Pennsylvania lines.]

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 4, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary A. F. of L., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The Pennsylvania Co. continues to discharge the active officers of the new locals. Their present policy can not help but be to our disadvantage unless some change is made at once. Along these lines we have arranged to hold a special conference with delegates from the points affected, and they are principally on the Pittsburgh division. Men being let go at Twenty-eighth Street, Pitcairn, Youngwood, and Derry, Pa.

Up to now our efforts for adjusting these grievances have not proven successful, local shop officials not giving the committees waiting upon them any satisfaction. When the cases are taken up with higher officials the same treatment is accorded. What course the company will pursue when the general committee of each organization waits upon them is not known. It's easy to surmise that little show will be given to these men let go, who are practically all old employees.

Meanwhile organizers are making arrangements for meetings in Altoona, Harrisburg, and at Columbus, Ohio. It may be necessary that some of the international officials make an effort to meet the higher officials of the road and make an effort to have this discrimination stopped.

Vice President Glover, of the blacksmiths, has been assigned to work in conjunction with the other organizers, and for the time being will be located in the Pittsburgh district.

With best wishes, I am,
Fraternally, yours,

A. E. IRELAND, Secretary.

Company continues to discharge union men at all points. Trouble anticipated. Should have two additional men to help. Wire answer.

T. H. FLYNN.

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 4, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Please find inclosed weekly statement for week ending to date.

The work of organizing on the P. R. R. is not as good as it was some time ago: this is due to the fact that the company has started to discriminate against the union men, which has resulted in making some of the men refuse to cooperate with us, but I think that this will not last long, and the men will see that they must make a stand sometime.

The blacksmiths have placed a man on the road, and the sheet-metal workers will have one of their organizers here Monday. So, with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours, fraternally,

T. H. FLYNN,
Organizer A. F. of L.

T. H. F.

PITCAIRN, PA., March 6, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The Federal Labor Union, of this city, was installed on Saturday last, with a membership of 218. They will send to you for more due books and constitutions.

The P. R. R. has discharged all the men who were active in the formation of this movement and I do not know how we will be able to stop a general strike. We all realize how impossible it would be at this time to win; but how to stop it is also as hard.

Wyatt was in Pittsburgh on Sunday. His reports from Altoona are good. Our reports from Columbus, Denison, and other points in Ohio are real good.

Pierce is in Harrisburg, but we have not received a report from him, but we expect one to-night.

The blacksmiths have placed two organizers on this road—Glover and Horn.

I hope that some arrangements will be made so the men will get their trouble adjusted and not have to strike.

I am inclosing you clippings from Pittsburgh Leader which will explain how it stands up to the present time.¹

So, with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours, fraternally,

T. H. FLYNN.

PITCAIRN, PA., March 11, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Please find inclosed weekly statement for week ending to date, for which you will please send check to my home address.

The conditions on the P. R. R. is about the same, the company is discharging and the men are organizing faster than the company can discharge, while the organizers are real busy keeping the men from striking, for as they say that if the men are all discharged then there will be not enough to strike when the time comes.

The organizers sent to Columbus, Ohio, are organizing real fast, but Gallagher and Wyatt are having all kinds of trouble at Altoona, while we have not received any information from Pierce from the time he left Pittsburgh for Harrisburg.

I have worked all week around Pittsburgh and Youngwood with other organizers getting the locals installed and advising against a strike. At the same time we organized another federal union at the 28th shops, and will make application for a charter Sunday, also will go Sunday night to Johnstown to form another federal labor union.

We are working real hard to get a conference with the company, but up to the present time we have not been able to accomplish much along those lines.

Ireland will be in Washington Monday and will call on you and explain matters to you; so with best wishes I beg to remain,

Fraternally, yours,

T. H. FLYNN,
Organizer A. F. of L.

[Organization committee Federated Railroad Trades, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Pennsylvania lines.]

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 21, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,

801 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: In connection with the organization work on the Pennsylvania system would state for the past two weeks since the last circular was issued much trouble has been experienced on account of the company's attitude in discharging employees for their activity in organizing.

At some of the immediate points near Pittsburgh the company officials went even so far as to discharge from one-third to one-half of their forces.

For some time the situation was very critical, and in order to offset any attempt on behalf of the company to discourage our movement, it was arranged for a big general mass meeting, and same was held in Old City Hall, Sunday, March 19, when addresses were delivered by President James O'Connell, of the International Association of Machinists, and other organizers.

The outlook at this stage is much more promising, and arrangements are being made to carry on the organization work, particularly at all eastern points.

At a meeting held Sunday morning at the headquarters in the Monongahela House, at which meeting President O'Connell was in attendance, the entire matter was gone into in detail. It was then mutually agreed to arrange for a campaign of education by sending out circulars to the unorganized points, it being understood that the mails were to be used to reach this company's employees.

It was agreed as heretofore that the expense incurred is to be borne pro rata by each organization.

Your representatives on the ground will be prepared in a few days to submit to you in detail what the share of your organization will be. Meanwhile every effort is being put forth to further increase our forces. We have been in close touch with the officials of the company. Copies of communications are inclosed.

T. H. FLYNN.

SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS TO TRANSPORTATION SERVICE MEN.

1. Are there provisions in your agreements for the transportation of scabs to take the place of loyal union shopmen on strike?

2. Does it specify that you shall operate defective motive power and jeopardize the lives of the traveling public, on account of incompetent nonunion workmen?

3. Is there anything therein that says you shall man your trains and mingle around the yards among armed thugs and scab herders and work under their protection?

4. Does it say that you shall haul provisions, clothing, and other supplies to scabs?

5. Is it not true that these striking shopmen refused to be used by the company when you faced a serious conflict less than a year ago?

6. There is a principle involved, stand by these staunch citizens and refuse to work until this company reinstates its old employees. Don't be used as tools to defeat your fellow workmen.

On afternoon of June 6, at Weber's Hall, Mr. G. W. Souser, member of Ormsby Lodge, No. 465, B. L. F. & E., addressed about 300 shopmen, advising that if they would sever their connection with the A. F. of L., the Pennsylvania Co. would be willing to make some satisfactory settlement.

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 8, 1911.

The following recommendation was furnished by Mr. J. C. Jackson, member of R. B. Hawkins Division, No. 114, Order Railway Conductors, to Mr. J. Jenney, foreman of Pennsylvania Co.

RECOMMENDATION.

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 8, 1911.

Mr. J. JENNEY:

The bearer is the man I was talking to you about at Howard. He is a pipe fitter by trade. Anything you can do for him will be thankfully received, and oblige.

We, the undersigned men on strike, authorize this committee of five men, David Rodgers, W. C. Woomer, H. E. Baker, J. E. White, and W. J. Harshberger, to meet the representatives of the various crafts of the A. F. of L., namely, Messrs. Ireland, Paquia, Flynn, Nolte, and Bork, and we demand that the said representatives of the various crafts meet in I. O. O. F. Auditorium, Pitcairn, Pa., Wednesday, June 14, at 2 p. m., for the purpose of demanding the strike benefit or passing the settlement of this cause into the advice of the heads of the various operating crafts and if such is not recognized and acted upon according to this request, a message will be sent to all points that is out on strike, notifying them of the action we have taken and asking them to cooperate with us and unite with us and appoint their representatives with full power to act and bring this settlement about.

No promise will be accepted. Immediate action must be taken.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY CARMEN OF AMERICA,
Pittsburgh, Pa., June 13, 1911.

Mr. THOMAS A. JONES,
P. O. Box No. 466, Pitcairn, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Inclosed herewith find letter from Brother Morrison, secretary of A. F. of L., in which he requests sworn statement regarding the attitude of train-service employees. What we want, Brother Jones, is something to show the exact disposition on part of these men for future reference in their attempt to influence our men to return to work.

We know that there are many instances in which they tried to bring about discord, of which no doubt you can furnish good information, and it is this kind of information that we desire.

If you will also give the names, together with name of organization, number of lodge, etc., or, if in case of grand lodge representatives furnish their name and title, it will indeed be highly appreciated.

We would kindly urge upon you to furnish all information in this connection possible and forward same to this office as soon as convenient to do so.

Assuring you of our best wishes, I remain,

Fraternally, yours,

GEO. A. NOLTE, Grand Lodge Deputy.

P. S.—Kindly return letter of Brother Morrison's without fail.

These men have held two public meetings in Pitcairn for the purpose of doing the above business: Edward McGinniss, B. of L. F. & E.; Bob Jackson, B. of L. E.; F. S. Titman, B. of R. T.; Hendricks, O. R. C.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., June 8, 1911.

Mr. GEORGE A. NOLTE,
Monongahela House, Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your several favors received and contents noted. Your last favor received to-day in regard to the attitude displayed by the brotherhoods' executives. I would like you to furnish me with the names of the representatives of the brotherhoods who are urging the men to withdraw from the American Federation of Labor. If you can do that, we can then take it up with the international officers. I will be pleased to have you wire, at our expense, the names of these men and the organizations they represent.

I also have in mind your postscript in your letter of June 6, in which you say you had a debate at Ormsby, at one of the large shops, with the representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and the company's representative; but you do not furnish me with the name of the representative of the Locomotive Firemen's Union.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor will meet next Monday, June 12.

With best wishes, I remain,

Yours, fraternally,

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

10298 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

[Organization committee Federated Railroad Trades, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Pennsylvania lines.]

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 15, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,

Secretary A. F. of L., No. 801 G Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Inclosed find copy of proposition turned down by the general strike committee at Pittsburgh, Pa., this date, which shows conclusively that the Pennsylvania Co. does not intend to act fair with its employees now on strike.

I am sending this by request of Brother Flynn, who is actively engaged here at present.

With best wishes, I am,
Fraternally, yours,

GEO. A. NOLTE.

Proposition as a basis of settlement from Mr. Shroyer, superintendent Pennsylvania Co. lines west:

First. The company now has an ample force of men at work or en route, none of whom will be displaced.

Second. None of the men now on strike can be reemployed at present.

Third. However, if the strike is called off at once the company will consider applications from the men now on strike, and such of them as it is found desirable to reemploy will be taken on from time to time as new men.

The committee recommends its rejection.

ALTOONA, PA., June 30, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Organizer Gallagher, who has been in the hospital for some days as a result of a very hard beating, is to-day able to be around. We are hopeful that there is nothing serious.

As I wrote to you some time ago asking you to take the matter of continuing organizers in the Pennsylvania system up with the national organizers, I wish you would let me know at your earliest possible convenience what has been done along those lines.

There are now working on this system Organizers Schmitt, Gallagher, Bork, and myself, with Ireland in Pittsburgh, which shows very poorly for the national officers, who pledged themselves at the Pittsburgh conference to continue the work of organizing. Moreover, with this small force of organizers now on the system the company will again take advantage of our organizations and start to discriminate, which will result in disbanding and disrupting all that we have accomplished in the past six months.

Here in Altoona alone we have the following organizations: Boiler makers, 338; blacksmiths, 125; machinists, 436; carmen, 320; laborers, 150.

The laborers have not as yet applied for a charter. There are also several hundred applications from various craftsmen which we have not segregated at the present time.

The blacksmiths have taken their organizer away and the local union feels very hard about it. The same is applicable to the machinists; and I might state briefly that the organizers now on the ground will not be able to accomplish very much effective work if the national and international organizations directly affected do not manifest a more willing desire to perfect the organization of the entire system.

So, hoping that you will bring this matter to their attention, and begging for an early reply, I beg to remain,

Yours, very fraternally,

T. H. FLYNN.

P. S.—You will please find inclosed weekly statement for week ending to date, for which you will kindly mail check for same to my home address.

T. H. F.

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 1, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Please find inclosed weekly statement for week ending to date, for which you will please send check to my home address.

The conditions on the P. R. R. are getting bad. The company knowing that all the organizers except three were off the road has again started to disrupt the organization by refusing to reinstate the old men as per the agreement. This week I had to give up my work of organizing in Altoona and come to help the men at Pitcairn, Allegheny, and other places that have been on strike for a long time and are out of money and not one organizer here to instruct them. I have arranged for an ox roast for the 11th and got all the stuff donated. We expect to get enough money to help some of the strikers.

Now, if the national organizations will not assist in organizing to other shops on the road, the company will continue to discharge all union men. I will go back to Altoona on the 12th. So with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours, fraternally,

T. H. FLYNN.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Mount Vernon, N. Y., November 5, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
Eighth Vice President, American Federation of Labor,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your favors dated October 28 and 31 received.

I shall write, as you suggest, to Mr. J. H. Marble, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, requesting him to furnish me the report referred to in your letter, or if a later report on the same subject has been published, to send that. I thank you for the information.

Referring to your inquiry concerning a statement issued by an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., I desire to say that on Sunday afternoon, April 2, 1911, I was in Pittsburgh, for the purpose of addressing a meeting in the interest of the Pennsylvania Railway employees who were then engaged in a strike. Prior to the meeting a local officer of one of the shopmen's unions—I do not remember his name—handed me a typewritten statement, which he said was a copy of a letter issued to the employees. In giving me the statement he admonished me to regard as absolutely confidential the name of the Pennsylvania official attached to the letter. In reading the communication at the meeting I did withhold the official's name.

I, of course, can not vouch for the authenticity of this statement, and while I send a copy of it to you, I suggest that you should investigate before using it, and thus ascertain if it is really authentic.

With best wishes, I am,
Yours, truly,

JOHN MITCHELL,
Second Vice President.

(Inclosure.)

All foremen:

We have been necessitated to discontinue work during the past week to keep within our allotment because of the fact that the force now on our section is greater than the money allotted us can maintain.

In order that we may work our men regular and give them living wages and keep within our allotment, it will be necessary for us to decrease our force. Before making this reduction in the force, however, we desire to have an expression from our laborers as to whether or not they are members of labor organizations now being organized in this vicinity. In this reduction of the force to live within our allotment, it is our intention to first lay off the men who are members of the organization or who propose to join the organization.

Advise us not later than Monday p. m. of the answer of your men to the question, "Are you a member of a labor organization? If so, what? Is it your intention to join one of the labor organizations now being organized in this vicinity?"

W. T. HANLY,
Supervisor No. 104.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 19, 1913.

NOTES OF P. R. R. CASE.

Joseph Born, Wilmerding, Pa., says as follows:

That about the first or middle of February, 1911 Mr. John Steinburg, foreman, P. R. R. shops, called on him and talked about union affairs, stating it would be better for Born to drop the union proposition. Born refused, explaining that while it was true that the company, as stated by Steinburg, had treated him (Born) well, there were others of his craftsmen who had not been accorded such treatment and that he (Born) proposed to fight for those less fortunate than himself. That on February 27, following this interview, Mr. Steinburg said to him (Born) "I have orders to discharge you," and did so, giving no other reason for the action. Born claims he was discharged wholly because he was a union man and refused to accede to the request made by Steinburg.

That 500 maces or clubs were manufactured by the P. R. R. at its cabinet shop, Pitcairn, Pa., prior to the shopmen's strike in 1911, and immediately after a committee had notified the company of the desires of the men.

That John Gelger, Trafford City, Pa., knows all about these matters and would be a good witness, but at this time is endeavoring to get back into service with the P. R. R., therefore will probably be averse to talking on the outside.

That E. P. Kepple, Pitcairn, Pa., is also well posted relative to the case and will tell all about it at any time.

Mr. Born says he is perfectly willing to testify to all that he knows of the matter, which is somewhat limited on account of his activity on committee work during the time of some of the occurrences.

That general manager S. C. Long and Mr. Morrow are men that will not stick to the truth, either regarding facts or the things they have previously stated; that occasion made it necessary for him (Born) to call each of them liars at Broad Street, and he did so; that while Mr. O'Donnell is a fighter, he found him truthful.

That all strikers taken back by the company lost all money they had paid into the voluntary relief and rights to a pension, the company claiming the men had "left the service."

That he understands pension rates are determined by the average of the last one year's pay in the service of the company, but does not seem quite clear on this.

Mr. William Shenefelt, sr., 423½ Westinghouse Avenue, Wilmerding, Pa., says:

That he saw clubs or maces manufactured in P. R. R. cabinet shops, Pitcairn, Pa., prior to the strike of the P. R. R. shopmen in 1911, that the clubs were of hickory timber, about 16 or 18 inches long, a hole in one end with a strap through, that they were very dangerous weapons, that he can probably supply one or two if it should become necessary; that these clubs were shipped from cabinet shop to P. R. R. storerooms, about 200 yards distant and stored there.

Shenefelt further states that of his own knowledge the P. R. R. manufactured similar clubs at same place and for the same purpose, viz, arming "bulls" (special agents) at the time a trainmen's strike was looked for; he thinks it was during the year 1909.

That men now in the P. R. R. storerooms, Pitcairn, above mentioned, were also there when clubs were put there in 1911, that the manager, Mr. Nicholson, now, was also manager of the rooms in 1911.

That Jacob Greenwalt, East McKeesport, Pa., was one of the men who turned clubs in 1911, as was also Edwin Cassady, now in the West somewhere. Cassady's father resides in Duquesne, Pa.

That himself and others who went on strike lost what they had paid into the volunteer relief; that the relief is but a "graft" anyway.

That all who went on strike and were taken back do not get the passes they used to get nor that others get who are at work and were not strikers in 1911. Shenefelt was out one week, returned to work, and is still working for the P. R. R.

That he did not assist in manufacturing the clubs, as he is not a turner.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 20, 1913.

Mr. E. B. Kepple, health officer and insurance agent, Pitcairn, Pa., says:

That in February, 1911, he was employed as a blacksmith by the P. R. R. Co. at Pitcairn, Pa., and was a union man; that during that month the P. R. R. began "laying off" its old employees in the shops at above-named place; that the employees thus treated belonged to the union covering their craft, these men in most cases being informed that when they left their union they would be placed back to work; that this procedure continued until a thousand or more of the employees were thus treated.

That about the first day of March, 1911, himself, Joseph Geiger, Trafford City, Pa., and Jacob Born, Wilmerding, Pa., as a committee, were sent to wait upon Mr. J. F. Coursan, general foreman P. R. R. shops, regarding above treatment of the employees, Born having been laid off just previous to this visit. The committee accused the company of discriminating against its old employees who were union men, giving names and other evidence. Mr. Coursan disputed the act of discriminating and stated the company would do no such thing. During the interview Joseph Geiger remarked to Mr. Coursan, "Yes; and I will be about the next one to go," implying that he would be discharged for appearing before Coursan on a committee in behalf of the laid-off or discharged employees. Mr. Coursan said, "No, sir; you will not; you will not be molested"—words to that effect. That the next day, March 2, 1911, Joseph Geiger and himself (E. B. Kepple) were both laid off, and neither have been taken back into service yet.

Kepple states that they were discharged at noon, and that the men yet working when he left the shop were instructed to not speak to him until after he was outside the shop.

Kepple has printed copies of affidavits by men who were treated by the company as above; that the company told them they were treated thus because of their affiliation with their union, and that when they would leave their unions they would be put back to work. He says there are thousands of living witnesses to all this, but that Mr. Ireland, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has the original affidavits, in case they are desired. The conversation with Mr. Kepple suggests that the trouble between the P. R. R. and its shopmen in 1911 was due to the discrimination described above. The first man laid off or dismissed from the service in this eliminating process was the secretary of the Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers' local lodge, Pitcairn, Pa., Mr. George Morgan, now residing at North Braddock, Pa.

This cleaning-out process continued from February until May, Kepple says, and that finally a strike was ordered, and if it had not been ordered when it was there would not have been anyone left to strike, as not one-third of the union men were then left in the shops, thus claiming the company forced the men to strike. He says the company had been told a strike would be called but paid no attention and kept on letting the men out.

Kepple says one of the methods the company used was to place bosses near meeting places. The next day or so after the meeting there were sure to be some of those attending laid off or, in other words, discharged from service.

Kepple says the contract entered into between the employee and the company when entering the voluntary relief is of such nature that if in case of death a beneficiary of the deceased enters suit against the company it voids the relief benefit and also bars prospect of recovering through the law. Upon being asked why employees entered into such a one-sided contract, he said, "It's that or no job." He states some of the employees went to an attorney regarding this contract, but the attorney told them it was so ironclad the employee had "no show."

Kepple also says, regarding the lay-off or discharge feature, it was a method of the company to get hold of a man it thought it would be able to bulldoze, call him into the office, and go after him roughshod. To such they did not mince words as to the unions and what would be done, etc.

Regarding the relief, Kepple also says the company is a gainer in case of demotion during the latter part of a pensioner's active service with the company, as in such case the company's donation to the fund would be materially diminished. This matter is very complex. See treaties on the subject.

Kepple says the younger strikers who have been taken back into service are taken into the relief, but the older men are not.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 22, 1913.

Thomas Jones, Pitcairn, Pa., to-day stated as follows:

That he was, just prior to March 10, 1911, employed as foreman of a crew at P. R. R. roundhouse, Pitcairn, Pa., and that on March 10, 1911, H. Cosgrove, foreman P. R. R. roundhouse, told him (Jones) that his services were no longer needed; that he had been in the employ of the P. R. R. for about 13 years prior to that date; that, although Cosgrove did not say so, he was discharged because of his affiliation with his union; that hundreds of P. R. R. employees at Pitcairn were treated in like manner and for same reason during February, March, and April, in 1911. That as soon as the company became aware the men were organizing themselves the company began to lay off (discharge) men, and kept this up until a committee representing the different unions the men belonged to was sent to visit Mr. S. C. Long, Philadelphia, Pa. The committee, after exhausting every reasonable means and after being advised that a lockout would be inaugurated against the men, taking effect at 10 a. m. May 1, 1911, told Mr. Long that unless all men who had been discharged (laid off) be put back to work within 48 hours a strike would be called, to take effect at 8 o'clock a. m. May 1, 1911.

That the committee received no response to this ultimatum, either in way of a reply or compliance with their request; therefore the strike was called as per information given Mr. Long.

That there was no demand made upon the company for increased wages, etc.; that as above stated the whole trouble was caused by the company discharging men because of their union affiliations; that he (Jones) was at the time of his dismissal by Cosgrove recording secretary of local lodge Brotherhood Railway Carmen; that he has never been reinstated with the company.

That when he drew his balance due from the company he suggested that his dues in voluntary relief be deducted as usual. Man in charge refused, stating that Jones was out of the service, therefore out of the relief. Jones called his attention that he had paid in much money to the relief, but this had no effect.

That some little time after his discharge the company began sending "bulls" to his home calling for his pass. They were so persistent that Mrs. Jones was much annoyed; that he finally sent his pass to Cosgrove, but close after he had done so a "bull" came to where the men were holding a meeting in rear of a justice's office and demanded Jones's pass, and stated he was instructed to take it by force unless he could otherwise obtain it. Jones told him to attempt such a thing, but it was not done.

About the last men laid off were a bunch of 30, according to Mr. and Mrs. Jones, who gave this interview in each other's presence. Among the 30 was Frank Freeman, John Ballinger, and others, whose whereabouts they are not aware of. They say all these men were told plainly the act was due to their union affiliations. That the P. R. R. Co. placed a much younger man in the service into his (Jones) position after his dismissal.

That he saw the clubs that were manufactured by the P. R. R. Co. at its cabinet shop, Pitcairn; they were about 2 inches through, about 2 feet long. Were made before his discharge, because he could not have seen them otherwise; that he saw them where stored, in bins in lumber storerooms, open during day but locked at night; that there must have been 250 or more. One day he remarked about them to an employee named Harter.

That at time of strike Mr. J. F. Coursan held the position of president of the borough council; that on one day the mayor or burgess, Mr. M. D. Cameron, a physician by profession, being absent, Coursan thereby became temporary burgess or mayor for that day; that on that day about 20 of the P. R. R. "bulls" marched up the streets of the borough of Pitcairn, Pa., and that this was the only day the "bulls" did this; that it was felt that it was for the purpose of exciting the citizens and thus bring about trouble. None occurred, however, but the next day about 150 or 200 of the bulls lined up just on the edge of the company right of way in a threatening manner, but were met by as many or a greater number of citizens who lined up on the other side of the street. The bulls did not encroach off P. R. R. right of way. That these bulls were toughs picked up by the company wherever they could find such men.

That in 1909, when the trainmen threatened to strike on the P. R. R., an official came to him (Jones) and said, "If we need you, are you going to be a good fellow? May want you to either act as a brakeman or as a policeman." Jones told them he would do neither.

Jones says Kepple appeared O. K. to him; says no better union man than Ireland: says wrote you; says Gallagher called on him and he told Gallagher the whole story; that Gallagher knew it of his own accord. He seems to think Gallagher is O. K. Got better job now than with P. R. R.; is night foreman switching crew at Westinghouse's. Lives in rear, corner Second Street and Boardwalk, up the hill. Milliner store in front.

Says Jacob Greenwaet worked right along during strike.

I have Jones's voluntary relief book. If you haven't one, will send it to you.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 25, 1913.

Jacob T. Born, Wilmerding, Pa., to-day, among other things, said:

That while we can not swear that he and others were discharged by the P. R. R. in 1911 because of their union affiliations, there is no doubt about that as being the fact.

That the committee of which he was a member made no demands upon the P. R. R. except that the discharged men, or, as the company put it, the men laid off, be reinstated and put back to work.

That the whole contention between the men and the company was the right of the men to affiliate with their different labor brotherhoods.

That while no particular man was put into his (Born's) position immediately after his discharge, the work upon which he had been engaged was allotted to different men yet in the shop; this work was on the machinery employed in the different shops and came under the head of maintenance, over which Mr. Coursan had jurisdiction.

That he believes that no machinists were hired by the company to fill the place of the men that were discharged or "laid off," but immediately the strike was declared carloads of men were brought to Pitcairn by the company; in fact, a greater number than had been discharged by the company.

That men still employed in the shops before the strike was called told him (Born) that the machinery was "run down" and was in very bad condition on account of lack of men to do the necessary work.

That one day in May, 1911, but he has no record and can not call to mind the date, he was notified by telephone from the committee headquarters, Pitcairn, Pa., that a lot of company bulls were marching in the streets of Pitcairn.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 25, 1913.

Rev. Father R. J. Maloney, Pitcairn, Pa., to-day, among other things, stated as follows:

That he sympathized with the men on strike at Pitcairn P. R. R. shops in 1911; that as near as he can judge from the proceedings at that time the men desired to bring about better conditions for themselves in the P. R. R. shops and began to affiliate themselves with their labor unions.

That when the P. R. R. found the men were organizing, the officials of the company began to discharge or lay off those who had joined their unions; that this is absolutely true—that the P. R. R. discharged its employees on this account; told them so plainly when they were discharged; in many instances the men were called before the officials and asked to leave their unions; upon refusal the men were then and there dismissed from the service; Rev. Maloney is very emphatic about this.

That while it is true the P. R. R. pays fair wages, yet the employees are so bound down by the company it amounts to near serfdom; that they are not entirely "free American citizens"—words to that effect; that the men are afraid.

That there was absolutely no rioting nor material disturbance in the borough during the strike; that men did congregate and endeavor to induce other men from working; hissed sometimes when not successful, but used no force at any time; that the strikers conducted themselves splendidly; that he said so then publicly, and told the truth.

That he heard about the company detectives marching in the streets, and, while it was a bad thing to do, because of the natural feeling and heated condition of the men's minds, there was no trouble that he heard of.

That he understands before the shopmen struck they were assured of assistance from the road men, but after the strike came road men would not join them as sympathetic strikers, account their contracts with the company.

That old and young men were discharged—laid off.

Father says it is strongly thought there were union men in pay of the company during the strike to disrupt them.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 26, 1913.

Joseph Gelger, Trafford City, Pa., to-day stated, among other things, as follows:

That on March 1, 1911, himself, Mr. Born, and Mr. Kepple, as a committee, visited Mr. J. F. Coursan, P. R. R. shops, Pitcairn, Pa., for getting the older men whom the company had laid off reinstated. Coursan said he had no authority in the matter, thereby practically closing the interview. Geiger seems very uncertain as to just what was said at this interview with Mr. Coursan.

That next day, March 2, about 10 o'clock a. m., Mr. Cosgrove, his foreman, called him in and told him he was also laid off, and said it was on account of "the depression." At noon Geiger again went to Mr. Cosgrove and asked him why younger men were not laid off instead of the old ones. He received no satisfaction from Cosgrove, who reiterated his previous statement that it was on account of the "depression." Geiger states he was unable to notice any depression other than that which the company made by laying off its men.

That in January, 1912, he visited Mr. O'Donnell, P. R. R. general superintendent, at Pittsburgh, and asked why he could not be put back at work. Mr. O'Donnell told him he could not work for the P. R. R., offering no further information or satisfaction, and has not heard anything from the company since then.

That the first men laid off began with Mr. Morgan, a blacksmith; then Mr. Matson, a machinist, followed by other old employees. Occasionally one of the young men were also laid off, but as a rule the older men were selected first. This began in early February, if he remembers correctly, and continued until hundreds of men had been let out of the shops at Pitcairn. That practically all these men were union men. That the company seemed at first to pick out "gang bosses," he himself being a gang boss.

That while he was not told so by company officials, men who were laid off told him (Geiger) the officials told them it was because they were union men.

That he does not know who took his position at the time he was let out.

That everything was quiet in Pitcairn during the strike, so far as he knows; that he heard of but two arrests during the trouble; two P. R. R. "bulls" were arrested, charged with being suspicious persons, searched, and found to have guns on their persons; they were taken before Justice of the Peace Dewalt, Pitcairn.

That he does not know why deputy sheriffs were brought into Pitcairn.

That he heard of a meeting just before the wholesale return to work of the strikers, between the burgess of Pitcairn, representatives of the brakemen, firemen, conductors, and engineers' brotherhoods, and a few citizens of the borough; that he diligently and for some time endeavored to find out the nature of the meeting, what was done, and by whom arranged, but was never able to do so. Geiger says he is a member of the B. R. T.

That about the time of this meeting or a little after it (he's not clear about time) the ministers of the different churches were asked to intercede with the company officials; they did so; but all the company would offer was to put the strikers back as new men, and after investigation determine what would be done about the cases of the men who had been laid off. Father Ward of Wilmerding represented the Catholic Church on this occasion, Geiger says.

That during the first time he worked for the company he belonged to the voluntary relief, but the second time, beginning in 1901, when he applied and was accepted by the P. R. R. for service, he was told to go to the relief doctor for examination; he did so, but told the doctor he was suffering from a hard cold, and was told to return when he had recovered from the cold. As he did not wish to join the relief he never returned for the examination, although he remained in service until 1911, 10 years, and was not approached by company officials on the subject. Geiger says he is 41 years of age now.

That so far as he can remember there was no ultimatum given Mr. Long at Philadelphia by his committee, of which he was chairman, that they could not get any satisfaction from Long, and after returning to their hotel decided to write him for another interview, which was not granted, and they returned home and put the matter up to the men for a vote, as he remembers it.

That the P. R. R. at Pitcairn shops manufactured clubs or maces in 1909, when it was anticipated the trainmen were going on a strike; that the clubs were stored in the storerooms at Pitcairn; that there are men now working there who made the weapons and assisted in storing them; that he does not know about clubs for shopmen in 1911, jokingly adding that he guessed the company did not consider it worth while to bother about clubs for them.

That Mr. Matson, of Roanoke, Va., was sick for several weeks after being laid off by the P. R. R. in 1911, and presented a claim for his voluntary relief sick benefit, but thinks he never received any satisfaction.

Gelger stated that some of the discharged men were in a position to talk, but that he was getting at an age where he must be careful, at present earning 20 cents an hour.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., March 26, 1914.

This is to certify that I, Robert D. McChristie, was sent from New York, understanding that there was no trouble on the Monongahela division of the P. R. R. When I arrived there I was sent out as flagman without having passed any examination of any kind and was sent from Shire Oaks to Conway with a 42-car train as flagman. The head brakeman quit at Pittsburgh; the middleman never railroaded in his life before, therefore knew nothing about railroading; the conductor did not know the road from Pittsburgh to Conway. The middleman was asleep from Avalon to Conway; the conductor was asleep from Ambridge and did not awake till I was in the yard at Conway and the yardmaster took charge of our train in the yard. Then I woke the conductor and told him that we were in Conway yards. There was no switch report made out, and I had to make out the wheel report. Coming back we had 39 empties and had still the same middleman, the conductor, and myself to run the train; run with three men from Pittsburgh to Conway and return to Shire Oaks. When arriving in Shire Oaks I did not consider I had no protection and did not close main line entering the yard. Joe Sollesby was conductor, James Smith was engineer.

Yours, truly,

R. D. McCHRISTIE.

H. C. Sellers, 215 Vine Street, Elmira, N. Y., was sent here with his wife with the information that there was no trouble here. After situation was explained he refused to go to work and asked for transportation for himself and wife home, which was refused. He applied for transportation at police headquarters and was told to leave town best way he could.

F. C. Wills, New York City, occupation baker, had not done any railroad work for eight years; was arrested at West Elizabeth for blocking crossing. He did not have a watch, did not know engine number, nor how many cars in train; did not know where he was or what division he was working on. March 27, 1914.

The following men were furnished $1 watches (conductors and flagman): R. C. Smith, J. A. McNeil, G. S. Young, and C. W. Newingham.

ALTOONA, PA., April 1, 1914.

To whom it may concern:

On Tuesday, March 24, 1914, the foremen of the Cresson division was called into the supervisor's office by telegram and told they should report and come in on train No. 709.

This was done by the foremen, and they was ordered to withdraw their membership in the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees or resign their positions with the company, and gave them and all other employees belonging to the brotherhood 24 hours, or until 3 p. m. March 25, 1914, to do so or leave the service of the company.

The foremen and laborers was given a form of a written statement, to be copied in their own hand, the same a resignation or withdrawal of membership in the brotherhood.

These resignations had to be written by the men, and they was ordered by the supervisor to send same to his office.

I was asked to withdraw my membership from the brotherhood by my foreman, F. A. Bertram, and I told him I would not do so, and the next day I was told I was relieved from the service of the company on account of reduction in force.

The foreman stated to the men that the supervisor, W. B. Groff, had told him that those who did not withdraw from the brotherhood would have to leave the service of the company.

RAYMOND M. ECKENROD.

DILLTOWN, March 28, 1914.

Mr. W. H. PIERCE: This is to certify that I have withdrawn from the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Employees. The first letter that I wrote is annulled. The company will send you my notice written with lead pencil—my own handwriting. Count me out of the order at once.

L. D. McNUTT, *Dilltown, Pa.*PITTSBURGH, PA., January 28, 1913.

J. J. Lovitt, insurance agent, Irvin, Pa., to-day stated as follows, and declares he is willing at any time and ready to make oath to these statements:

That he joined the Sheet-Metal Workers' Union about the 25th or last days of January, 1911; that he was made a committeeman to represent his craft in the P. R. R. shops, Pitcairn, Pa., on February 23, that year.

That a day or so after that Messrs. Kepple, Freeman, and Born, others of the committee, had a meeting with Mr. J. F. Coursan, P. R. R. shops at Pitcairn, relative to the laying off or discharging men at the shops; that during this meeting with Mr. Coursan the names of all the other committeemen were given to Mr. Coursan.

That on February 26, 1911, just before the noon hour, my foreman, S. A. Ebberts, sent his clerk out to me and asked for my annual pass, making no explanation. I asked what he wanted it for. The clerk said, "Go and see for yourself." I went in and asked Mr. Ebberts. He said, "Want to give it to another man." I said, "The pass is in my name; others can not use it." He said, "I want it." I walked out of the office. Fifteen minutes later the clerk, while I was busy at my bench, came and handed me an envelope. I asked him what it was. He said he did not know. I refused take it, believing it contained my discharge. I went into the office and demanded of Mr. Ebberts why he was giving me my time. Ebberts said, "On account of a slack time." As I was the next oldest man in the shop, having been there 10 years, I said, "There are 15 or 20 men here who were hired long after I began. There is one here, Jacob Smith, who was hired but two or three days ago." After some heated argument he gave me my time. I kept on talking about the reason of my discharge. Ebberts got mad. Hitting the desk, he said, "Well, if you have to know, it is for joining the union." I told him that was just what I wanted to know. Present at this time was William Loughrey, Mr. Ebberts's clerk, who heard all of the conversation.

The day following my discharge Mr. Ebberts sent George Saxaur, assistant foreman, to my house, demanding my pass. I refused to give it up. On the next day a party came to my home in Irvin, Pa., and demanded my pass. I asked him who he was. He said, "I am a P. R. R. officer," throwing back his coat, which act exhibited a large blue-steel gun strapped to him. He said he would either take the pass back to Pittsburgh with him or take me there; that those were his instructions by his chief officer. I told him to go ahead and take me; that I would go with him and give the pass to the man who had given it to me. I walked to the P. R. R. station with him. All the way and after arriving at the station this man tried to coax and also to scare me into giving him the pass. I refused to give it to him, and he boarded the train without either me or the pass. A few days later I took the pass to Mr. Ebberts, Pitcairn. He asked me why I had not given it to either of the two men who had come for it. I told him I did not consider those men had any right with the pass. He said, "Well, this will go hard with you if you ever want to work for the company again."

That Levi Cohen, a tinner, employed at Pitcairn shops, was told by S. A. Ebberts, P. R. R., as follows:

That he would give him good work if he remained out of the union and would endeavor to keep other Jews out; that if he joined the union (meaning the Jews) "We will send all of our work to Altoona and discharge you." Cohen told Ebberts the Altoona men belonged to the union. Ebberts disputed this, and said, "You had better get another job." The following day Cohen was discharged. Lovitt says he saw this conversation between Cohen and Ebberts, and that Cohen came direct to him and repeated the conversation, as he (Lovitt) was a leader and the men came to him with their troubles.

Cohen is now in Chicago, Ill., and a member of the Sheet-Metal Workers' local there.

That Charles Reese, sheet-metal worker, Pitcairn, Pa. P. R. R. shops said to him (Lovitt) as follows:

That Mr. Ebberts came to him (Reese) and asked if he belonged to his union (this was in Ebberts's office). Reese told him, "Yes." Ebberts said nothing to this, but that evening Ebberts called Reese to his office and said to him: "You will either have to keep away from those Jews, putting union ideas into their heads, or get another job. You have been attending these meetings, getting this stuff into your head and spreading it among the Jews. If you don't quit all this you can hunt another job." After some argument Ebberts discharged Reese on the spot. Lovitt says Reese is now with the Westinghouse people at Wilmerding, Pa.

That at the Pitcairn shops the Jews were placed on one side in a colony by themselves; other men on the other side. A day or two after the discharge of Reese, Ebberts came in and found some of the other men talking with the Jews and told them if they did so again he would discharge them. Among these men were Phillip Lang, Pitcairn, and James McCreight, whereabouts unknown to Lovitt.

That the committee, himself (Lovitt) included, were to start for Philadelphia on Monday morning to meet Mr. S. C. Long. The Saturday evening before this intended trip, while he (Lovitt) was eating his supper, a stranger came to his home and stated he desired to talk with him. Lovitt took the man into another room. The man asked if they were alone. Lovitt told him they were. The man went to a door of an adjoining room, looked in, then closed the door, came back, and said, after talking about the labor troubles, that he wanted to make some arrangements with Lovitt; that he wanted Lovitt to go to headquarters at the Monongahela House and get the papers and the letters the committee were going to take with them to Philadelphia the next Monday. He said the P. R. R. would take good care of Lovitt; give him a good position in secret-service department, with good salary and pass. Offered a sum of money on the spot and did give me $10. I was to bring the papers to the Union Depot at 8 o'clock, meeting the man there on Sunday evening, next night. I promised to do all this. He told me how to work it; said I should give Flynn, Ireland, and Paquin the best of whisky to drink, so I would not have any trouble in getting the papers; that it meant a life job for me with the company. I promised faithfully, but I went to Pittsburgh and told President Ryan, Ireland, and Flynn what had taken place. It was fixed for me to carry this out by getting together a bundle of old letters and papers. I did this, and waited at point he had instructed me to wait, entrance to smoking room. While standing there he passed and said, "You have a gang with you." I came out from Pittsburgh on the last train; he came also; he met me near my home and said, "You have double-crossed me"; that I had Matson and McGinnis with me at the station in Pittsburgh. He tried again to get me to do the job. I jollied him and told him we would leave Pittsburgh at 7.30 a. m. Monday, but we left on train No. 12. I have never seen this man since. My sister heard all of the conversation on the Saturday evening above mentioned. She listened at the door, on account she was afraid I would be harmed, due to the labor troubles.

That he (Lovitt) was a gang boss when discharged by the P. R. R. and states there was to his personal knowledge at least three new men employed (hired) in his shop after his discharge and before the strike was called.

That Charles Reese told him (Lovitt) during the strike that he (Reese) saw "piles" of clubs or maces in P. R. R. storerooms, Pitcairn, Pa.

That he (Lovitt) was injured on Thanksgiving day, 1909, by falling 35 feet while working for the P. R. R., the fall severely injuring his spine and bladder; that the P. R. R. doctor at Irvin, Pa. (Dr. Sowash), was called in that evening, and the next day he called found I could not urinate. He relieved me with an instrument. The next day he did not call. My sister went for him, but he could not be seen. The next day, Sunday, I was suffering terribly, not having urinated since the doctor had operated. My sister-in-law went for him, but was told that he was not at home. I was almost wild with suffering. Monday Miss Marie Balsimo went for the doctor, whose wife told her he was not at home. It was afterwards found he was in. I then sent for Dr. Bowman, who said my case had been badly neglected. He drew my urine at once and took my case, when I said I would discharge Sowash, which I did. After this Sowash threatened Bowman with personal violence on the street because he had taken my case. I had much correspondence with P. R. R. officials over the bill of Bowman, but they finally paid it; that he has never fully recovered from the injury; that he was unable to work for one year after the injury and drew $1 per day from the voluntary relief, and this was all he had to keep himself, mother, and sister on. He put the case to the company, but could get no further relief from them. Lovitt has much more of this matter if it is wanted.

That he does not remember the exact date, but has at home a letter from Samuel Gompers that will fix the date. A stranger approached him in Irvin, Pa., after the strike of 1911, stating his name was Wilson, from the Illinois Central Railroad; that Lovitt had received a tough deal by the men during and after strike at Pitcairn, and that it was on account that he (Lovitt) was on the wrong side; that he (Wilson) had authority to give him a good job with regular monthly pay to work on the quiet among the men on the Illinois Central, and so on and so forth, asking (Lovitt) to meet him at Hotel Henry, Pittsburgh, Pa., next day to sign contract. Being encouraged, he handed Lovitt $10. Lovitt did not go, but received a telegram hurrying him. Still he did not go nor reply. Then a special-delivery letter came asking him to come and sign contract, as previously arranged. Lovitt did not go, but sent both telegram and letter to Samuel Gompers, together with a letter explaining the matter. The letter to Mr. Gompers was answered, congratulating him on his stand in the matter, but neither letter or telegram were returned to him.

That at Philadelphia the committee told Mr. Long that if the discharged men were not put back to work they would not be responsible for what would follow, but says strike was not mentioned; that we would return to Pitcairn and put the matter up to the men; Long would give us no satisfaction, and we returned and put it up to a vote. Men voted to strike after listening to a speech by A. E. Ireland; that Ireland was in charge; that the shops outside of Pitcairn wanted to go out at same time Pitcairn men did, but Ireland said better not—to wait till they were asked to come out, but they did not do so and came out without being asked or ordered out.

Then one evening at a meeting of strikers, and the hall was packed, a telephone came for the committee to hurry to Pittsburgh—that they were wanted at once. Shortly after this John McGinnis came in and quietly said to the committeemen that the representatives of the other four organizations wanted to see them at the Colonial Annex Hotel, Pittsburgh, at once. They immediately left the hall—a very bad procedure they afterwards found—and he feels there was something wrong about the call. Jacob Born was to speak that night, it being a very critical time during the strike. That the committee leaving left the meeting without a head, and things were said and done that did the cause no good, some of the men remarking afterwards it was the worst thing that could have happened. Upon getting to Pittsburgh they were told the people there desired to meet them to discuss settlement of the strike. They refused till after the matter had been put to the men at Pitcairn. This was done, and the next day they met the people at the Colonial Annex; that at this meeting Fitzpatrick of the trainmen stated, among other things, that their strike was an illegal one; that the best thing we could do was to settle it as soon as possible; that Paquin and Fitzpatrick quarreled about the character of the strike, but there were other A. F. L. there who agreed with Fitzpatrick about the legality of the strike. That the following looked bad to him after a meeting with Mr. O'Donnell, of the P. R. R., was arranged, and they had met O'Donnell; almost the first words he said to the committee were, "Do you people know this is an illegal strike? You have heard it so stated in some of your meetings, have you not? I understand it has been so stated."

That he heard of the meeting between the burgess of Pitcairn, some of the citizens of that borough, and the men of the four transportation organizations; had endeavored to find out about it, but has never been able to do so.

That there was no rioting nor trouble at Pitcairn that would necessitate the bringing in of outside help; that he heard at different times of the acts of the P. R. R. bulls which were thought by himself and others to be an endeavor to incite trouble, but the people were wise and nothing came from it. He also heard of the marching in the streets of the bulls, but knew nothing personally about it.

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 3, 1913.

James O. Baldridge, 105 Vannear Avenue, Greensburg, Pa., stated at his home to-night as follows:

That H. F. Altman, his shop foreman, P. R. R., Youngwood, Pa., on February 1, 1911, said to him that he was indefinitely suspended, but gave no reason whatever for that action. At this time Baldrige says he had been in the employ of the P. R. R. for 10 years. I was sure my suspension was on account of my affiliation with my brotherhood and my position as member of our local board of adjustment, and so said to my wife that day on my return home, remarking that "I had my head chopped off on account mix up with the A. F. L." I kept after Altman for work after the men went back to work until he gave me work the 1st of August, 1911. I was asked to make no promises for the future, and did not do so. I have again joined the P. R. R. voluntary relief, of which I was a member prior to the time I was indefinitely suspended. I can not see where the company would profit by its men going out of the voluntary relief at any time. I do not know whether there is a break in my service record or not. Suppose I could find out if I tried to do so. Of course, the P. R. R. lets old men out to make room for younger men. That when he joined the Brotherhood of Carmen he did not know it was affiliated with the A. F. L. until Ireland and Flynn showed up at a meeting; then he knew he was in for it. That no one has ever told him that they were discharged because they joined the union, but all the men felt that that was the only reason why they were let out by the company.

That before the strike the shopmen were told by the trainmen and engineers, all four brotherhoods, they would get their support, but that when the strike went into effect they would not assist the shopmen, and on that account all are very sore on that class of men.

That Ireland and Flynn told the strikers they would receive benefits from the A. F. L. while on strike, but they have never received a cent, and the men are all sore on that account, and it would be impossible to organize those men now.

That it was common report among the men that Ireland sold out to the P. R. R. and started a gent's furnishing store on Sixth Avenue, Pittsburgh, with the money; that about nine months ago he was given a card advertising such place; the card was handed him by J. J. Lovitt, Irvin, Pa.

Asked what, in his opinion, brought on the strike in 1911, he answered, "That was a hard question to answer." He would not say what the cause was or what his opinion of it was. He says he is making now the same as he did before the strike, about $80 per month; that he gets a trip pass when he asks for it, the same as before the strike.

Mrs. Baldrige, hearing the conversation in another room, came in and said, "You had better come and eat your supper and drop this talk. If there is to be any more 'union business' you can take the house. I supported this family all summer in 1911, and that will do me." Words to that effect. She is very bitter, and said the men were talked into the matter, the organizers got the money, and the men lost their jobs; that the men got good wages, were making a living, and that was all she wanted, and again told him to go to supper and then to church. After she left Baldrige admitted he did not like to talk much about the matter on her account.

Baldrige is afraid of both the P. R. R. and Mrs. Baldrige, and, by heck, I hardly blame him.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., February 8, 1913.

W. E. Smith, machinist, Franklin, Cambria County, Pa., among other things at his home, February 7, 1913, stated as follows:

That on March 14, 1911, Robert Kiser, Smith's foreman at P. R. R. shops, said to him and another machinist, Mr. Hill, "you are laid off," giving no reason for the action (it will be noticed this was six days after the meeting on March 8 and four days after the mayor of Johnstown had dismissed Smith from charges made by Jones); that he, Smith, at that time was vice pres't Local Lodge 328, International Association of Machinists; that many men were laid off along about that time in like manner, everyone of whom were affiliated with their unions.

That after the strike was over he, Smith, applied for his job back, and was put to work by the P. R. R. and is still with them; that conditions are much better in their shop now than before the strike; that the men are given trip passes by the company when asked for; that he is no longer a member of his union, intimating the reason. (P. R. R. won't allow it.)

10310 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

DALMATIA, PA., March 9, 1914.

To whom it may concern:

This hereby certifies that John G. Radle, who has been in my employ for about four years is strictly honest, sober, and is an industrious man, but has been honestly furloughed on account of reduction of men on the railroad.

The above recommendation was given to John G. Radle (member of brotherhood) who is next to the oldest man in the gang, when he was laid off on account of a reduction of men on the railroad. The original copy of this is in the hands of John G. Radle, of Pillow, Pa.

MARCH 25, 1914.

STATEMENT OF BOCCO DIFALCCI.

I worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for seven years as a boiler maker, when they called me in the office and wanted me to go into the brotherhood office at the brotherhood meetings and secure the names of all the men who joined the brotherhood and turn them over to the office. I said that "I refuse to do it." Six days after that they laid me off on furlough, and have not been returned to work.

ALTOONA, PA., March 26, 1914.

STATEMENT OF GIUSEPPI SPENALO.

I, Giuseppe Spenalo, was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. as a night watchman. When I went to work on the evening of the 11th of March the foreman informed me that the supervisor had telephoned to him to discharge me. I asked the foreman why I was discharged, and he asked the supervisor, and the supervisor told the foreman that he could not tell him. The foreman then asked me if I belonged to the union, and I denied that I belonged.

(He does belong to the union, Altoona, Pa.)

STATEMENT OF MATTEO DANELLI.

I, Matteo Danelli, was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad as a night track walker; worked from 6 p. m. till 6 a. m. On the 10th of March I went to work and found that another man was working in my place, and I went to see the foreman in regards to this matter, and he told me that he had a letter from the supervisor to discharge me because I belonged to the union.

STATEMENT MADE BY A GANG LEADER.

I have been employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. in Altoona, Pa., as a gang leader for the past two years. On the 27th day of March, 1914, at about 5 o'clock, the foreman under whom I work informed me that he had received a telephone message to discharge me, as I was an undesirable employee to the company. I was a gang leader, having about 75 men under me, the majority of whom are younger men in the employ of the company than myself, but who were still allowed to continue working. I did not belong to the relief.

MARCH 27, 1914.

STATEMENT OF EDWARD CORONO, SALVATORE TAPALUCCI, GIOACCHINO SANGIORGI, AMEDEO GONNELLA, AND GIUSEPPI TAPALUCCI.

We, the undersigned, worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. as laborers on the work train up till the 18th day of March, 1914, when our foreman informed us that he received orders to lay us five men off. We asked the foreman the reason, and he said he did not know. We then went to the supervisor, and he said he did not know any reason. We then went back to see the supervisor, and he asked us if we belonged to the union, and we said that we did not. The next day we went back to see him, and he told us that he might be able to do something for us if we would drop out of this brotherhood.

This supervisor's name is W. E. Groff, Cresson, Pa.

GIOACCHINO SANGIORGI (14 years' service).

To whom it may concern:

That I, John de Gerolomo, this 28th day of March, 1914, attach my signature in the presence of these witnesses.

I worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for about 10 years, up to the 27th of November, when I was discharged by Mr. J. A. Beamer, master mechanic of the Tyrone division. This was the next morning after I attended a union meeting held in the Red Men's Hall in Tyrone, and to my belief I was discharged for attending this meeting. My position was given to a member of the Tyrone shop band, who was a younger man in the employ of the company than myself. I then started in the grocery business at 833 Twenty-first Street, Tyrone, Pa., and I also kept boarders. Mr. Beamer told several Italians who worked under him that if they did not quit dealing at my store they would get into trouble. He also told one of my boarders that he would have to find a new boarding house or he would give him his time. I can furnish the names of these men if necessary.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 3.

HOTEL SENATE, Altoona, Pa., July 5, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am sending you a clipping of Monday's paper containing a report of my action against five of the police. I expect they will have a hearing to-day. Luther, the constable who blackjacked me, they haven't got. Now, if we can bind these thugs over to keep the peace and not follow us, the task of organizing won't be so hard. Schmitt, of the boiler makers, and Borke, the organizer, are on the job, and we all expect, if we get favorable action from the court in relation to these thugs, to establish good, solid locals here. The men at Jersey City are building for a Polish organizer, as four-fifths of the men at that point are Polacks. I expect to be there July 11. I would like if Borke, the Polish organizer, could go over there for several days, as I know from experience how easily he can organize the Polacks, Slavs, and Hungarians. There are a couple of Polish organizers in New York City, but they are not railroad men, while Borke is, and a first-class machinist; again, he is a Christian and belongs to most all the Polish religious and fraternal societies. He is a powerful man among these foreigners and I know that he could do more in a week in Jersey City, where he is also known, than several of us American organizers could do in months.

With best wishes, I am, yours, fraternally,

JOHN J. GALLAGHER, Hotel Senate.

(Newspaper clipping, without date, inclosed, entitled "Organizer's new move—Gallagher makes information against railroad and county policemen before Alderman Casey.")

HOTEL SENATE, Altoona, Pa., July 19, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON,

Secretary American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The situation here is this: We are dogged by "bulls" day and night. We have only one hall that we can meet in—Trainmen's Hall. When a meeting is called the place is surrounded by foremen and "bulls." For my last two meetings I sent out over 600 notices and circular letters, and I saw at least 100 men go by the hall and would not come in. There is more moral cowardice here than I have ever seen before. We have been responsible for the nonenforcement of the new piecework schedule, which meant an average reduction of 40 per cent; and, further, for the first time in years there has been no lay off, always from 2,000 to 3,000 being laid off. We have decided that as only the A. F. of L. and boiler-makers' organization have men on the job, other crafts indifferent (except the carmen), that the best thing to do is to leave this place for about 60 days and give the P. R. R. a chance to enforce the new schedule and lay off about one-third of the men, and then drop back in here, and it may be some of the scales on their eyes may have fallen off and we may be able to do some business with them. We have dropped the injunction as proposed by the attorneys. I expect to leave here not later than next Monday. I am unable at this time to say just where I will be ordered. I think some work can be done in the east end of this system. With best wishes and regards, regards.

Yours, fraternally,

J. F. SCHMITT.

CONDITIONS OF LABOR ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. 10313

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 30, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I have been in Freedom on the 29th of July and held a meeting there, and I would like to put the secretary under bond; his name is Jouan Gowie, and I would like you to send him a blank for bond, so as I can get that local complete.

I have about 80 laborers to be organized, but I can't organize them just now, because I wouldn't like to see them lose their work, because Altoona is full of railroad detectives, and watching our every step. I and Brother Smith have been talking about this, and we agreed to leave Altoona for about three or four weeks, until the R. R. company takes in some of the detectives from there, because it is very hard to organize a local without them knowing it and without them finding out the names of workmen that are organized; in many cases I was forced to organize in private homes on account of the detectives. I expect to be in Altoona in about three or four weeks, and then I will do my best to organize them. I am going to try to organize some of the concerns in and around Pittsburgh. I will try it in McKeesport steel mills and the horseshoe makers in Shoenberg mills, of Pittsburgh, and hope that I will meet with success.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM BORK.

LOGAN HOUSE,
Altoona, Pa., January 5, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
1378 Montclair Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: For your information, yesterday, the 4th, I got into touch with P. R. R. Detective David R. Jones, Howard Street, Altoona, Pa., who has been in same service nine years. We had a special seance, lasting nearly two hours; when it ended he was lipping in good shape.

He exhibited a bank book in favor of P. R. R.; also a slip from the bank showing that he had same date deposited $2,080 for P. R. R.; this exhibition was due to my doubting his word when he had told me his name. He said the instructions were to report my movements, no matter where they were made, and asked me as a personal favor to come clean with them, so it would be easy, as he wanted to treat me right, etc.; then upbraided me for sneaking Huff out of their way after I had told them earlier in the day there was nothing doing all day, as it was Saturday, and added, it will get me in bad with the company if you lose us. I laughed at him and told him Huff had simply sneaked in order to see some "skirt." Finally he was convinced, and I told him he was a jay if he reported to the company; that they had lost out; but to just report nothing doing but loafing around hotel and town; that I was playing fair. Nevertheless I had lost four of them and saw Henderson, as reported in another letter to your office. All this to give you a line on the situation here.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: For your information and record, if it is needed, the following to you:

To-night P. R. R. policeman "Red," after leaving him on Eleventh Avenue, where he had followed me into a picture show, followed me through Eleventh Alley, which is dark, for one block; thence down a dark passageway out onto Eleventh Avenue. We came out facing the P. R. R. gen. offices, in rear of the Logan House, on Eleventh Avenue. I took this trip to test out how far these people had instructions to go in my case. I said to him, after waiting for him to catch up, "Red, this looks to me like pretty bad business; you have made a record; seems as though you have orders to go the limit with me." He said, "That's it; the limit."

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Following as a matter of record, if it should be needed:

Sunday evening, January 5, 1913, about 8 o'clock, I took Brother V. H. Huff with me and strolled out and up Eleventh Avenue here. The weather was extremely bitter; ice over everything. Arriving near Fifteenth Street, I saw an opportunity to dash into a street car, leaving Huff and a P. R. R. policeman, who was near us, in the rear. The conductor closed the door immediately behind me and proceeded on his trip; neither Huff or the P. R. R. man knew of my intention.

I proceeded and, by circuitous routes, held the interview already reported. The policeman then, I am told by himself, stuck so close to Huff that he became angry and, it is said, had words about the matter. I do not know, however, all that was said, as Huff made no report to me of the affair; that policeman told me of the matter to-night.

Yesterday, before Huff left for Lewistown, he held a lengthy interview with another P. R. R. policeman—Heller. Huff reported to me, on my questioning, that Heller told him that the cause of the close watch being held over me was a result of my talk with Spangler; that Spangler told me nothing that he did not want me to know; that they had orders to follow wherever we went, even though it was to Pgh. or Philadelphia.

Huff was very anxious to get away without being followed, but I told him that made no difference, as he was going to do nothing but organize, etc.; bulls make him very nervous.

To-day there has been but one man around, unless they have relayed again; but to-night there are two on the job that I know of.

These P. R. R. men, so this one tells me, are also State men and have commissions from Harrisburg; are subject to the orders of the governor, should he need their services; they can arrest anywhere in the State of Pennsylvania. When transferring operations to another part of the State they simply have to "register" there, giving number of their commission, etc.

General Superintendent Creighton has all these men on his division in charge.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: To-night at 11 o'clock, when I took last report to post office, I went to stamp and general-delivery window. P. R. R. special agent, Russell Miller, called "Red" for short, crowded right up close. I backed away. He bought 30 cents' worth of cards. I said to him, "This is going too far; do that again and I will take it up with Washington; I have treated you right; if you want to be dirty we will see what's the redress"; words to that effect. This is the first time the attempt has been made.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Perhaps the following may be of use:

At 9.40 to-night I went to the post office for my mail, as the far West mail is usually distributed at that time; the clerk said they were late with it, and that it would be "up" at 10.15. I then went out onto Eleventh Street and up to Federal Alley, back of post office, walked through that alley to Ninth Street, "Red," Russell Miller, P. R. R. special agent, following me, about 50 foot behind. I turned down Ninth Street to Eleventh Avenue and entered the Colouade Hotel, formerly the Gilbert, where in the presence of Wm. Gallagher, night clerk at that hotel, and D. F. McNellis, day clerk at the Colonial Hotel, who happened in, Miller admitted he had followed me as above, and that the alley is absolutely dark, no lights in it; that so far as he knew I was a gentleman and law-abiding man; that he had no right to lay a hand on me; that he knew of no charges against me; that he was sorry that he had not met me under different circumstances; that he did not like to follow me there, and indicated his instructions compelled him to do so; that he would not have my position for any consideration, indicating this was on account of the constant watch kept on me, and in an apologetical tone said sometimes we are placed in positions we do not like, this in speaking of his trip after me.

I deliberately took the two men's names, as above, in Miller's presence and said to him, "Red, you have made another record to-night."

AS TO P. R. R. ESPIONAGE AND THE CHARACTERISTICS OF ITS SPECIAL OFFICERS.

READING, PA., March 13, 1913.

Ex-P. R. R. Police Officer W. A. Bowers, 1119 North Seventh Street, Harrisburg, Pa., stated on March 12, 1913, as follows:

That he served the P. R. R. for 23 years as special officer or policeman; that he was frozen out of the service in January, 1913; forced to resign because he failed to spy upon employees, men whom he had known for years and who were among the most reliable employed by the P. R. R.; he refused to report them for visiting hotels, etc.; that during his service with the P. R. R. he would never shadow or report an employee or other person who was not guilty or suspected of crime.

That graft is a big factor in the arresting of people on charge of trespassing on P. R. R. right of way or jumping on train.

That during the months of March, April, May, June, August, October, and November, 1912, there were 589 arrests made by Philadelphia division special officers, principally on account of trespass and jumping trains; that each arrest is sure to bring cost or a fine, the size of which depends upon the amount of money the victim has at time of arrest; that he urges me to send a friend on the P. R. R. right of way with $15 or $20 on his person and see what happens; that a good, solid fine and cost will follow, but if the victim has but a dollar or so he will be set free and the dollar taken from him.

That he knows of his own knowledge that Captain of Police Shaeffer, P. R. R., Altoona, Pa., at the present time, while in Harrisburg took to his home a keg of whisky that had been stolen from the P. R. R. and discovered by Bowers; that after the thief had been shot in the leg and arrested, Shaeffer took the whisky home and used it.

That he knows that Officers Shaeffer and Britton, the latter now in the employ of the Southern R. R. in South Carolina as special officer, sold seven sides of harness leather to a harness and saddle maker in Harrisburg, Pa., about one year after he (Bowers) had apprehended the thief and located the twelve sides of leather contained in the original lot. The party who bought the seven sides told Bowers of the transaction, and complained because Shaeffer and Britton beat him out of the eighth side. Bowers, being asked if the P. R. R. knew of the sale of leather and had gotten the money for same, laughed and said, "I should say not; they told me at headquarters the leather had been used in making belts and holsters." Bowers says the real owner of the leather was never found.

That in 1911 he was assigned to duty among the shopmen in Harrisburg; his instructions were to "get among the men, talk with them, see if they are organizing, see what the men have to say about organizing, and that sort of thing, and report, giving names; also see that organizers do not get on right of way." That other special officers had instructions to continuously follow organizers around the city and vicinity (Harrisburg), keeping them in sight all the time, and report their every movement; that his reports always showed "no information about machinists organizing." He exhibited copies of his reports February 25 to 28, 1911, inclusive, all of which read as above.

Bowers quotes numerous incidents where he claimed arrests were made by P. R. R. special officers simply to get the one dollar from so-called costs, but in 1908 this money was cut from the P. R. R. special officers, but that the aldermen get the same cost as before, and he intimates this "graft" now goes to higher-ups instead of to P. R. R. special officers.

10316 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Bowers cites instances of the brutal characteristics of P. R. R. special officers; one, that of Lieut. Towsley, of Harrisburg, Pa., in August, 1912. On this occasion a telephone message came to the office that a drunken man was in a coach in P. R. R. yards, and to take him away. Bowers and Towsley proceeded there and found the man, who was so drunk he could not stand; this irritated Towsley, who with his fists beat the man up in an inhuman way; the sight was sickening to Bowers, the man's face and clothing in front being completely besmeared with blood. Bowers being asked if the man resisted arrest said, "Great Scott, no; he was so drunk he could not stand." The man was locked up and next day paid his fine.

That former Captain of Police Britton, who was brought to Harrisburg from Pittsburgh, Pa., on account of the reputation he made at Harrisburg as a drinker, gambler, and chaser of married women, had to leave Harrisburg, but the P. R. R. secured him a job with the Southern R. R., and sent him there.

That Lieut. Barr, Tyrone, Pa., is of the same material as the others, and he has incidents to cite along these lines regarding the man.

That the superintendent's private clerk at Harrisburg has charge of the Philadelphia division P. R. R. police force, and that all these things and more are known to him.

T. E. ELLIS.

J. Franklin Miller, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at 2916 Huntington Avenue, Baltimore, Md.; that during the year 1912 he was general chairman of the telegraphers employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie; that on or about July 16, 1912, he convened a telegraphers general committee in Philadelphia, Pa., having previously rented for that purpose a house known as No. 3415 North Twenty-second Street, Tioga, Philadelphia, Pa., and that the said committee remained in session from July 16 to September 15, 1912; the said committee consisted of T. W. Truitt, of Middletown, Del.; O. T. Arendt, of Foxburg, Pa.; A. L. Rex, of Mapelton Depot, Pa.; T. E. Fidler, of Lutherville, Md.; that during all the time said committee was in session between the dates aforementioned its members were under constant surveillance by detectives employed by said Pennsylvania Railroad Co., there being from two to eight of them on watch at all times of the night and day.

Deponent further states that all persons who visited the committee aforesaid were followed by one or more of the said detectives, and that he was informed on reliable authority that each detective was furnished a considerable sum of money by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to defray traveling and other expenses that might be incurred in following such persons.

Deponent further states that from the appearance of the said detectives that he believes that all members of the aforesaid committee and many of the visitors to said committee were in danger of bodily harm while being followed by such suspicious characters.

JOHN T. FARDY, Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT BY G. E. NIGHTINGALE, G. S. & T. O. R. T. GENERAL COMMITTEE,
DIVISION No. 17, NEWFIELD, N. J.

On the evening of October 8, 1912, a man called at my home and introduced himself as Mr. Payne, representing the secret-service department of the General Managers' Association.

He stated that he had had me under observation for 10 years and he now had a position for me. I inquired what sort of a position. He replied that it would be along the lines suggested by the association, with the general object in view of eliminating the loss of time and money now expended by railroads in meeting and discussing grievances with the general committees of the various railroad organizations; that I would be expected to attend important meetings not only of my own organization (the O. R. T.), but such others as they might direct, and advise them promptly of any proposed legislation, either industrial or political, so that they might adjust the trouble in advance, and thus save the time of the committees and themselves.

I declined the offer, but he refused to consider my answer as final, and spoke at considerable length on the advantages to be derived, in effect: That I had served the O. R. T. ably for a long time without substantial reward, and now it was up to me to consult my own interest; that I owed it to my family to place myself out of the reach of the uncertainty and unsatisfactory conditions of an ordinary workingman's life; that I would be really helping my fellow workingmen without their knowledge; that there was no possibility of detection, as I would never be addressed or known by my employers by my proper name in any correspondence; that he could get plenty of men right in my own division if he chose, but that they did not have the ability which he recognized in me and which he wished to retain in their interest.

I then asked what salary they would pay for such services. He said that that would depend upon my success in the future; but at the start I would receive approximately as much as I now received from the railroad and the O. R. T. combined, and would, of course, continue in my present positions. He warned me that should I enter their employ that it would be impossible to "double-cross" them, as they always had one employee checked by another; also reminded me that the association was very powerful, and any railroad employee that they considered objectionable could easily be gotten rid of. I asked him if he was threatening me. He said not at all, that he merely meant to convey the idea that with them division officials were very small fry.

He said that the cause of the O. R. T. on the P. R. R. was hopeless, as it had been all "fixed"; that Gompers did not favor a strike and that Perham would not dare consider anything that Gompers did not approve.

I told him that he was wasting time, as I had no intention of trying to walk in two directions at the same time. He then proposed that I should come to Philadelphia the next evening and meet his superior, who, he felt sure, could convince me that it would be worth my while to accept his proposition. I told him that I would consider the matter. He then left, having spent two hours here.

When I told him that I would consider coming to Philadelphia, it occurred to me that I might be able to recognize his "superior" or gain some knowledge that might be useful; but, upon reflection, I decided that should I attend such a conference there might be a plan to compromise me in some way and that I would not take the hazard, so I wired him that I would not come up, and to consider the matter closed.

I received a letter the following day (attached), and on the evening of the 15th he again called and rehashed some of his former arguments, and finally, when he understood that he was making no impression, he warned me to say nothing to anyone that he had been here, as it could do no good and might result unpleasantly.

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Peoria, Ill., November 3, 1913.

Mr. FRANK PAQUIN,
First General Vice President Brotherhood Railway Carmen,
Kansas City, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Upon my return to this office I find your letter of October 30, and I am not surprised that you should be interested in the situation on the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. (east). In order that you may know all that I know of the matter I will recite the situation as follows:

1. For many years past the Pennsylvania Co., by a systematic employment of members of this brotherhood for "special duty service," have succeeded in discounting or discrediting much of the brotherhood's work. While these men will not confess that they are "spotters" there is no question in my mind but what they furnish information to the officials, and discourage our members doing that which the officials object to, as a part of the services they perform and for which they receive extra compensation. I mean by this that while these members of this organization are nominally "air-brake inspectors," "inspectors of switching yards," etc., they are expected to do "dirty work" on the side. The result of this policy has been that the brotherhoods have in past years been quite weak on the Pennsylvania lines east.

2. Notwithstanding the methods adopted by the railroad companies to weaken this brotherhood and others, as just stated, within the past few years the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen have acquired a degree of aggressiveness in wage matters that is surprising, not only to others, but to the officials of the Pennsylvania Co. While this new characteristic of employees of the Pennsylvania lines east has not been so pronounced with the engineers and conductors, so far as the B. R. T. and B. L. F. & E. are concerned, I believe I state the truth when I say our membership have developed a high degree of courage in protecting their own interests. During the year 1912 a temporary cooperation between members of the O. R. C., B. R. T., and B. L. F. & E. (which cooperation the members of the B. L. E. refused to join) secured a very fair settlement of the electrical question and adjusted many grievances that could not have been adjusted otherwise. During these negotiations it became necessary to take a strike vote, and it appeared at one time that nothing could avoid a strike of all conductors, trainmen, switchmen, firemen, etc. The fact that the B. L. F. & E. included almost half of the engineers on the road would have made the strike a very serious one. Since that time the B. L. E. and B. L. F. & E. have agreed to cease their wrangling and have, so far as wages, working conditions, and grievances are concerned, become one organization, in that the two organizations support each other in all such matters.

3. Having regard for the wonderful changes in the work of the brotherhoods, as heretofore set forth, certain officials of the Pennsylvania road (east) conceived the idea that the only way to weaken, if not destroy, the four railway brotherhoods was to institute an organization of all employees on the Pennsylvania R. R. While the prospectus and the statements of the organizers of this new association would indicate that the officials of the road have nothing to do with it, the fact that the officials are approving the movement—in fact minor officials are acting as organizers for the movement—leads us to believe that this new organization is simply an instrument adopted by the Pennsylvania lines (east) to destroy these four brotherhoods. Among the advantages offered by the new organization for all employees of the Pennsylvania lines joining it are that the expense will be less, wages, working conditions, and grievances may be adjusted more readily by the friendship of the officials of the company, cooperative stores will be instituted hereafter, cheap insurance and pensions will be assured, etc. It is not strange that the shop employees, track employees, clerks, and other branches of service that have been coerced in the past, would gladly look to an organization of this kind, which they could join without fear of dismissal from the service of that company, and the result has been that the organization made wonderful strides for a few weeks, and it was claimed that whenever a majority of the employees of the Pennsylvania lines (east) were members of this new association all schedules and agreements with the four railway brotherhoods would be abrogated and the new organization would make schedules for every man in the service, etc.

4. For the past two or three years Mr. W. H. Pierce, a special organizer of this brotherhood, has been doing excellent work on many roads, among which the Pennsylvania Co. has been a most prolific field. When he was confronted by the arguments of the organizers of the new organization, he found himself greatly handicapped in securing applications for membership from the young firemen who had just entered the service and who had been led to believe that their best interests lay in the new organization instead of in the B. L. F. & E. Mr. Pierce, being a very aggressive man, fought the new organization as best he could at public meetings, and, so I understand, at one public meeting where a large number of employees of the Pennsylvania lines from all classes of service (including some officials) were present, Mr. Pierce advised the shopmen, etc., that if they desired to form an organization, they should form one of their own, and not join an organization intended to displace the railway brotherhoods. Such a suggestion was received with such hearty acclaim by those present, that I understand Mr. Pierce secured the signature or approval of 700 men present who heretofore have been denied the privilege of joining any organization. I understand from Mr. Pierce that he has no doubt that he can organize the shopmen, possibly the trackmen, and the office men in an organization of "Pennsylvania employees," and that without very much opposition from the officials. I do not mean that they would approve the breaking up of their own scheme, but it is understood that they would probably not dismiss men from service for joining the organization referred to. I have advised Mr.

Pierce that he has nothing to gain by organizing these men for, not being in that line of service, they would probably elect officers from among their own ranks, and after all of his own efforts he would have nothing, not even compensation, for his work. In reply, he has said that he was not looking for office or for compensation, but he was determined that the Pennsylvania Co. was not going to disrupt these railway brotherhoods by their new scheme, and he has been "fighting the devil with fire."

I am sending carbon copy of this letter to President Ryan, of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen; to President Perham, of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers; to President Franklin, of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers; to President Johnston, of the International Association of Machinists; and President Kline, of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, and for that reason I have described the situation at length.

I shall be glad to hear from all concerned, stating any objection they might have to the organization of the employees on the Pennsylvania Railroad into one organization, with the exception of those crafts represented by the railroad brotherhoods, which will be exempted from membership therein.

Yours, fraternally,

W. S. CARTER, President.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 5, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM, President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Mr. M. S. Samson, 4209 Girard Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., in the presence of P. A. Wenrich, grand division organizer, said at his home to-night, as follows:

That in 1909 the Philadelphia Terminal P. R. R. Conductors' Association was formed with a charter membership of 131; these men, in many instances, came from the ranks of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of which Mr. Sammon is a local officer.

That Mr. L. K. Marr was present at the formation of the association and attended a banquet given by it.

That he (Sammon) began warfare against the movement, and was arrested and placed in jail through charges brought against him by some of the ring-leaders.

That also he was summoned before officials of the P. R. R. and severely reprimanded because of his fight against the association.

That he secured evidence with which he was able to bring about the expulsion of numbers of the members of the B. R. T. on account of their connection with the forming of the association.

That he secured much correspondence pertaining to the formation of the association, which passed between the officials of the P. R. R. and certain of the employees connected with the organizing of the association, and that he has all of this and other papers in connection with the move; in fact, he has practically all of the papers and paraphernalia belonging to the association; that he won the fight completely; the association was disorganized; that many of the expelled members of the B. R. T. have since begged for reinstatement to the brotherhood.

Sammon is now local chairman for the B. R. T. on the Philadelphia Terminal Division, P. R. R., and an employee of that railroad.

For your information.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 4.

G. R. Difaleg worked for seven years for the P. R. R. as a boiler maker. Was gang leader, and once during this time was suspended for five days on account of the actions of one of his men who was new to the work.

About last December he was called into the master mechanic's office and found there two P. R. R. bulls with the master mechanic Andrus. They accused Mr. Difaleg of belonging to the new brotherhood, but this he denied. They, however, insisted, but told him that they had a good job for him and to go with them that afternoon.

10320 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

That afternoon he was told that he was to go to the brotherhood meetings and find out what men were members and report them. That the company would take good care of him—that he would have a life job, would wear good clothes, and have all of his expenses paid.

He told the secret-service man who made this proposition that he did not care to earn a living that way. The bull told him to keep his mouth shut about the occurrence, and four days after his refusal to serve he was furloughed. The next day he reported on relief on account of injuries received, and remained on relief for two months, and then, in accordance with regulations, reported for work, but was informed that there was no work for him, nor has he been given work since.

He has since then applied to the master mechanic for a recommendation, but the master mechanic said that he could not give him one, and told him that he would have to see the superintendent. Also asked him how was his friend Billy Pierce, the organizer and president of the new brotherhood. He has made one effort to see the superintendent, but was not successful.

I was also specially instructed by J. A. Donnelly, chief clerk for Mr. Long, to see and interview one Edward McMahon, of Rahway, N. J., passenger conductor in the employment of the said Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I further state that Edward P. Clark, of Camden, N. J., is engaged by said company for the same purpose and with the same instructions, and further state that at the same time these instructions were given to me there were about ten other men present in the same room and received the same instructions. I was especially instructed to obtain above information at any expense. My age is 29 years; my place of residence is Ridgway Hotel, Camden, N. J.; my home is in El Paso, Tex.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Yours of the 21st received here to-day noon.

Brother John Mitchell was mentioned in a very indirect and indistinct way by a couple of parties in Altoona, and in accordance with your first letter on the subject, this part of it will be worked out—perhaps the "John Doe" or the "and others" in the "Baker case" may mean him—however, we will see, as progress is made.

Relative the $200 furnished "bulls" during the "siege" at 3415, I think you will recall that I gave you this information. It was told me by a member of the Philadelphia city police department the night before I took up the location of Mr. Long. I will later on get hold of that party or another and get names and dates. One of the "bulls" told my man.

Will ask that if anyone else is put into this case you advise me in order that we may not get into confusion.

With best wishes, yours, fraternally, organizer for the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, and in that capacity it was his duty to visit as many of the telegraph and signal employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. as he could reach, with the object of initiating them in the said organization; that during the months of July, August, and September, 1912, he was under constant surveillance by detectives employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; that on or about August 15, while on North Twenty-second Street, Tioga, Philadelphia, Pa., in the presence of another organizer named E. A. Compton, he was followed by two of the said detectives, one of whom was a negro. Deponent stopped and asked them why they were following him; the white man replied: "We will follow you as much as we like, and we have got your measure." The negro then placed his hand upon his hip pocket as if about to draw a gun, whereupon deponent proceeded about his business, not wishing to get into an altercation under such circumstances; several times thereafter deponent was spoken to in a threatening manner by one or more of the said detectives, and he most firmly believes that all the time he was employed upon this work he was in danger of being assaulted by said detectives, and constantly refrained from going out on the streets alone after nightfall on that account.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Replying to your favor of recent date, relative to Brother Riley being threatened with violence while he was working on the Pennsylvania Railroad, when they commenced their discriminatory tactics against our brotherhood, Brother Riley advises as follows:

"Referring to Brother Perham's request for the name of the man who threatened me, or, rather, uttered the implied threat, on the ferryboat between Jersey City and New York, while I have every reason to believe that he represented the Pennsylvania Railroad and was acting under instructions, yet I have no way of establishing that fact. He did not volunteer his name, and it did not occur to me at the time to 'feel him out,' but later I regretted that I did not do so for future use, if the occasion should arise. I was watched so closely, every moment being under the surveillance of those whom I felt reasonably sure were emissaries of the company, that the incident did not make the impression upon me which it perhaps otherwise would. From the moment that I called our general committee together in Washington to the time I left the line, I do not think I was out of sight of these supposed secret-service men more than a very short time, probably for a period of two months. The only time I eluded them was when I left a fictitious address in the mail-forwarding book at the National Hotel at Washington. I had no more than turned away from the counter until I noticed a party who had unsuccessfully tried to engage me, as well as members of the committee in conversation, go to the counter, look at the book, and make a memorandum. I had, as soon as our committee met, warned them against talking with strangers, advising them that I had every reason to believe that the company had their secret-service men on the ground for the purpose of trying to ascertain just what we intended to do. However, some two or three days later they had again found me, as I recognized them from seeing them in Washington.

However, I do not think I had before met up with the man who uttered the implied threats on the ferryboat. The facts of the case were as follows:

I went aboard the boat about sundown and was standing out on the upper deck. It seemed that this man was rather ill at ease. He passed me two or three times, evidently hoping to get me away from the crowd. I paid but little attention to him, and in fact would not have noticed him had he not given me a scrutinizing glance each time he passed me.

As we neared the New York shore the crowds began to go below, and there was no one left near enough to overhear an ordinary conversation. This man came up to me, and as near as I remember the following was the exact conversation which ensued. He remarked:

"Nice evening."

"Yes; very pleasant."

"Your face looks familiar. Where are you from?"

"From the West."

"What business are you engaged in?"

"I am a traveling man."

"Well, I thought probably you was interfering with the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. I just wanted to warn you that if such was the case, that there have been a number of mysterious disappearances of men engaged in the same manner, right here in New York. So if that is your game, look out."

"Well," I replied, "I am generally able to take care of myself whether in New York or elsewhere. I appreciate your advice and the danger which you mention does not concern me in the least."

I then turned away abruptly and left him. In the meantime the boat had reached its slip and I joined the crowd and hurried ashore.

He was a man of about 35 years of age. Heavy set, powerful build, had a small black mustache and a protruding under jaw which gave him the appearance of being a ruffian or prize fighter with a bulldog tenacity.

As before stated, I have every reason to believe that he was an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was acting for them, and was prevented from saying more on account of getting no chance to speak to me privately until the boat had almost reached its dock. Furthermore, I am firmly convinced that I would have been in great bodily danger had it been dark and no witnesses had been on the upper deck.

I regret very much that I did not give him a chance to speak to me after we landed, as I would then no doubt have secured information which would be valuable to Brother Perham at this time."

I, too, regret that Brother Riley can give no further information, and that there is no way in which he can establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt that this man represented the company.

With best wishes for your success in your operations against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., I remain,

Sincerely and fraternally,

JNO. J. CARRIGAN,
Grand President.

ATTEMPTED BRIBERY OF J. J. LOVITT, IRVIN, PA., 1911.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 31, 1913.

January 30, 1913, at Henry Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa., J. J. Lovitt stated as follows:

That on the first visit of the party he gave me a slip of paper with name of Scott and a post-office box number, East Liberty, Pa., written on it, and told me that if I was not successful in handing the papers from our headquarters to him at the P. R. R. station, Pittsburgh, to mail them to the address given.

That I got on same train with this man, sat in a seat a few feet back of him, and saw him exhibit his pass to the conductor; he went to Pittsburgh and I lost him in the crowd at the station.

He was about 6 feet high, weight about 185, 25 or 28 years old, full face, red cheeks, and rather a blond, with short-cut hair. I would recognize him readily.
(More of this.)

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 16, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Last evening Officer McFarland, thirty-ninth district, Philadelphia, Pa., said, in presence of J. Leven, shoemaker, 3444 North Twentieth Street, Tioga, Philadelphia, Pa., that he did not know what building the special officers were watching last summer on Twenty-second Street, but that he was instructed they were all right; at first he declared that when citizens there complained of the suspicious presence of the four men, including a negro, he talked with one of them, who exhibited written authority to be there; at first McFarland said it was by a private detective agency, and then by his lieutenant, Johnson, thirty-ninth district; and that he was told these men were all right, therefore he did not interfere with them; that he did not bother to find out who or what the people were that the special officers were watching; that they were there by instructions of a private detective agency and were not employed by a railroad company.

When I asked him if instructions from private detective agencies were supposed to be good with city policemen he said, "Who are you, asking so many questions? You will have to see the lieutenant."

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 5.

ALTOONA, PA., June 26, 1911.

STATEMENT MADE BY PATROLMAN JOHN BOOKBERGER WITH REFERENCE TO LUTHER-GALLAGHER AFFRAY.

At 11.50 p. m. June 24, 1911, I was at Green Avenue and Tenth Street. I saw Charles Luther and two women coming from County Detective Spangler's residence, which is located on Tenth Street between Green and Chestnut Avenues. I went from there to Chestnut Avenue and Seventh Street to make my 12.15 a. m. report at box 44. I left there and went down to Green Avenue and Seventh Street, then came up to Ninth Street; this was about 12.20. I heard some loud talk at Chestnut Avenue and Ninth Street and went up that way; when I got there I saw Charles Luther talking to Gallagher and a man named Robinson; they were standing in front of the Hotel Senate office. When I came up to them Gallagher said that he was being abused by Luther and wanted a stop put to it. I said, "Gentlemen it is Sunday morning, you will have to cut it out." Luther then said to Gallagher, "I would like to take you out on the hill and lick you; I could lick six like you." Gallagher said, "I would be a fool to go out on the hill with you, as you are loaded with tools and I haven't anything." Gallagher said, "Go at me here, man to man." I then said to Luther, "You are an officer of the law; instead of agitating trouble, you should help put it down." By that time a car came along; Luther and a woman got on the car. As Luther got on the car he called to Gallagher, "I would like to trim you," Gallagher said, "Go on, you are a four flusher." I stood and talked to Gallagher and Robinson until about 12.55 a. m., then went across the street and walked up as far as the Colonnade Hotel; was there about a minute; I heard a crack; it sounded like hitting a man with a barrel stave. I ran down to the Senate and found Gallagher laying on the street, beat up and bleeding; Luther had a hold of Robinson. At this time County Detective Spangler rushed in and got hold on Luther. When I was at Glunt's corner Luther was going down Ninth Street to Green Avenue. I said to Officer Spangler, "Where is Luther." He said, "It was not Luther; I got hold of the wrong fellow." I then met Fire Chief Alleman; he told me that he had ordered the ambulance. Gallagher was still laying there; Officer Spangler got a hold of Gallagher and drug him up by the neck over to the curb, and held him there until the ambulance arrived. As far as I could notice, while in conversation with Gallagher, he was sober, and I could not detect any liquor on him.

There was no complaint made to me about anything, except what Gallagher said about Luther abusing him. Luther said nothing to me, nor did any women complain to me.

During the assault I noticed Capt. Shaffer, of the railroad police, rush in; he was in a position to make the arrest or assist Officer Spangler in making the same. Officers Shaffer, Spangler, and Luther were together a short time before. Shaffer and Spangler were on the scene when Luther assaulted Gallagher, and were there after same took place, and assisted Luther in making his escape.

Others that I saw there were Joseph O'Neil, Fire Chief Alleman, Singer, Ed. Oniel.

With reference to attached affidavit, stories were circulated about J. J. Gallagher insulting Mrs. Luther and a woman named Miss Graham. These stories were investigated, with the results as per attached memoranda.

STATEMENT IN REGARD TO A PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION CONCERNING THE ALLEGATIONS CONTAINED IN THE AFFIDAVIT OF JOHN J. GALLAGHER, AND OTHER CORRELATED MATTERS.

Editor Kelly, Altoona Times, Altoona, Pa., upon being interviewed by J. H. McGrall and T. E. Ellis, evening of December 6, 1912, at Times Building, Altoona, Pa., in relation to assault committed by Charles Luther upon J. J. Gallagher on June 25, 1911, stated that he (Kelly) was going home on a street car Sunday a. m., June 25, 1911; saw the man, Gallagher, sitting on curbstone with face badly beaten up and in a used-up condition, and thought he had been hit by a street car. In conversation regarding the affair Mr. Kelly stated emphatically that in his opinion the affair was a frame up against Gallagher. His opinion was expressed in presence of J. H. McGrall, Altoona, Pa., and T. E. Ellis.

On December 7, 1912, in Juniata, Pa., High Constable Joseph C. Norris, who is also street commissioner, stated, in presence of H. B. Perham and T. E. Ellis, that Charles Luther, who was at that time ward constable of Juniata, Pa., and who committed the assault upon the person of John J. Gallagher in 1911, was at that same time employed by the P. R. R. Co. as blacksmith at their Juniata shops; had been employed there for some years previous to that time and is yet employed by the said P. R. R. Co.; that Luther's reputation in Juniata is bad; that all of the trouble occurring in Juniata, Pa., during the labor troubles in 1911 was caused by the P. R. R. detectives, and that Luther was the moving spirit or originator of all plans connected with the bad work done by the detectives, enumerating many incidents occurring during that period.

Mr. Norris states that in his opinion the episode occurring during 1911 at the Senate Hotel, Altoona, Pa., wherein a female employee of that hotel charged one J. J. Gallagher with insulting her, and whose name Mr. Norris believes to have been Graham, was a frame up, or put-up job, for the purpose of getting Gallagher as organizer away from that hotel, and believes one Charles Luther, of Juniata, Pa., was also responsible for that frame up, and that, without having direct knowledge upon the subject, a cash consideration was given for inventing the story against Gallagher.

Mr. Meckley, proprietor of pool room and cigar store in Juniata, Pa., stated that it is a matter of general opinion in Juniata that the occurrence at the Senate Hotel, Altoona, in 1911, wherein J. J. Gallagher was accused of insulting a female employee, was a put-up job or frame up for the purpose of getting Organizer Gallagher to leave town.

Mr. J. F. O'Neill, butcher, corner Ninth and Chestnut Avenue, Altoona, Pa., stated, in presence of H. B. Perham and T. E. Ellis, on December 7, 1912, that he was proprietor of Hotel Senate, Altoona, Pa., during the trouble between the P. R. R. and its shopmen in 1911, and at the time J. J. Gallagher was accused of having insulted a young woman by the name of Graham, who was 18 or 19 years old; residence, Juniata, Pa.; employed by said O'Neill at Hotel Senate; that the morning the accusation was made Miss Graham came in late, and as he had been inconvenienced thereby he asked her as to cause, and she stated, among other things, that she made an affidavit against Gallagher and had received some money from a third party for making said affidavit.

O'Neill said that both Miss Graham and her father received money for making the affidavit and that her father accompanied her to the alderman's office to make the affidavit—Alderman Leak—and that there is no question in his mind but that the two P. R. R. detectives at that time boarding at his hotel put up the job against Gallagher.

[Robert A. Henderson, attorney at law, Altoona, Pa., Blair County Trust Building.]

JULY 31, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: About six weeks ago Charles Luther, a constable in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., assaulted one of the labor organizers, John J. Gallagher, here in Altoona, and injured him so badly that Gallagher was confined to the hospital for a week. Luther had been a fugitive from justice until a few days ago, when he gave himself up. In the meantime Gallagher and the other labor organizers had left Altoona, and I am unable to locate them at present so as to notify Gallagher of the hearing here. Will you please let me know his address.

Yours, very truly,

R. A. HENDERSON.

AUGUST 1, 1911.

Mr. R. A. HENDERSON,

Blair County Trust Building, Altoona, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. HENDERSON: Your favor of July 31 received in regard to Mr. John J. Gallagher. I desire to say that Mr. Gallagher is organizer for the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, and is not directly under control of the American Federation of Labor, hence I do not know his address. I am writing to the secretary of the organization to-day asking him to furnish you with Mr. Gallagher's address. I am also writing to our organizer in Altoona, Mr. J. M. Imler, asking him to call up Organizer Flynn over the long-distance telephone and try and arrange to have Mr. Gallagher present at the hearing of the case, which I understand is for to-morrow.

Very truly, yours,

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

MONONGAHELA HOUSE,
Pittsburgh, Pa., August 22, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: In answer to your favor of the 13th inst., inclosing clippings from Altoona daily paper of July 28, received, and contents carefully noted. In answer thereto beg leave to state as follows:

If you would only look over your files you will find where I have submitted to you a report, also inclosed clippings the same as you have inclosed to me, and prior to doing this I wrote you and informed you that Brother Ireland would also call at your office and give to you in detail statement of the matter in question. You later acknowledge that Brother Ireland did so.

From the time this controversy started I have written to different people of Altoona, and from what information I am able to glean, this said Clara Graham was not alone employed by the Pennsylvania R. R. Co. to get the parties in question in bad repute, but has also a police record in the courts of Altoona, which leads me to believe that she will do most anything for a monetary consideration. This, of course, does not justify the actions of the brothers in question in purchasing for her wines and liquors, or even mingling in her society. I think you are not unmindful of the good advice you gave to the both brothers during your stay in Altoona. I think you can also recall to mind my advice along those lines and the pitfalls that might await our agents or organizers, who with matured bodies and young heads might become victims of such pitfalls. But they heeded not our words of warning, and I must say that Brother Bork and I are not responsible for the result.

I have also written to our attorney, Mr. Henderson, and told him that any assistance I could render in clearing up this case I would only be too willing to do. I have also written to Gallagher and Schmitt and recommended that if they were innocent of the alleged charges that they should accompany me immediately to Altoona and there prove their innocence, and by so doing purify the stigma that has been placed upon the movement by their alleged actions. As far as I am concerned I know not the parties in question, have never spoken to them, and never associated with that class of people; and I can also say in all sincerity that Brother Bork is equally as innocent as I, who was not there on the date of July the 4th.

So hoping this will be satisfactory, I beg to remain,

Fraternally, yours,

T. H. FLYNN.

PITTSBURGH, PA., August 22, 1911.

Mr. FRANK MORRISON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I had the pleasure of meeting Organizer Flynn to-day, who handed me your letter which contained inclosed clippings from the Altoona daily papers, and which involved my name in connection with that of Gallagher and Schmitt, and which Mr. Flynn wrote to you some time ago about. I beg to state as briefly as I possibly can all connections I had with the Altoona affair:

First. According to the sworn affidavit of Clara Graham, the girl in question at the Senate Hotel, who alleges that I did, with Gallagher and Schmitt, on the 4th day of July, 1911, buy her beer is a falsehood. On the 4th day of July I first arrived in Altoona. Being a holiday, shops being closed, I took advantage of the day and associated with the Polish, the Slavish, and Roumanians for the purpose of arranging a meeting and for organizing purposes, which can be clearly demonstrated by a meeting I held the following night, July 5, and which I reported to your office. It is true that warrants were sworn out for the arrest of Gallagher and Schmitt, but I am informed that my name was never mentioned, nor was there warrant issued for my arrest, other than I was a party to quietly getting Schmitt out of the city, which I thought was a duty I owed Mr. Schmitt, owing to the fact that I knew the sources that this prearranged conspiracy came from, and realizing that Gallagher and Schmitt were innocent, and that the railroad corporation, through one of their agencies, Mr. Jones, who was stopping at the said hotel, had enlisted the cooperation of one of the bartenders to further the scheme to ruin the name of Gallagher and Schmitt. I not only advised Gallagher and Schmitt to be watchful, but I did go further and gave to Mr. Jones all that could be given in the manly art of self-defense.

In conclusion allow me to say that I am willing to meet you, or any agent you appoint, or any man you would suggest, including our attorney, Mr. Henderson, in the city of Altoona and prove conclusively that I am in no way connected with the statement made by the Associated Press or the sworn affidavit of the said Clara Graham; neither have I ever had the so-called pleasure of meeting her, and hoping that you will so arrange that I may go to Altoona and prove conclusively that all that is contained in the above statement are absolute facts.

With kindest and best wishes, I beg to remain,
Yours, fraternally,

WILLIAM BOCK.

ALTOONA, December 31, 1912.

H. B. PERHAM,

President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Referring to inclosed report of interviews with Detective Spangler, Blair Co., Pa., and Alderman Leak, I posed as a labor-union man, giving name, etc., in the interest of the cleaning-house process, that Gallagher's employers desired to know facts regarding the matter; that honest union labor did not approve of men who were not representative; that I individually thought it rather bad that Gallagher should not return and face the charges if innocent, etc., etc. You, of course, understand this man Spangler is, as I understand, virtually a P. R. R. "bull." I have heard this ever since coming onto the job in July last; but he has established the character of Clara Graham and opened the way for the commission, if they care to go for him.

After I retired from the scene last night he pitched into the Colonial Hotel clerk and tried to pump him, asking who I was and how long I had been here, and this a. m., about 9 o'clock, he came up and looked over the register and asked for me. I told the clerk to send him up if he called when I am in.

For your information,
Fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Altoona, Pa.

ALTOONA, PA., December 30, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: This date, in presence of Alderman Leak, Altoona, Pa., Mr. James G. Spangler, Blair County, Pa., detective and constable, first ward, city of Altoona, Pa., stated to me as follows:

That he filed the complaint in case of Clara M. Graham vs. J. J. Gallagher et al. in 1911, afterwards contradicted this by stating that Graham's father filed the complaint; that charges were filed July 27, 1911.

That Clara M. Graham was in a family way at the time those charges were filed.

That on July 4, 1911, all the girls employed at the Senate Hotel, this city, were drunk; that the proprietor and family of that hotel were absent on that day.

Spangler first said Clara Graham was at that time 16 years old; afterwards at same place said she was not quite 18 years old at that time.

That Gallagher and Schmidt were nothing but toughs and bums; that he did not have so much to say for Bork; that Flynn was a good sort of fellow, nothing more or less than a "boozer and chippy chaser"; that Gallagher and Schmidt were disgraces to any labor organization.

That the P. R. R. is anxious to find Gallagher in the State of Pennsylvania in order to push the charges against him in the Graham case, and that he (Spangler) is also anxious to get hold of Gallagher; that not long since Graham's people asked him to push the matter.

At same time and place (Alderman Leak's office, Altoona, Pa.) Alderman Leak read to me in presence of Mr. Spangler, the charges Graham vs. Jno. J. Gallagher, Schmidt, and Bork; they are that malt liquors, beer, etc., were given, etc., to a minor, naming Clara M. Graham—nothing said about insults or anything of that sort. Leak did not offer the document for me to read.

During the conversation Alderman Leak corroborated the statement by Spangler that Clara Graham was pregnant at time the charges were made against Gallagher et al. and said a couple of months after that time Miss Graham swore that J. B. Green, Altoona, was responsible for her pregnant condition and that Green settled the matter for a $75 cash consideration. That he supposed Green was considered the handiest man in sight for the purpose, etc., words to that effect. Leak seemed rather backward about showing up the charges made by Graham vs. Gallagher and was rather reticent, except when pushed a little. These charges, according to Leak, have not been booked by him, inasmuch as no arrests were made, but are on file in original form.

After leaving the alderman's office Spangler and I came up toward the central portion of the city on the way, and also after we had entered a saloon at his suggestion and where he seemed intimately acquainted, and also where we met day clerk Colonial Hotel, and until we parted an hour later he said to me, without witness or witnesses, among other things:

That during the P. R. R. shopmen's strike in 1911 one Welker was proprietor of a restaurant near the Juniata shops and took sides with the strikers, placed a placard on his place of business reading, "No scabs served." He, Spangler, went to Welker endeavoring to have card taken down and for him to take care of P. R. R. employees, saying to Welker, "They are not scabs; they are good mechanics drawing good wages and can pay you; the others can not pay you; you will lose out by your present way of doing." But Welker would not listen and eventually had to get out of the business. That some time afterward Welker met Spangler; Spangler asked what he (Welker) was doing; Welker said he had just secured a good job, naming place or firm, and was getting about $100 per month; Spangler says this job lasted one-half day and Welker was told he could not be retained, Spangler intimating to me that it was on account of his record during the strike.

Spangler said that he went to General Superintendent Creighton's office, P. R. R., and talked over matter of taking the strikers back into service. Creighton did not feel inclined to do so, but Spangler said to him he thought if it was made known that the P. R. R. would take back the strikers, or certain ones of them, many would go to work, as they owned their homes here and at Juniata, etc. He said to me, as a result of the conference, such action was taken by the company, and many strikers did return to work.

Spangler stated that during the trouble there were 70 armed men in Juniata P. R. R. enclosure; that he said to occupants of an automobile he and others were using during the strike when some one cautioned about the speed: "Oh, that's all right; if we bust her the company will fix it all right," etc., etc.

Spangler stated that Luther beat up Gallagher because Gallagher called Luther a c—— s——ker in presence of Mrs. Luther; that Gallagher was drunk at the time. Luther did not assault Gallagher when above expression was made, but after returning from Juniata and when approaching Gallagher near Senate Hotel, when Gallagher seeing Luther said there comes the son of a b——. That Luther went to New York and remained one month because he was afraid Gallagher was going to die. (See Henderson's attorney's statement.) Spangler mentioned an organizer, Horn, and spoke of him as being a gentleman and not mixed up with the others during all this fracas.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Altoona, Pa.

RELATIVE J. J. GALLAGHER AND CLARA GRAHAM.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., February 10, 1913.

Jerry B. Green, at his home, Wapsononock Avenue Extension, Altoona, Pa., to-night stated, among other things, as follows:

That he paid the Graham family of Juniata, Pa., $75, as per agreement signed by the father of Clara Graham, on account of a charge against him (Green) that he was responsible for her alleged condition. That he saw no indications at that time that she was enceinte, but Clara's sister told him such was the case; that he hardly believes he was responsible for such condition if it was present. That he heard that a child was born to Clara afterwards, but never saw any proof of such an occurrence.

That Clara Graham told him (Green) that her father had made a charge against Gallagher on account of the occurrences at the Senate Hotel, Altoona, Pa.; if he remembers correctly she said it was on July 4, and that she was drunk, but he (Green) paid very little attention to what she said about it, as it did not interest him.

Asked why he was so allegedly easy in his case with Graham, Green said that he did so in order to not allow the matter to get into the daily papers; that he thinks the Grahams thought he was to marry another girl; that Clara was about 18 years old at that time.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 8, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: By my directions Brother A. L. Rex traced and found Miss Eva Hofer, now residing at Avis, Pa., and on August 7, 1913, at her home she stated to Brother Rex as follows:

That in 1911 she was employed at the Senate Hotel, Altoona, Pa., as dining-room girl; also worked in the office; and at the time of the P. R. R. shopmen's strike was still at the hotel. She says she was acquainted with the organizers, Flynn, Ireland, Shelling, Smith, and Gallagher, while those men were stopping at the hotel; that at no time did the girls at the hotel drink beer or other intoxicants in company with any of the organizers named, nor any other organizers, but did drink some beer at different times in the hotel kitchen, but the beer was paid for by the women or girls themselves, but that Clara Graham, being only 16 years¹ of age, never drank any beer either in the kitchen or elsewhere around the hotel so far as she is aware.

That on the 4th of July, 1911, Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill were away from the hotel, but there was no beer drank at the hotel by the girls in company with the organizers; that the story about the organizers and girls being drunk on that day was absolutely false. No one around the hotel, so far as she knows, knew anything of such a story until it appeared in the Altoona Gazette about a week after the 4th. When the story appeared in the paper Organizer Smith challenged Clara Graham in the presence of Eva Hofer and Carrie Wallace, asking Clara why she had told that the girls and organizers were drinking at the hotel on July 4, when she knew it was not true. Clara Graham replied to Smith that her father (who resided in Juniata, Pa.) was being paid by a "railroad bull" for her to say this, and had told her if she did not say it her father would not allow her to come home; that her father forced her to say this.

At another time Clara Graham stated in the presence of Eva Hofer and Carrie Wallace, and Eva is quite sure Mr. O'Neill, the proprietor of the hotel, was also present, that the railroad bulls had paid her father to have her swear the organizers had insulted her while working in the dining room as a waitress.

Eva Hofer states that Clara Graham was "flip" and was hired at the hotel as a dishwasher, but sometimes acted as a waitress.

¹ Marginal note: Wrong—born 1892. See her statement Altoona papers.

CONDITIONS OF LABOR ON PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. 10329

Eva Hofer stated that she overheard a P. R. R. bull by name of Jones, of Harrisburg, Pa., say to the other bulls in conversation on the street at Altoona, Pa., after Gallagher had been hit, that if they (the bulls) would give the organizers a good slugging maybe it would scare them out of town.

RELATING TO CONDITIONS IN ALTOONA DURING SHOPMEN'S STRIKE, 1911.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

County of Monroe, City of Rochester, ss:

Frank Paquin, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is first vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America and that he resides at Chicago, Ill.

That upon information and belief several hundred men employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad lines of Pennsylvania and Erie were dismissed in the years 1910 and 1911 on account of their becoming beneficiaries to the relief and pension fund which the employees in the mechanical trades commenced to organize.

Deponent further alleges upon information and belief that employees were dismissed from the service of the company on account of their attaining the age and having been in the company's employ a sufficient length of time when they and their beneficiaries might be expected to draw benefits from the relief and pension funds that had been instituted by that company. That after the men had commenced to organize for the purpose of resisting the injustice aforementioned under the auspices of the various organizations having jurisdiction over their crafts the company continued to dismiss men from its service; that this condition was the chief reason for the men going on strike in May, 1911.

Deponent further alleges on information and belief that the company refused to reinstate the men who had been dismissed, and also declined to agree to a contract or wage scale. That during the strike John J. Gallagher, fourth vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, was waylaid and assaulted by Special Agent Luther, of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., in the city of Altoona, Pa., in the month of June, 1911, and left lying insensible in the street; that he was shadowed by Pennsylvania Railroad detectives, who were all the time engaged with these negotiations and conducting the aforementioned strike.

FRANK PAQUIN.

Monroe County Clerk's Office, Rochester, N. Y.:

I, James L. Hotchkiss, clerk of the county of Monroe, of the county court of said county, and of the supreme court, both being courts of record, having a common seal, do certify that Emanuel Koveleski, Esq., before whom the foregoing declarations or affidavits were made, was, at the time of taking the same, a commissioner of deeds in and for said city duly authorized to take the same; that I am well acquainted with his handwriting and verily believe that the signature to said certificate is his genuine signature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said county and courts this 25th day of November, A. D. 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

Chairman Railroad Employees' Department, A. F. of L., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your favor of the 20th inst. from Washington, D. C., received and noted, and referring to the matter of Vice President Schmitt being waylaid in Altoona during the trouble on the Pennsylvania road will state that Brother Schmitt can give you enough history in connection with this matter to make quite a case against the Pennsylvania Railroad and their attitude toward organized labor. Brother Schmitt will be in Kansas City during the month of October, and I will have him make out the necessary papers if that will be early enough to suit your purpose.

Trusting I may hear from you at your convenience and with best wishes, I am,

Yours, fraternally,

[International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders, and Helpers of America, John F. Schmitt, ninth international vice president, 1711 Offnere Street, Portsmouth, Ohio.]

CHICAGO, ILL., November 29, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

Chairman Railroad Employeecs' Department, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: While at our executive board meeting President Franklin referred to me your letter wanting some information in regards to the attitude of the Pennsylvania R. R. Co. toward organized labor. I was on the P. R. R. lines from January 3 until late in July and in all that time was hounded by P. R. R. detectives from the time I left my room in the hotels in the morning until I returned in the evening, and it would take several closely typewritten pages to tell my experiences on the P. R. R. lines. I will tell you of a few.

On June 17 Brother J. J. Gallagher, of the B. R. C. of A., was brutally beaten in front of the hotel by Charles Luther, a constable, who was in the employ of the P. R. R. Co. at the time as a detective. James Spangler, a county detective, stood by and saw the dirty work done, and then hid Luther in his home for 36 hours, and then took Luther out in the country and placed him in hiding. An effort was made to get the city officials busy on the job, but only a bluff was made. Capt. Schafer, of the R. R. detectives, and three of his men also stood by and witnessed the slugging, and had it not been for a man and his wife who were sitting at the window and screaming they would have killed Gallagher.

In this same city a public meeting was held, which was composed of city officials, merchants, and R. R. clerks, and foremen employed by the company, at which resolutions were adopted ordering us out of the city. The officials also had a meeting of the hotel men called, at which resolutions were adopted saying they would not take in any organizers and were classed as undesirable patrons. We were stopping at the Altamont Hotel, and after this meeting were requested to leave; we then went to the Senate Hotel, which was one of two hotels that refused to abide by the resolutions as adopted at the hotel men's meeting.

The company also got the old lady who owned the grounds where we were going to hold a picnic to get out an injunction against the man who had leased the park from her and prevent us from holding the picnic, which they did.

Many mornings on leaving the hotel was compelled to submit to be searched. I appealed for protection, but never was able to get it; could not get protection in the hotels; the R. R. bulls sit by the door of the room all night. The R. R. Co. seemed to be powerful enough to get anything done they wished.

The working conditions on these lines are deplorable, and the workmen are not far removed from being slaves. On my first visit to Altoona, when the officials learned of my being there, they made every man return to the shops and stay there until 11 p. m., with nothing to do, and received no pay for this time; and in May they forced the men to put in 13 hours, with not work enough to keep the men busy more than 5 hours a day; all work is done under the piecework system. I have seen time cards where men have been compelled to stay in the shops 10 hours and receive all of 8 cents; I have seen boiler-makers' pay envelopes for the month of June, 1911, that had put in every work day, and two weeks of this month 13 hours a day, and receive $29.90 for same.

I am surely pleased to see that some effort is being made to get laws to curb such corporations as the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and if I can be any further assistance to you in this work I will be pleased to do so to the best of my ability. I also wish to apologize for not taking this matter up earlier, and hope this will reach you in time to be of some service to you.

With best wishes and success, I remain,
Fraternally, yours,

J. F. SCHMITT.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., October 3, 1912.

H. B. PERHAM,
Chairman Railroad Employees' Department,
713 Star Building, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your letters of September 14 and 20, relative to Public, No. 300, being House resolution 21094, an act to create a commission on industrial relations, received and contents fully noted. In reply thereto will say that it is with pleasure that I comprehend the great advantage of such a law and the opportunity that it gives the officers of labor organizations, and especially those engaged in railway service, to show up some of the dirty methods and tactics of railroad officials to prevent their employees from organizing.

So far as presenting evidence of this character before a commission on industrial relations, will say that I certainly am in a position to not only verbally testify my experience, but to submit documentary evidence which will be beyond successful contradiction.

In your letter of September 20, from Washington, D. C., you refer to one of our vice presidents, Brother John J. Gallagher, who was assaulted in Altoona, Pa., about June, 1911, by one of the paid hirelings of the Pennsylvania Co. This is true. There never was a more cowardly assault upon a man than that made upon Brother Gallagher. Please permit me to say that when a hearing is arranged by this industrial commission that I will be more than pleased to attend myself, and also to have present Vice President Gallagher and possibly one or two others of our vice presidents who were handling the situation for our organization on the Pa. Railroad Co. during the recent uprising of their employees, which was in May and June of 1911. I would especially like to give Brother Gallagher the opportunity of telling to the Commission on Industrial Relations just the tactics adopted and pursued by the officials of the Pa. Railroad. I would also suggest that you get in touch with John F. Schmitt, 717 Offnere Street, Portsmouth, Ohio. Brother Schmitt is international vice president for the Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Helpers. He was with Brother Gallagher in Altoona at the time he was assaulted. Brother Schmitt would be a most valuable man to give evidence to the above referred to commission.

Assuring you that you will have my most hearty support and cooperation with reference to the subject matter and with kind regards, I remain,

Yours, fraternally,
[SEAL.]

General President.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Since arriving home the following has come to my ears: A gang of P. R. R. bulls arrested some strikers at Altoona, Pa., and, after having these strikers handcuffed, they hit them on the head and cut it open. Flagman Parsons was watching the bulls do the arresting, but when they commenced to hit them with their clubs Parsons expressed his opinion in front of the bulls that they were carrying things to extremes. Since that time Parsons has received notice of 30 days' suspension for interfering with the bulls.

This for your information.

ANNA W. BAKER (749) VS. H. H. BARNETT, J. W. CRAB, JOHN GALLAGHER, E. FLOOD, T. H. FLYNN, J. W. SMITH, JOHN DOE, AND OTHERS TO THE PLAINTIFF UNKNOWN, DEFENDANTS.

Plaintiff paid, 2.50; Sheriff Orr received, 8.40; Wm. H. Orr, sheriff. Attorney, 3; Prot L., 2.35; June 14, 1911, received, 5.35; Guy R. Lingafelt, Prot A. J. N. Defendant's bill, 1.70; Prot. L., 4.

Bill for injunction, filed June 2, 1911, praying for relief, as follows:

I.

That an injunction issue, temporary until final hearing and permanent thereafter, enjoining and restraining the defendants, their agents and employees, and all other persons from assembling upon the premises of the plaintiff described in the bill or upon the adjoining premises of the plaintiff containing five hundred (500) acres, more or less, for the purpose of holding a mass meeting or meetings to be addressed by the defendants or others in the interest of the strike of employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. now in progress in the city of Altoona, county of Blair, or for any other purpose other than those of moral amusement.

II.

GENERAL RELIEF.

June 2, 1911, injunction affidavits (2) filed.

ORDER OF COURT.

Now, June 2, 1911, the foregoing bill, together with injunctional affidavits, presented to me, and same read and considered, and it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that an injunction issue as prayed for in the bill, the same, however, to be taken to be dissolved unless a motion to continue the same be argued at the courthouse on June 7 next, 1911, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon; an approved bond in the sum of $500 to be filed.

By the court:

THOMAS J. BALDRIGE,
President Judge.

June 2, 1911, bond of plaintiff in the sum of $500 with Central Trust Co. of Altoona, Pa., as surety approved and filed.

Sheriff returns: June 3, 1911, served the within writ of injunction upon H. H. Barnett, J. W. Crab, John Gallagher, E. Flood, T. H. Flynn, and others by reading and making known to them the contents of the within writ of injunction, also by handing to H. H. Barnett, J. W. Crab, J. W. Schmit true copy of same.

Now, June 8, 1911, this cause came on to be heard and was argued by counsel, and upon consideration thereof it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the injunction herein granted be, and the same is hereby, dissolved, except that the defendants, H. H. Barnett, J. W. Crab, their agents, employees, and all other persons, be, and they hereby are, enjoined and restrained until further order of this court from assembling, or permitting to assemble, and from holding mass meeting or any meetings whatsoever where addresses or speeches are to be made in the Sylvan Lodge, as we regard that building unsafe and insecure for that purpose.

THOMAS J. BALDRIGE,
President Judge.

(See opinion filed.)

June 12, 1911, R. A. Henderson, Esq., by writing filed, appears for defendants. June 3, 1911, answer to defendants (printed), original and 10 copies filed. July 7, 1911, plaintiff's printed bill (4) copies filed. September 5, 1911, time to be fixed later. September 5, 1911, motion to dissolve preliminary injunction filed. September 12, 1912, continued.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA

Blair County, ss:

I, Guy R. Lingafelt, prothonotary of the court of common pleas in and for said county, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of the docket entry of the case therein stated, wherein Anna W. Baker is plaintiff and H. H. Barnett, J. W. Crab, John Gallagher, E. Flood, T. H. Flynn, J. W. Smith, John Doe, and others unknown to the plaintiff are the defendants, so full and entire as the same remains of record before the said court at No. 749 equity.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court this 30th day of December, A. D. 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Inclosed find copy opinion of the court, case Anna W. Baker v. H. H. Barnett et al., common pleas court, Blair County, Pa., temporary and permanent injunction.

In connection with this matter I wish to state that Anna Henderson, secretary to Attorney R. A. Henderson, Altoona, Pa., answering my question as to why Dr. Beckman, agent for the Baker estate, did not appear as plaintiff in this case, said to me: "Attorney Henderson asked Beckman this question at the hearing; Beckman replied, 'I don't know.'" Anna Henderson also said there was no doubt but that influences were brought to bear upon Anna W. Baker in the matter, adding, "The Pennsylvania Railroad owns this city."

Although I can not state as a fact, I am of the opinion that it will be found that the temporary injunction, which included the entire 500 acres of that part of the Baker estate, answered all purposes desired by the prime movers in the procedure.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,

H. B. P.:

Attorney Henderson was in a great rush to get home to lunch to-day. I entered just as his wife called him on phone, urging him to come at once, etc. I therefore thanked him for the short interview and suggested that I would see him again during first week in January, when I hoped he could give me more information, in order to place Gallagher, Flynn, and others in a better light before their people, and that he should be reimbursed financially for any trouble, inconvenience, etc. Seems an open, easy talker.

10334 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Developments indicate this is a very important matter, and on account of the tremendous power shown by the P. R. R. over this vicinity, individually and collectively, it is a difficult proposition and one that can not be rushed.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS.

General Delivery, Indianapolis, Ind.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: This will acknowledge receipt of your special-delivery letter of December 21, which was received by me about 1 o'clock this morning. I had written you upon this subject, and am glad to note that you had already gotten on the trail of a very interesting development. I want to include this matter in my petition to the commission, as I deem it to be of more than ordinary importance. When you return to Altoona I wish you would get a copy of the restraining order that, I assume, was issued by the court and send it to me at your very earliest convenience.

I would like to know if this was the injunction matter that prevented Brother John Mitchell from making a speech at Altoona in June, 1911. I am inclined to think that this is the one, but possibly there might have been two such actions.

With best wishes, I am,

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Herewith inclosed document, which may prove of some value and information in the case. Same was handed me to-day by Attorney Robert A. Henderson, Second National Bank Building, Altoona, Pa. Mr. Henderson was attorney for the defendants in said case and states unhesitatingly that the P. R. R. Company was back of the move by Miss Anna W. Baker, owner in part of the property mentioned, and that the temporary injunction asked for was effective inasmuch as the one meeting was all that was anticipated. That the pretext—condition of the building—was but a pretext, as the building was absolutely safe for the proposed meeting; that the building has since been destroyed by fire.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Altoona, Pa.

H. B. P.:

You notice Miss Baker included all the property outside and in (it belongs to the Baker estate); also she included everyone that wanted to talk to strikers P. R. R. railroad.

T. E. E.

PITTSBURGH, PA., December 22, 1912.

H. B. P.:

I do not know whether you are aware of the fact, but I am told by different people that during the trouble at Altoona during the year 1911, General Superintendent Creighton and Superintendent Preston, of the P. R. R., appointed a committee of railroad men to interview the Socialists' committee at Altoona for the purpose of getting that party or organization to prevail on Debs, who was billed to speak there, to abandon his visit, stating to the committee that on account of the strike it was feared that Debs's talk would cause trouble, etc. The Socialists refused to take action.

Then a committee of citizens and railroad men were sent to Williamsport to see Debs personally. He refused to cancel his date, and sent word back that he would appear as advertised, regardless of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. At this time 25-cent tickets were being sold in Altoona entitling holder to hear Debs and to 40 weeks' subscription to Appeal to Reason. Immediately after return of the committee from Williamsport the sale of these tickets was suppressed, but was afterwards carried on in secret.

The night of the Debs meeting it is said the P. R. R. Co. ordered a large number of its shopmen to report for work immediately after supper, and held them at work until 10.30. This had never been done before, it is said. However, most of the men went to the place of meeting and listened to Debs's speech, which had been postponed on account of the action by the company as above. It is said the shopmen understood their jobs depended upon their return to work that night.

The report goes that there was no trouble from the Debs meeting in any sense of the word, but there were about 15 city policemen near the hall (Jaffe Temple); also the mayor of the city attended the meeting.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 7.

ALLEGED ILLEGAL ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT OF MR. W. E. SMITH AT JOHNSTOWN, PA., MARCH 8, 1911.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
ALTOONA, PA., February 8, 1913.

The following copied from the records of police cases in the mayor's office, Johnstown, Pa., this date:

"Case No. 15004; defendant, W. E. Smith; charge, interfering with an officer; arrested at 9.40 p. m. March 8, 1911, by Officers Jones and Robinson, P. R. R.; up for hearing March 10, 1911; plea, ———; waived hearing and was discharged."

No testimony recorded.

T. E. ELLIS.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., February 8, 1913.

W. E. Smith, machinist, P. R. R., Franklin, Cambria County, Pa., at his home on February 7, 1913, said in parts as follows:

That the night he was arrested and imprisoned at Johnstown, Pa., there was being held in the G. A. R. Hall a joint union meeting for P. R. R. shopmen; that he was doorkeeper at front door; that he noticed the light in entry from back side door disappearing and coming on again. To investigate the cause of this he passed out the front door around to the side back door, opened it. There was no light, but he could make out three persons in entry. He said, "Where is the switchboard? I will turn on the light." Just then officer A. D. Jones grabbed him, pulled his billy, pushed him down the steps and took him to the jail and locked him up. That as soon as Jones had pushed him outside the door he recognized the other two men; they were P. R. R. Detective Robinson and Chief of Cambria Steel Detectives Carney. On the way to the jail Smith asked what such action meant; was given no satisfaction. He asked to be allowed to telephone his friends for bond; not allowed. Then he asked the detectives to telephone for him; not done. Smith says there was no quarreling nor harsh words of any kind used before Jones rushed him away from the hall.

That in about one hour after he was locked up his stepbrother came to the jail and asked for him. The turnkey said, "Smith is not here." When the steward spoke to him, saying "There will be trouble about this case; Smith had better be released." Then a cash bond of $20 was accepted from Smith's stepbrother and Smith released. That he was brought before the mayor, where Jones stated Smith was arrested for interfering with an officer; that for some reason neither Robinson or Carney, who were present, were called on. He was immediately discharged and the $20 returned.

That officers Jones, Robinson, and Carney were seen in the park facing the G. A. R. Hall in each others company before the meeting began.

That Chief Detective Carney of the Cambria Steel Co. told him (Smith) that that day before the meeting and arrest of Smith, Charles Robinson, P. R. R. detective, telephoned Carney to come over—that there were to be some of the Cambria employees at the meeting.

That he had Officer A. D. Jones arrested for assault and battery (see copy Justice Trimbath's record); that after the case went to common pleas court, County Detective S. J. McClune was sent to Smith's stepfather by Officer Jones with a view of having Smith withdraw the case against him, promising to pay all costs, etc., if he would do so, stating he was sorry the thing had happened and that he (Jones) was in the wrong. On this account, also because of sickness in his family, also being short of funds, he withdrew the case, but that if he had not done so it would have gone hard with Jones at the county seat. (Record in common pleas court, Cambria County, Pa.)

T. E. ELLIS.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., February 8, 1913.

Thomas Trimbath, justice of the peace, borough of Franklin, Cambria County, Pa., said in part on February 7, 1913, at his office as follows:

That Constable and Chief of Police J. R. Slates, Franklin Borough, told him (Trimbath) that Policeman Alfred D. Jones, Johnstown, Pa., told him (Slates) that P. R. R. Officer Robinson had met him (Jones) before the meeting at G. A. R. Hall, Johnstown, and requested him to go with him, that he (Jones) was sorry because of the part he had played in arresting and jailing of Smith and could not understand how he came to be influenced to go there, as he himself was a union man. Trimbath says he will take oath that Slates told him as above.

That W. E. Smith withdrew his charges against Officer A. D. Jones only after the latter had sent word to Smith requesting Smith to do so, offering to pay all costs, etc. This was done and he (Trimbath) received costs due him when settlement had been made. (Record in common pleas court, Cambria County, Pa.) Also see Justice Trimbath's record of the case in his court attached herewith.

That it is a wonder that the treatment of Mr. Smith by the three detectives did not cause a riot in Johnstown, that it would have done so had a considerable number of the union men from the borough of Franklin been in attendance at the meeting. That he (Trimbath) believes that if Jones were a well man he would tell me the whole history without reserve. (Jones in hospital dangerously ill.)

That Mr. W. E. Smith is one of the best citizens of the borough of Franklin, strictly honest, moral in every way.

The janitor G. A. R. Hall, Johnstown, Pa., this date corroborated the statements made by W. E. Smith, Franklin Borough, Cambria County, Pa., on February 7, 1913, in all details, and says when he told the three detectives, Jones, Robinson, and Carney, he would report their presence in the cellar of the building to the officers of the union meeting upstairs he was threatened with arrest, and told them to go ahead and arrest him. They did not do so, and then retired to the rear door of the hall, where they arrested without cause and took W. E. Smith to the city jail.

T. E. ELLIS.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., February 8, 1913.

Attorney Frank P. Martin, Johnstown, Pa., to-day stated, among other things, as follows:

That he was attorney for W. E. Smith in 1911 when Smith was charged with interfering with an officer; that when the case came up for hearing Officer Alfred Jones said, among other things, that he was brought into the matter by Officer Robinson, of the P. R. R., and that it was evident that Jones was repentant for his part in the matter; that Mr. Smith was discharged of any offense by the mayor (then a Mr. Wilson). Martin added, "You will likely find there is no record of what was offered at the hearing" (evidence).

Attorney Martin said there was no doubt but it was a put up job by Robinson, of the P. R. R., in order to find out what was going on at the meeting of union men and to see who were there, for the purpose of discharging those who attended the meeting; that there was absolutely no legal cause for the arrest of Mr. Smith.

That if Officer Alfred D. Jones were living he would in all likelihood tell me every word just as events happened. (Mr. Jones died at 6 o'clock this morning as a result of an operation performed Feb. 6, 1913.)

Clipping from Friday, February 7, 1913, Pittsburgh Dispatch., Harrisburg, Pa.; political news.

For your information W. E. Smith, Franklin, Cambria County, says he was not physically injured, but considered arrest and imprisonment a greater injury, as it was the only time an officer ever laid hands on him. I do not know how rumor of physical injury came to you. I look at the case as important and information conclusive. No wonder Alderman Lamberd was so noncommittal; he's one of those to whom the octopus has it "cups" applied. I, 13, received several warnings relative interview with him.

Referring again to Smith case, you will notice the Johnstown police record shows he was "arrested by Officers Jones and Robinson, P. R. R." Important.

Ability, fitness, and seniority entitle a telegraph operator to promotion as opportunity may offer. The superintendent shall decide, after a fair and impartial trial, whether the candidate or applicant is qualified therefor.

No. 2.

New positions and permanent vacancies will be bulletined to the various offices and towers, for a period of ten days, by circular letter (or by "23" message when it can be done without burdening the wires), and at the expiration of that time, given to the operator making application in writing, if, in the judgment of the superintendent, he is qualified therefor and eligible by reason of seniority rights.

All temporary and prolonged vacancies (of six months or more duration) will be bulletined in the same manner as new positions and permanent vacancies and filled by the senior operator making application in writing, regulation No. 1 to govern.

No. 3.

An operator failing to make application for a position forfeits to the man who accepts that position such seniority rights as the position may carry with it, but will be given an opportunity to make application when a vacancy occurs.

No. 4.

After an operator enters the telegraph office of the superintendent, general superintendent, or general office, Philadelphia, and is assigned to permanent service, he shall be in line for promotion therein from the time of entering such office, regulation No. 1 to govern.

No. 5.

In reduction of force, the service of the youngest employee (according to his seniority rights) will be dispensed with first; in reemployment, the oldest employee (according to his seniority rights) will be given employment first. When an office is closed or reduction of force is made, seniority on the division entitles the employee affected to ask for any position held by another whose seniority is less than his own, and employee affected shall have this right regardless of the rate of pay he formerly received, or the rate of pay of the position to which his seniority rights entitle him. Regulation No. 1 to govern in both cases.

No. 6.

Employees transferred from one division to another at the instance of the company shall, when a vacancy occurs, be given seniority rights on the division to which transferred. An employee transferred from one division to another at his own request shall have seniority rights only from date of transfer.

No. 7.

Overtime shall be paid at the regular pro rata rate; provided that the rate per hour shall not be less than 35 cents. In computing overtime, less than 30 minutes will not be counted; 30 minutes or more will be counted one hour. At stations or offices where only one operator is stationed, overtime will be allowed after the leaving time of the last scheduled train which he is required to meet. When operators relieve each other at regular hours, if by lateness of train or any fault of the operator relieving, the operator to be relieved is compelled to work overtime, no overtime will be allowed.

No. 8.

Regular operators required to perform duty at wrecks, washouts, or similar emergency offices shall receive their overtime rate per hour for the number of hours from the time they are called until their return. If held so as to be unable to work their regular trick the next day, they shall receive pay for a full day, in which latter event pay will not also be allowed for overtime spent at wrecks, etc.

No. 9.

Employees who have received leave of absence shall not lose their seniority rights.

No. 10.

Telephone operators who handle train orders or messages, block or report trains by telephone in lieu of telegraph, will be given equal rights with telegraph operators, based upon the time of their entering the service as either telegraph or telephone operators, and the same regulations as now in effect governing telegraph operators will apply to telephone operators. When a telegraph office is changed to a telephone office, it will not be considered a reduction in force and be opened to advertisement unless the rate of pay or hours are changed.

It is understood that in filling new positions and permanent vacancies, either telegraph or telephone, in accordance with present regulations No. 2, both telegraph and telephone operators will be given an opportunity to make application for such positions. In case no applications for telephone positions are received from either telegraph or telephone operators, such positions to be filled by the selection of the superintendent. An operator can not make application for a position he has just vacated, but if the position is vacated by the man who fills his vacancy he may then make application and his application will be considered.

No. 11.

The word "operator" as herein used applies to telegraph and telephone operators, operator-clerks, clerk-operators, agent-operators, and relief-operators.

No. 12.

Operators called as witnesses in court in the interest of the company, coroner's inquests, or railroad investigations of any character will be allowed time for same with the minimum of one day, also travelling expenses and board when away from home.

No. 13.

Operators will not be suspended for minor offenses; pending investigation or decision witnesses will be examined separately, but in the event of conflicting testimony those whose evidence conflicts will be examined together. Operators will receive 10 days' notice prior to the date suspension takes effect.

No. 14.

Operators, signalmen, and levermen whose duties compel them to work Sundays, will receive two consecutive days vacation per month with pay.

No. 15.

Employees considering that they have been unjustly treated shall have the right to appeal, and at hearings in the case may have an employee of their own selection to assist them.

10366 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

pocket to-night at P. R. R. Union Station, Pittsburgh, Pa., by red-cap Porter H. H. Jenkins, 1410 Bedford Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. See former report regarding this matter.

Fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Pittsburgh, Pa.

[Inclosure.]

Hours of work, 12. We are compelled to sign our names on a time sheet. A report of 10 or more minutes late means the loss of a day or more. The uniforms cost, complete, from nine to twelve dollars. The first uniform is given free. There are 6 men who get $15 a month, which they lose if they quit the company or get discharged. There are 24 men here at present, who get anywhere from 30 cents to $1.75 per month, from which fees for the relief fund are taken. In case of sickness or injury the 6 men get from 80 cents to $1 a day. The other men get something like 40 cents a day. The rules under which we work are almost unbearable. The average that a hustling man can pick up around here is from $30 to $35 in certain months of the year. We got up a paper once and signed our names to it, asking for a salary, about a year ago, from which we have never received an answer. There is more evidence if needed.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 22, 1913.

One of the 41 "no-pay" red-cap porters at Broad Street Station states that he, with the other 40 of this class of employees there, are compelled to belong to the voluntary relief, and have to hustle as best they can to pay the assessments, which are 75 cents per month. It is same case with the uniform proposition. This looks to me like an outrage.

FORT PITT HOTEL,
Pittsburgh, Pa., May 4, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Red-cap Porter Jenkins, P. R. R. Station, Pittsburgh, told me to-night that on March pay day it was circulated among the porters "there was a surprise for them," and when they went to the stationmaster's office for their stipend, or to "sign up," as usual, all white men present except those on duty there were asked to retire, and the porters were all paid wages arranged as follows: Ten men at $15, 10 at $10, 10 at $5. See Jenkins' first statement sent you in January. Jenkins also stated to-night that he drew a pair of trousers since I first saw him, and that the $3.10 has not yet been taken from him. Another drew a cap, but the $1.90 has not been taken from that porter. Another drew a cap and pair of trousers, but the $5 has not been taken from that man. This never occurred before, he says. Jenkins also states that he knew of cases where $15-per-month men had been taxed $1.50 per month for voluntary relief association. This was before he first met me. He does not know about this at the present time. Jenkins thanked me profusely "for what I had done for the porters."

[Inclosure entitled "The Price of a Tip."]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 12, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: February 11, en route Altoona to Philadelphia; train No. 44, New York express, P. R. R. Train Porter Simmons, New York, said, among other things, as follows: That he runs between New York City and Pittsburgh, Pa., and makes 10 round trips monthly; his wages are $40 per month.

There are 12 of these colored porters on these runs; all receive same wages. They have been trying for five years to get the company to pay them a living wage and have been promised from time to time, but nothing has come from it. Simmons has been on the runs for six years.

Not long since Simmons discovered en route a broken truck that would have caused disaster, very probably. His boss called him in and congratulated him on account of his watchfulness, and during the talk remarked to Simmons: "You are making plenty of money." Simmons told him "No; nothing doing." Simmons says the public does not tip them, as it concludes they are paid a living wage, and the porters have to hustle outside their duties (at New York) in order to keep even with the world. On some of the runs between New York and Pittsburgh and return the men scarcely have time for three hours' sleep.

The porters are all compelled to buy their uniforms from the P. R. R. Co. They would be thankful for relief from some direction.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 14, 1913.

On February 13 Red-cap Porter No. 11, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa., said among other things: That he had been at the business 14 years and is getting $15.85, less 75 cents per month voluntary-relief assessment. That there are 56 of these porters at Broad Street and 15 of these are paid the same as he is and is ashamed to say the other 46 get no wages at all. All are required to belong to the relief. The company gives each applicant for the job a suit and overcoat. After that they are required to buy these uniforms from the company when the company designates they shall buy. That the porters who do not receive wages were in the habit of making enough by extra work in running the elevators to pay their voluntary-relief assessments. Since that has been changed he does not know how they manage the matter. No. 11 says there are just double the number of porters at Broad Street that should be there. Added to this is, on account of the company advertising them as a feature, people think they get fair wages and do not tip as they would otherwise. He recounts an experience occurring two or three weeks ago when he escorted a white gentleman around for about two hours and during that time told the gentleman all about these conditions and says the man was astonished and indignant. In speaking of the advertising part, he said, "They are talking of cutting it out."

T. E. ELLIS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 24, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The following letter received from Brother Elliott, Elmira, N. Y., this a. m.:

ELMIRA, N. Y., February 22, 1913.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER ELLIS: Your favor of the 19th instant at hand. Beg to advise that I am informed by several of the shopmen that the system you refer to is in effect here.

The men, as I understand it, are under the piecework plan and remain at the shops whether there is work for them to do or not, getting paid for just what work is performed.

One of the men stated that he had recently spent one whole day at the shops and made but 7 cents. He also stated that unless the party affected registered a very vigorous kick he would be compelled to put in a great deal of time with no compensation.

I am pleased to advise you that at a joint meeting held here Monday evening last with members from the other roads entering Elmira the Chemung Telegraphers' Club was launched, with about 50 charter members, officers chosen, and we will push the movement for all it is worth. Have no doubt but that it will be a success.

Matters are taking from hereabouts and we ask that you watch us grow.

Sincerely and fraternally,

C. R. ELLIOTT,
Local Chairman.

You note machinery I put in motion last November has been kept going in good shape. Have asked Brother Elliott to return to you constitution and by-laws, Queen City Telegraphers' Club, borrowed at that time.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 9.

FAVORING COMPANY ORGANIZATION.

[The Order of Railroad Telegraphers. General committee. Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie. G. E. Nightingale, general secretary-treasurer.]

NEWFIELD, N. J., April 26, 1912.

Mr. H. P. PERHAM, President.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: C. R. Williamson, whose address is Palmyra, N. J., told the agent here, Mr. A. Beckett, that the company was interested in the O. R. T. D. A. & S.

He is making desperate efforts to organize the W. J. & S. and Amboy divisions without success, although many of our members are becoming very impatient at the delay, and to increase their discomfort the O. R. T. D. A. & S. is flooding the road with their pamphlet. As none of them are subscribers is this not a violation of the postal laws regarding second-class rates?

My superintendent called me in on the 24th and attempted to browbeat me for a half an hour for appealing over his head to the general superintendent, although he did not deny that my letter to him had not been answered, that he would not meet our committee, and he asserted that the company was doing business with another committee. When I asked him if it was his idea of justice that the complainant had no right to choose his representative or attorney, he changed the subject, and said I had been sending eggs to Atlantic City improperly, and he was considering referring it to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and asked me how a few days behind the bars would suit me? I told him that I was not worrying about it. How about it? Some bluff? The egg business is one dozen which I deliver to the railroad station here without instructions. I do not know who takes them down, but it seems that that is up to the agent or baggage master. In fact, it is my opinion that the interview was simply to frighten me if possible. I trust that, with your help, we may be able to return the favor.

Yours, fraternally,

G. E. NIGHTINGALE.

SOUTH SEAVILLE, N. J., May 14, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: On being in conversation with Brother J. W. Thurston, agent, of Ocean City, N. J., am informed by him that Mr. Andrews tried to induce him to join their order, O. R. T. D. A. & S. Mr. Thurston says he can produce evidence to bear him out in this statement. Have asked Mr. Thurston to write the matter up in full and mail to you or hold for future reference.

You will recall, this is the party I spoke to you about in Philadelphia on 10th instant, being called upon to pay his respects to superintendent after being visited by Andrews and Williams.

Hoping the situation may have its final in a sweeping victory for Miller and his gang, I remain,

Fraternally,

C. E. ELLENBERGER.

THE DAUPHIN,
HARRISBURG, PA., December 2, 1912.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I was told by Operator R. E. Erbe, 539 Lancaster Avenue, Lancaster, Pa., that he made application for position on Manhattan Terminal, New York, and was told by some of the P. R. R. officers that he could not be placed there unless L. K. Marr says so, "and the understanding they gave me was that L. K. Marr would not put a man there unless he was a member of the O. R. T. D. A. & S., and not being one I did not get the position."

Fraternally,

T. E. FIDLER.

FOXBURG, PA., August 16, 1912.

Mr. O. T. ARENDT, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER: W. H. K. was over the road yesterday, and on account of being laid out by wreck he stopped at Emlenton and was giving Campbell a line of "B. S." Told Campbell there would probably be a strike vote taken this week and for us not to sign it, but to turn down the O. R. T. and join the O. R. T. D. A. & S., so as to be recognized; and also that they had something in store for the O. R. T. D. A. & S. members. So, you see, if you fellows fall down we can join W. H. K.'s order and still have something.

Have heard several of the boys talking, and so far they are all on your side; but when it comes down to the fine point there may be some who will not stick, but all the members who amount to anything are with you. This is too big a country to hang on to one job when the chance comes to get out, and here is one that is going on the first jump and get a good job.

Suppose by this time you have things in such shape that your job there will soon be ended.

Yours, fraternally,

R. V. ROBINSON.

W. H. K. was over the road Saturday on special. Made stop at Philadelphia, and when talking to Red McCoy gave him a "jacking up" for paying his dues for the coming term, and wanted him to drop it and take up the O. R. T. D. A. & S., but Red said, "Nothing doing."

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.,
TEMPLETON, PA., August 26, 1912.

Mr. O. T. ARENDT.

DEAR BROTHER: No doubt you will be somewhat anxious to hear from this vicinity to know how the boys stand. As you are aware, Brother Compton lined up three from this point, making both extra and regular men solid. Also had a short talk with Mr. W. H. Karns Saturday. He called me out of office and asked me if I was a member of the O. R. T. I said, "Yes, sir." He said, "I understand the boys are talking of polling a strike vote in the near future, and my advice to you is to vote against a strike, as you are married and living here, and I would not like to see you get into any trouble. Are your brothers, E. O. and B. S., members, too?" I said, "Yes; they all are." "Tell them what I said, as I shall not likely see them. I have been telling all the boys in North End I see the same; and if it does come to a showdown, I will fight it to the bitter end." I says, "Yes; I do not wish trouble; I will so."

He also asked several south of me about the same dope; but all his talking was in vain, as they all seem firm, and am sure will stick with you boys till the bitter end, knowing that we shall win and everything come out O. K.

I am, fraternally, yours,

H. C. HOOKS.

EMLENTON, PA., August 26, 1912.

O. T. ARENDT.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.: I just received your letter last p. m., and in regard to W. H. K. asking me to join the O. R. T. D. S. & A., yes; he said, "Why don't you drop the O. R. T. and join the O. R. T. D. S. & A., which will do you some good," and that they will not recognize the O. R. T. He has been to two-thirds the men on the division with the same spiel, and wanted to know if it would come to a strike vote, which he thought it would, if we would vote against it. We had quite a talk at Emlenton. I am now working second at S. K.—lost my happy home at J. S. I have been posting all the boys I can get to see, and they are all very strong in favor of it. If they do not come to terms they will stick by you. I say go to it; now or never. W. H. K. appears very uneasy at the present. He was putting a big spiel that we would all lose our pass, and he said he would know who all voted for and against; that he would get the ballots. He said, "What will you do if they come out on a strike?" I said, "I was darn sure I would not scab." I suppose you have no idea when you will be back. Well, stick to her; we are all with you.

Wishing you success, I remain,
Your friend and brother,

P. A. CAMPBELL.

WOOD HILL, PA., August 27, 1912.

The following statement was made to me by Mr. W. H. Karns, division operator, Allegheny Division, P. R. R.:

There are about 3,200 operators on the lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie. Of these about 900 are O. R. T. men and about 700 are O. R. T. D. A. & S. men, and the remaining half do not belong to either order. He suggested that we all join the O. R. T. D. A. & S.

E. A. GEORGE.

MOSGROVE, PA., August 27, 1912.

O. T. ARENDT,

3415 North Twenty-second Street, Tioga, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: On the 24th inst. Mr. W. H. Karns, division operator, called at this office and asked me if I were a member of the O. R. T., and when I replied that I was he said he understood that we were going to take a strike vote, and that he would advise me to vote against any trouble. I told him that I wasn't aware that it had come to that yet, and if it did I would consider what to do then. He said, "Well, that's my advice to you," and went out.

Respectfully yours,

C. J. MOORE, First Trick.

TIDIOUTE, PA., August 27, 1912.

O. T. ARENDT, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER ARENDT: Your letter at hand. I have been told by several that W. H. K. has tried to coerce all the nons and younger men to join the other organization, and have requested T. W. Pringle to come up to see me so I can get his written statement, but if he does not come I will go down on No. 30 and ride up with him from Eagle Rock to Hickory and talk with him, as he told Brother Cridler that Karns called him in, telling him that the O. R. T. had secured all the increase the operators had so far received and asking him to join them. Mr. Pringle refused to commit himself by either promising or refusing, but stated to Brother Cridler that he would join the O. R. T. as soon as he got a steady position.

In relation to Mr. Karns's talk to myself he did not commit himself in plain words, and the following is his exact conversation as nearly as I can remember it: On train No. 34, August 23, just after leaving Irvineton, Karns approached me, and the following conversation took place:

W. H. K.: "Hello, Cross. Are you a member of the O. R. T.?" E. G. C.: "Yes, sir; I am." W. H. K.: "Well, well, how's that?" E. G. C.: "I have been a member since becoming one in April."

W. H. K.: "My brother belongs, too; but maybe you won't believe that, and I am going to say the very same thing to him that I am now saying to you. The fellows around Oil City are getting very much excited. Do you know about it?" E. G. C.: "Perhaps I may." W. H. K.: "I understand there will soon be a strike ballot out, and I presume some of the men will, during the excitement, sign for a strike, and I want to caution you that if you do you will, when the excitement dies away, be sorry; but it will then be too late, for if you once sign that ballot your name will go on record, and, whether there is a strike or not, you lose."

Then followed a conversation about my hearing, and I successfully changed the subject, as I did not wish to commit myself in any way. Just before reaching Thompson Karns asked me if Frank Mascaro, a student by permission from Brother Perham to Brother Kennedy, was a member. I said, "Not yet." He said, "It's a wonder. If you fellows were wiser you would drop this foolishness and get into some order that would get you what you want without this friction," to which I made no reply, having reached our station.

On August 20 T. F. Hilliard, supervisor subdivision No. 12, entered my office, and the following conversation took place, but I was under the wrong impression that he meant Brother Compton:

T. F. H.: "Have you seen the organizer?" E. G. C.: "No." T. F. H.: "Do you belong to them?" E. G. C. (supposing he meant the O. R. T.): "Yes." T. F. H.: "W. H. K. ought to be satisfied, then." E. G. C.: "Why?" T. F. H.: "Didn't the company send the organizer around?" E. G. C.: "No; do you think the company wants to organize labor unions to buck against them?" T. F. H.: "Oh, yes; they did. He travels on a pass, and I heard him talking to the bunch in Richards's office."

I tumbled then and knew he must mean the other organization, and said, "That looks funny to me, for I can't see why our employers wish us to organize." He said, "You better get the other fellows into it, too." His train then pulled out and he left.

Will say further that W. H. K. seems too wise to make statements in words that will commit him directly to those whom he has reason to fear; and, while I do not dare write and ask those whom I know he has approached for fear they might give the game away, I will endeavor to see them personally and get a statement.

Brother McGill, now relief agent, told me W. H. K. had seen nearly every man and threatened them against signing the ballot, and W. H. K. told me he intended seeing every one.

Will learn all I can and try to keep you informed.

Fraternally, your friend,

E. G. Cross.

TUNESASSA, N. Y., August 27, 1912.

Mr. O. T. ARENDT, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your letter of Aug. 23 and others prior to this received, and I will now try and write you a few lines in answer to this and thank you for writing to me and wish you success. I see that things are serious, and I think now or never. and there are others that think the same. As near as I can find out all the members are sending in their dues pretty well and mean business, if they will only stay that way.

I saw Brother Compton a few minutes the 23d while train No. 33 stood here, and I understand he has to be pretty careful, but the other men of the other organization are going over this division, but so far guess with poor results.

Yes, W. H. K. has been going over the division seeing different operators, but so far he has not been here. And in regard to W. H. K. and what I can find out, he tried to find out from Brother Brown, second Vandalla, if he was in favor of a strike, and if he would vote a strike ballot, and W. H. K. jumped off 33 one night at Red House and asked Brother F. Goodrich how the O. R. T. was getting along. And I heard, too, that Brother Lamb, first NB tower OC., was up in W. H. K. office, and he tried to get information in regard to the O. R. T., and then he said that he wished he would join the O. R. T. D. S. & A., but Lamb said he guessed the O. R. T. was good enough for him.

I will now close for this time, hoping this will find you O. K. I remain,

Yours, truly,

WALTER LINDEN.

TADIOUTE, PA., August 31, 1912.

This certifies that I am a telegraph operator on the Pennsylvania Railroad, and that on Tuesday, August 20, I was approached by Supervisor T. F. Hilliard in behalf of the organization known as the O. R. T. D. A. & S., who informed me that the officers of the Allegheny division of the P. R. R. Co. had on that date sent an organizer out over the Salamanca branch of the Allegheny division for the purpose of securing members for said O. R. T.

D. A. & S. That during my conversation with said T. F. Hilliard he stated that all who wished to hold or continue their positions would be required to affiliate with the above-mentioned organization.

TADIOUTE, PA., August 31, 1912.

This certifies that on Friday, August 23, 1912, I was approached by Division Operator W. H. Karns while en route from Warren to Thompson on train No. 34, and that during the conversation that ensued I was informed to the effect that should I vote in favor of the strike my name would go on record as having so voted; that I would be sorry for so voting whether the strike was won or lost, giving me to understand that I would be blacklisted, although not saying so in plain words, but in such manner that his meaning was plain to me.

E. G. CROSS.

AUGUST 31, 1912.

This certifies I am a telegrapher on Allegheny division, P. R. R., and that I was held in conversation with a "traveling organizer" of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. on a train at a recent date. The conversation having the following import: That the P. R. R. did not recognize the O. R. T. under President Perham, of St. Louis, Mo., as it was affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and that it did recognize an independent organization called the O. R. T. D. A. & S., in that the O. R. T. D. A. & S. had obtained the last minor increases in salary on the P. R. R. But when I stated that we had made particular investigation of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. and found it to be a counterorganization to the O. R. T., its object in the end to disrupt the uniting of the telegraphers on the P. R. R., he said he would not talk with me further on the subject, but would leave it to my future and better consideration, and handed me two application blanks, which he said he was confident I would wish to fill out soon after the O. R. T.'s committee in Philadelphia had been defeated in their object, which would prove that the O. R. T. was just taking our money willingly for nothing, and that we should belong to the O. R. T. D. A. & S., as it was the coming organization, recognized, and using our money to good advantage.

C. E. KENNEDY.

REYNOLDSVILLE, PA., September 10, 1912.

O. T. ARENDT, Local Chairman.

DEAR ARENDT: I want to submit my case to you and ask you what the O. R. T. will think of what I may or may not do.

I took this appointed job at "RS" with the understanding that I was to fit myself for train dispatching, and when it became fair, to give me the examination for dispatcher they would do so and carry me as a dispatcher, giving me such extra dispatching as my turn would be entitled to and moving me up to regular dispatcher, as per seniority.

I have done more or less of train running for the other dispatchers since I came to this office, and am somewhat familiar with the work now and feel that I might tackle it.

But now I am getting to the real issue: I have just received a request to present myself for examination for train dispatcher, which will probably mean that (if I pass the examination) they will put me on the list as an extra dispatcher and will require my withdrawal from the O. R. T. At least, that is what Supt. Buckelew required of Dispatcher Campbell.

So you can see where I am at. I want to see the boys win out, and I want to get promoted to dispatcher myself, and feel I owe it to myself to take every advantage of promotion that comes my way.

What I want to know is, Will the O. R. T. (the boys and officials) uphold me if I withdraw now from the order, which is necessary to become a dispatcher.

I consider myself mighty lucky to have gotten as far up as I already have, being with the company only two years, and starting in a ham of the worst specie.

Will my taking the dispatcher's examination, and provided I pass—and work—will it amount to very much to the order after all?

I want to do what is right with the boys, and at the same time I want to get all the promotion that I can.

So, to sum up, would I be a scab if I were to take the dispatchers examination, pass, and work up in this line for the company.

Fraternally, yours,

H. L. BAKER,

P. S.—Please answer quick, as I may have to present myself any day for the examination; am trying to delay it until I hear from you and what you think and what the boys think. Of course I shall do whatever I think best when the examination time comes, but would like to have your opinion on this first.

P. S. S.—Please put yourself in my place, as it were, and look at it in that light before you answer, but please answer soon.

H. L. B.

P. A. WENRICH.

DEAR FRIEND: J. C. M. was to see me yesterday. He asked me if I was a member of the O. R. T.; said "yes." Then he said, "You know the P. R. R. does not want their men to belong to O. R. T.," and said they will not meet the O. R. T. committee and if they call a strike. He said the reason is that if the company will not give in why the O. R. T. calls a strike and they do not want to deal with a union of that kind. The D. A. & S., they will not strike, he says. He asked me how many there were on this division, and I said some fellow said there were about 50. J. C. M. says that fellow must have stretched it some, and he says as soon as superintendent of telegraphers hears of O. R. T. men being on this division he will tell him (J. C. M.) to find some cause to discharge them. He says he thinks the men are foolish to waste their money on O. R. T.—this is for your information. Guess he thinks he can scare the fellows to drop the O. R. T. Am not scared yet. Understand he gives this little story to all the men he meets.

Your friend,

W. R. LONGENECKER,

READING, PA., December 13, 1912.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER ELLIS: See your diary November 19, 1912, meeting at Pottsville, Pa.

Referring to our conversation relative to the different things that took place on this occasion, I wish particularly to call your attention at this time to the statement that was made by Mr. G. W. Hoffman, who, I understand, is one of the local board of adjustment, and, if I remember correctly, the L. C. on the Schuylkill division, representing and a member of this so-called organization known as the O. R. T. D. A. & S. Immediately after the meeting, you will remember, you and I were walking up the main street and met Mr. Hoffman, and among other things he said: "Of course, your argument is logical, your cause is good, and I am unable to contradict what you say, but you know as well as I do that, as long as there are three members of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. on the Pennsylvania Railroad the O. R. T. can never do business with the management of that corporation (P. R. R.)." He gave me further to understand that he thinks he should therefore continue to support this so-called organization for that reason. I understand that Mr. Hoffman lives in Pottsville.

I merely mention the above to refresh your memory on what Mr. Hoffman had to say, as I consider it of great importance that we remember such damaging admissions, especially when they come from such a source as this.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am,

Yours, fraternally,

PAUL A. WENRICH,
Box 606, Reading, Pa.

H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Mr. Hoffman also said at the same time, when I called his attention to the character of an organization in the position which he described, as per Bro. Wenrich's letter, "that it did not make any difference to him if he got returns," etc.

Fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

J. F. MILLER,

2916 Huntingdon Avenue, Baltimore, Md.:

Division operator called me in his office to-day and accused me of trespassing on company property, and I am liable to be discharged or suspended very heavy any minute. He demanded a statement on my job at once. Statement made was about 25 words. Please give some advice.

H. F. STRUNK.

316 SOUTH SEVENTEEN AND A HALF STREET,
Reading, Pa., March 5, 1914.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

General Chairman.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Division Operator Moran called me in his office yesterday and there accused me of trespassing on P. R. R. property, and when I asked him to tell me who told him so and demanded time and place of trespassing, if I had done so, he told me if I demanded that he would get rid of me shortly, and he gave me to understand that he wanted a statement from me or my job, so, therefore, I made this statement: "If I trespassed on P. R. R. property while off duty, it was only to see some operator whom I could not see while off duty."

I said, according to that, I had not dare to go in Ra office and see or talk to Operator Ramsay, and he said no, so I asked him what he was going to do with the operators that do go in there every day by the bunch, and he said he thought he had to stop them, and I asked if they could be stopped without being punished, and I had to take punishment. I also had him fast in some other ways, but he told me he would attend to me shortly, so I do not know what the outcome will be. I am not a bit scared, for if they give me a heavy suspension or discharge me, I am sure it will bring all five orders closer together on this pike, and, besides, I know I got support, but still I want to do all I can to hold my position for the present, but all four other orders urge me to go right on with my work, and I mean to do so.

Yours, fraternally,

H. F. STRUNK, Local Chairman.

I got application and $3 in money from John Dulolf, from Douglassville, and expect a few more this week yet.

H. F. S.

316 SOUTH SEVENTEEN AND A HALF STREET,
Reading, Pa., March 11, 1914.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

General Chairman, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I have not yet got any new members since I wrote to you last. But I tell you what I did get, and that is one-day suspension for trespassing on the P. R. R. property while off duty from February 25 to March 1, 1914. Well this was rather lucky, but I just bet you after they did all they could to scare me and found that they could not do it, and I put on a bold front in the very beginning, that they did not trust to suspend me very hard, for no doubt the way I acted they thought no doubt I had some pretty good backing in some way or other. But I tell you I was really afraid I might get fired in the first place, but I did not let on to them that I had any such idea in my mind, but after I got out of the office I expected to at least be suspended very hard, if not fired, but I was not a bit scared, for I knew I was well taken care of. I will make good use of the day I get suspended, and hope I can get about 5 or 6 new members that day.

I will to-day send you under separate cover a Reading Eagle, the leading daily paper of Reading, Pa., and you can find on page 2, column 1, a paragraph about the P. R. R. M. B. D., and also see that Operators Schaffer and Hoffman, two of the leading O. R. T. D. A. & S., are representing the operators in the P. R. R. M. B. D. This might be some help to you in the future, for it comes to show who are company men, for these two men are both of the $76.95 a month men, and are a few of the men that received an increase in wages on this division last fall a year ago. At the same time that this increase was given out these men were very active in the O. R. T. D. A. & S., and also the majority of the men that did receive an increase at that time.

About four weeks ago I was to see Operator Hoffman, and he told me then he would not join the O. R. T. if I paid his dues, but I found out since that one time he was fired on the Sunbury division, P. R. R., and then came on here and got a job, and when he was found out he and his father-in-law, Conductor Faith, who is a very active member in the P. R. R. M. B. D., went to see the superintendent of the Schuylkill division and fixed things up, and ever since I understand Operator Hoffman stands up for the P. R. R. and nothing else, and it did prove itself when Operator Hoffman was local chairman in the O. R. T. D. A. & S. that he worked for the company and not for the boys. Operator Bause, chairman of the operators in the P. R. R. M. B. D., is another man hunting a good job that his seniority rights can not give to him, and so he is trying to stand in and took the opportunity of belonging to the P. R. R. M. B. D., and no doubt expects to find a good position in this way. It certainly is disgusting, but we will show them a thing or two before they pull any of these stunts off on us I think.

Wishing you success and a bright future, I remain,

Yours, fraternally,

H. F. STEUNK, Local Chairman.

AS TO J. W. KELLY, HADDONFIELD, N. J., AND HIS SECRET WORK ON THE BALTIMORE DIVISION, P. R. R., IN SEPTEMBER AND OCTOBER, 1912, UNDER INSTRUCTIONS OF J. R. T. AUSTON, AND WHILE USING P. R. R. FREE TRANSPORTATION.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 25, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Attached letter from Brother Fidler, dated March 20, 1913, refers to Mr. J. W. Kelly, P. R. R. telegrapher, Haddonfield, N. J., of whom you have other reports. I do not know whether any of our organizers have made any reports to you as to what Kelly did down there around York, although one of the grand division men visited that territory several times last fall. For your information

[Inclosures.]

AS TO PITTING ONE EMPLOYEE AGAINST ANOTHER FOR SHADY PURPOSES, ETC.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 18, 1913.

It will be remembered that the alleged cause of the break between Auston and Jim Tatlow was a request by Auston that Tatlow go to the Baltimore division, P. R. R., and interview certain men, Tatlow refusing. Both Tatlow and Auston have stated to me that Tatlow refused to go and also told Auston that he would not "do things against the O. R. T." (See report of interviews with both.) J. W. Kelly, Haddonfield, N. J., was afterward assigned to that work. The records in P. R. R. headquarters show that J. W. Kelly was relieved from duty at Haddonfield as telegrapher on September 30 and remained away until October 20, 1912. On his return Kelly told telegraphers there (Haddonfield) that he had been down on the Baltimore division, but did not say what the nature of his mission was.

Attached herewith is a letter from Brother T. C. Hunter, Parkton, Md., to Brother Fidler, that refers to Kelly's visit with him.

Also attached herewith is a letter from Brother J. K. Gladfelter, Hanover Junction, Baltimore division, stating that Mr. J. L. Rhorbaugh, agent Shrewsbury, told him of what Mr. Kelly told Rhorbaugh the P. R. R. would do to "break up" the O. R. T. With reference to this I will say that Telegrapher J. P. Connell, Haddonfield, N. J., one of the men who joined the O. R. T. D. A. & S. with Kelly, being promised an immediate advance in wages for so doing in the spring of 1912, states that a man from Haddonfield was sent to J. R. T. Auston's office, Philadelphia, to find out why the advance was not forthcoming, and was told by Auston that Kelly had no authority to make such statements with reference to advance in men's wages. Quite likely the same would be said of Kelly's other statements.

If Kelly's characteristics are wanted I have considerable of it in writing.

PARKTON, March 6, 1913.

Mr. T. E. FIDLER.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Replying to your note of March 3, Mr. Kelly was to see me some time last fall; think it was the latter part of September or first part of October. I don't remember much of what he said, but said nothing to me about company helping him "bust" O. R. T.; but he tried to tell me their organization had more members than the O. R. T., and he was very anxious for my application to join them. He showed me his card, which had his name on it as organizer for the O. R. T. D. A. & S. I told him it was no use to talk to me at all, as my mind was made up as to the right organization. He did not get to see P. S. Talbott, as he was in bed the day he was here, and said he was coming back to see him, but did not. I told him then he may as well save his time as to come back.

I am certainly glad to hear the boys are dropping that crowd, and hope they will all come our way.

Yours, fraternally,

T. C. HUNTER.

HANOVER JUNCTION, March 13, 1913.

Mr. T. E. FIDLER.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am sorry that you were compelled to write your second letter for this information. I never met Mr. Kelly. Mr. J. L. Rohrbaugh, agent at Shrewsbury, told me what Mr. Kelly had told him, but it had slipped my memory, and I was unable to ask him before, as I didn't want him to get suspicious, as he is not in sympathy with the operators' cause. Mr. Kelly told him that the company would spend a certain amount of money to break up the O. R. T. It was either $100,000 or $250,000. If I'm not mistaken, Mr. Kelly gave Mr. Rohrbaugh to understand that the "Pennsy" was back of the new order, but if it were to come to a test Mr. J. L. R. might deny this.

This is about all I can do for you at this time in regard to this. If I can find out any more, will let you know at once.

How are you making out up the line? I hope things will soon come our way.

Fraternally, yours,

J. K. GLADFELTER.

P. S.—One of the linemen told me yesterday that Mr. Kendig wants 175 operators. Looks as if they are expecting trouble.

H. B. PERHAM,

President O. R. T., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Herein find inclosed copy of letter I wrote Brother Miller to-day, which is self-explanatory. We are getting to a very delicate period of the case. I have worked upon the Schuylkill division, and I realize that we will have to handle it with gloves on.

I took a run to this city to-day to confer with Brother Ellis on the situation.

With best wishes, I am,

Yours, fraternally,

PAUL A. WENBICH.

PHILADELPHIA, March 18, 1913.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

General Chairman, 2916 Huntingdon Avenue,
Baltimore, Md.

DEAR BROTHER MILLER: I am in receipt of your letter of recent date and note what you say.

Just as I suspected, Mr. Boyer has been twisted and molded into shape by this so-called general committee and seemed to be very much in a hurry this a. m., claiming to have had considerable business on hand, and consequently not very communicative. He said they presented a claim for readjustment to the management yesterday, and, then, too, there were other rules and regulations pending that were submitted to the management before his election as local chairman of the Schuylkill division that are being held under advisement. He also claimed that he wrote a letter to Senator Blair Lee regarding a supposed a letter he was alleged to have received from L. K. M. that 3,500 men in the telegraph department did not want that law, and Mr. Lee, he says, replied, saying that he never received such a letter to his knowledge; or, if so, same could not be found on his files, or words to that effect.

Mr. Boyer also contradicted your statement regarding our membership on the P. R. R., and says he can show that they represent and have a membership of 2,500 men, etc. I told him he could not show us a membership of over 200 bona fide telegraphers. This he would neither confirm or deny, but consoled himself by saying that he wanted to belong to the organization that could do business with the management and the organization that was getting these things from the coffers of the corporation through nip-and-tuck methods, and that the corporation had inconvenienced themselves by granting the concessions hereinbefore alluded to, or words I understood to that effect. He was filled with the spirit of Mar-Anst-Dolph-a-mania, and I told him that everything they had secured or anything they can ever hope to secure they owe to the consistent organized telegraphers of the North American continent. In view of the fact that we have all the lines scheduled on this continent, with the exception of nine, with 500 miles of trackage or more, it stands to reason and is common logic to suppose that these remaining lines being in the small minority must either grant increases and other concessions from time to time or else stand the consequences of losing many good men. The P. R. R. being bent on breaking up the O. R. T. on that road through the instrument of the D., A. & S., are using that organization to perform that task by handing out these concessions in the name of that organization in order to pull the wool over their eyes and throw the dust into their faces and blind the men. By such tactics "they make things look what they ain't."

This is about all of the conference or interview I had with Mr. Boyer, as he seemed to be in a very big hurry. I made an appointment with him, however, to meet me at the hotel Thursday morning at 9 o'clock. I will get T. E. E. here, and we will try and learn more about their conference. As near as I am able to judge at this time, I am of the opinion that they accepted what the company felt inclined to give them. I do not know whether or not Mr. Boyer will admit this. We will see and let you know later just what we are able to learn in our interview two days hence. He is filled with the spirit and will have to be handled easy. I know.

With best wishes, I am,
Yours, fraternally,

PAUL A. WENBICH.

READING, PA., March 20, 1913.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

2916 Huntingdon Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIB AND BROTHER: As stated in my letter dated the 18th inst., which I inclose herewith, I had an appointment with Mr. Boyer at the Phoenix Hotel, Phoenixville, Pa., for 9 o'clock this a. m., and, as stated therein, I arranged to have Brother Ellis with me. Mr. Boyer put in his appearance at about 9.45. After Brother Ellis registered, we retired to room No. 2, which the clerk assigned him, and immediately got down to business. We found him more communicative than what I did on the 18th, which, in my opinion, is due to several reasons—first, because Brother Ellis was with me; second, on account of Mr. Giles paying him a visit on Wednesday, the 19th; and, third, on account of the sentiment of his fellow telegraphers on the Schuylkill division, which I am advised is vicious, and as one man puts it, "I never heard such a cursing and carrying on since the death of Supt. Moss." Mr. Boyer admitted that the men along the road look upon the adjustment and hand-out as indirectly due to the efforts of the O. R. T., and that most of the men are satisfied that it was done for organizing purposes.

He states that 29 positions on the Schuylkill division were affected by the increase, reaching about 12 offices, and causing more trouble than if nothing had been handed out at all. Mr. Boyer advises us that everything was cocked and primed before the D., A. & S. general committee arrived at Broad Street, as everything was ready in blue print form when the committee arrived at Broad Street. He says that the trouble above referred to is due principally to the fact that it is mostly the higher-priced men that were benefited by the adjustment.

He advised us that the reason he thinks Mr. Giles called to see him was on account of a question he asked one of the committeemen after they were through with the conference. He says he asked one of the committeemen whether he thought it looked like a company order, to which the man replied, "Why, no; does it to you?" and quite naturally says he replied that it did not appear so to him. Boyer says he is of the opinion that this man must have told Giles and probably others concerned, as Giles put the question right at him; and Boyer says he told Giles that to join the O. R. T. was the most remote thing in his mind, and was one of the last things he would think of doing. Mr. Boyer says that Mr. Hoffman and himself arrived in Philadelphia Sunday forenoon, and that Hoffman took him to Auston's office, and that after they had listened to what Auston had to say Hoffman looked at him and said, "You can see now that this is not a company organization."

Mr. Boyer says that Mr. Johnson and Mr. Marr were the only officials of the company present at the conference, and that Auston was not there, but says it was shown before the committee met Johnson and Marr that Auston knew what was to be given the committee, and that either Johnson or Auston stated that if the increase would have been handed out, say, about 10 days later and not at the time it was that the Schuylkill division boys would not have fared as well on account of their recent attitude in voting to get into the O. R. T. and attending the meetings the way they did. He says Mr. Johnson mentioned the O. R. T., saying that he understood that we had several meetings in Reading, and that the management would never meet the O. R. T. Mr. Boyer made the statement that three men were running the D., A. & S., and that those three men are Johnson, Marr, and Auston, but that Johnson was the real head.

During the conference Mr. Boyer states that he presented a rule that he wanted the company to adopt, relating to seniority, and to which Mr. Johnson took exceptions; and that he (Boyer) took occasion to say something in defense of this rule and the Schuylkill division, claiming that there have been discriminations in the past in connection with the assignment of positions. After the exchange of a few remarks Mr. Johnson remarked that he would better not have so much to say, as he was the baby of the committee.

In reply to a question propounded by Brother Ellis, he stated that it appeared to him, and now plainer than ever, that they had him spotted throughout. He says he was cautioned in committee room to leave what transpired there at Broad Street, and requested us several times during our interview to keep different facts to ourselves. He cautioned us particularly not to say anything that he told us that Marr was at Broad Street.

Mr. Boyer also took occasion to say during the course of his remarks that he believed that if a fellow would be crooked enough to accept (or have himself elected) general chairman of that order that he could, or in all probability would, fall into a good position with the P. R. R. He indicated that he could and would in all probability have something more to say a little later that might prove of some worth to us. We let it go at that for to-day, however. Mr. Boyer seems to entertain the idea that he is in a position where he will be able to learn more about the inner circle of matters pertaining to the D. A. & S., but we made it plain to him that he was a marked man, and consequently not very likely that they would let him in on anything.

On account of the previous attitude of Boyer on my visit two days ago being somewhat variant, I did not ask him to write you that letter as you suggested, neither did I ask him whether he wrote you as he had promised or not. He advised us, however, that you sent him a journal. I left him a confidential report of our board of directors bearing on the Marr case. He told us to-day that he wished already that he had never accepted the L. C. of the D. A. & S., and he certainly looked as if he meant just what he said. He seemed to be worried, and appeared the very picture of a very uncomfortable man. He predicts that there will not be a dozen members left in the D. A. S. by the end of April, 1913, if all the men drop that threaten to do so.

I believe that Boyer is on the level, but for the present I think it best to follow the suggestion Brother Ellis made to me to-day, and be careful not to give him any information for a while yet. What say you? Did he write you?

With best wishes and kind personal regards, I am,
Yours, fraternally,

PAUL A. WENRICH, Organizer.

LUTHERVILLE, Md., March 25, 1913.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I was told by H. H. Hubley, operator No. 605, West Princess Street, York, Pa., that Mr. E. Good, operator, living at York, Pa., says that that man Kelly told him he was out organizing for the D. A. S. and the P. R. R. was paying him his salary while off doing so. This man Kelly was also arrested by a company officer at York for trespassing and taken to the train master's office there in York, and after showing his passes and telling who he was, the trainmaster instructed the officer to let him go, as he was all right, which gave him the privilege to continue trespassing, and no other employee is granted that privilege, showing that he has that privilege, contrary to the law of Pennsylvania.

If I get any more will let you know.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. FIDLER.

MAPLETON DEPOT, PA., January 25, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

General Chairman, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your letter of January 23 inst. received, and would say that the reason for me not advising you what was doing on the middle division was account of receiving a letter from you some time ago saying that you would be with me on or about January 23.

My division operator called me to his office on January 19, 1912, and asked if I was still going to be so active in the O. R. T. as I have been in the past. My reply was that so long as it did not conflict with my work for the company I did not see any reason why I should not continue.

He asked about the certificate of authorization, and wanted to know if I was going to put it out among the employees. I told him that I had already put some of them out; but, of course, if he said stop it I would have to listen to him. He told me not to put any more out until I heard from him in a few days. I said that I would obey his request.

He told me that Miller, meaning you, was coming on the middle division next week, meaning the week of January 21, for the purpose of helping me to put out these blanks. I told him that I was very glad for that information, as I thought he could not drop in on me at a better time, and also continued to tell him that I knew nothing of your coming until he had just told me of it.

He asked me what membership I now had on the division, and I told him that he should know that already without asking for it. "Well," he said "I am informed that it is between 70 and 80 per cent." I said, "That is quite right." He said, "Now, Rex, the reason that I brought you up here to-day is to see if you will not drop out of the O. R. T. It is the company's desire that we have as few of our employees as possible in that organization, and don't you think you could withdraw from it." I said I joined the O. R. T. just the same as I employed with the company; I did it voluntary. Also when I joined the O. R. T. I made an investment in taking out their insurance for $1,000, and I did not think that the company would be treating me fair to ask me to drop out of the O. R. T. and have me lose all that I have paid to them on my insurance. He said, "Rex, I see that does not look right, and we will change it somewhat. Can you not cease your activity for that organization? We are going to place our men in this office as opportunity affords itself, and we do not want to have any strings hanging to you when this time comes. You have done wonders for that organization on this division, because only last August you had about 30 per cent in that order, and now you have it increased from 30 to 80 per cent. We have better positions for our employees who are competent of doing such work as you have in the last few months." I told him that I would consider the matter for a few days. I was in his office from 9.30 to 11.45 a. m. Now, the blanks that I referred to were put out between Mapleton and Lewistown. None of the operators west of Mapleton or east of Lewistown knew that there was such a thing out on the division. On Saturday, January 20, the division operator sent a man out of the superintendent's message room to come down along the division and advise the employees that it was the company's desire for them not to sign the authorization blanks that the O. R. T. were putting out, and if they did they were going to get in serious trouble. Many of the boys called on me on Saturday eve and wanted to know what I had that the company got on the job once and was telling the boys not to have anything to do with it. Well, this put me onto their plan at once. It was to have this man cover the division ahead of me; scare the boys not to sign them, so I could not show that I represented the majority of the employees. I sent a letter to my division operator at once, telling him that I would call at his office on Monday a. m. at 9.30. I did not hold any meetings for the purpose of getting out these blanks, because the most of the employees are scared to do any work. Therefore I took this plan: I would wrap 3 blanks in a newspaper and clip it with a clothespin. An office that had a lever man I would put in 5 blanks. Now, before I would leave the office in the morning I would tell the boys to leave a note in the office; that I would throw a paper off of a certain train and to look for it. Now, this plan worked out good, as every man was at the window looking for me from Mapleton to Lewistown, and when the division operator called for me on the 19th I had nearly all of the blanks that I put out on Thursday signed and in my keeping. Before I left the office on Monday, January 22, to see the division operator, by my request, I told all of the offices from Mapleton to Altoona to look for a paper from train No. 85. I threw these blanks off just as fast as the train could take me to Altoona, and saw that a man was looking for it at every office. I was not going to wait for this man to cover the division ahead of me and then get a letter from the company that they did not object to me putting out these blanks. As soon as I entered the division operator's office on Monday he looked very guilty. Before I said a word to him, he said, "Rex, I have not given you a reply about putting out those blanks yet. I was busy and forgot it." I told him that after the action the company had taken that he did not need to take his time in giving me a reply, as I have put all of them out on the division this a. m. He said, "Well, it will take some time for them to get them by mail." I said, "Perhaps so." You see, he was under the impression that I was putting them out by United States mail. I told him that my trip to see him was concerning certain statements that the man he sent along the line made to the boys. I said, first, he told them that those who signed the blanks would get in serious trouble. I said, "If there is any trouble coming I want to know of it." He called the man in his office, and he denied saying anything of that kind. Second, I said, "Did you not ask the boys if they knew who had already signed any of them?" He denied saying anything like that, and said that he just told the boys that it was the company's desire not to sign them. Well, I got him in two lies; also had him and the division operator a little nervous, because they knew that they were guilty and were not acting fair and honest with me, as I was with them. I told the division operator that my main object in seeing him was to thank him for advertising my work to the employees at the company's expense instead of at mine. I told him that the boys were wanting to know what I had, and as he had already told them, the boys were standing true to the order and were waiting to sign my blanks, 80 per cent strong, backing me up and knocking at his door to let him know that they did not approve of the company's move.

I have these blanks out over the entire division and Petersburg branch, and am receiving or getting them back in my care very rapidly; only a couple that I know of are not going to sign them. The "nons" are signing better and quicker than the brothers. The division operator is under the impression that only the members of the O. R. T. are to sign them. He will get his eyes open in a few days, perhaps, after they are all signed and back in my care.

I have not held any meetings since I was at Washington on account of getting knocked out by that injury, and also have two patrolmen watching my work every night. I am in a tight pinch, but will do all that I can. I am very sorry that you could not be here with us at this date, because I was building upon you getting here about the 23d and set things booming on the east end for me. I can call a meeting now any time, but the question is, the west end is the stronger, and they want a meeting that they can attend. The east end is very weak and needs to be revived, and the few boys that belong to the order that work on the east end say that I should come down there. This question

I was going to leave for you to settle, as I thought you would hold a series of meetings at different points along the line. The way I understand our rules made at Washington, D. C., is that we can only hold one meeting a month. If I was granted permission to hold meetings on the middle division on east and west end once a month I would take two days off and hold morning and night meetings at each end. You see, the boys on here were always used to having two places on the division to go to meetings, and would not go. Now they see their mistake, and they are after me to hold them on east and west end once a month. I told them that you were coming to see me in a short time, and that they would get a chance to attend all the meetings that they were looking for.

I showed Brother Sneath your letter to me requesting him to make a write up for the journal; he said that he would do it.

T. G. Beaver is wanting meetings on the east end to do a little revival work and wants me to go along with him at the expense of the O. R. T. for both of us. Now, you see that I can't arrange to do that. I think that it would be best for you to come to this division just as soon as you can arrange, instead of waiting until February 15. I was just taking you at your word that you would be here in January, and have been doing all of the chasing up and down the line to get what information I could for you that would be a benefit to you and the meetings.

Brother McGrail wrote to me while I was off sick, saying that he was willing to come to Tyrone to help me to put out the blanks. Now, you see, I have the blanks out and coming in and have not held any meetings, which is so much more for the treasury and more work for me. It is not a good thing to have too many in the game, because they are liable to get scared and lay down on you. Now, you see how I beat the company with the blanks, where if I had had meetings and given them out to the boys to distribute over the division, they may have got scared and not given any more of them out. That would have given me ten times more work to get after them to finish their work than when I did it myself. Now, to explain my point is: If I had given some to M. L. Minick to put out on the east end I would have got stung. I was down to see Minick on Tuesday eve. I asked him for his signed blank. He said that he had not signed it yet, because that man from the superintendent's message room was down to see him personally, and that he was studying about signing it. I have not yet received his. Now, cases like this would have crippled the work had I put it out for the boys to do. In a few days, if you do not advise me that you are coming before February, I will call a meeting at the point on the division where I do not get the boys to sign the blanks on account of getting scared out and explain the matters to them, and what ones come to the meeting I will inform them who have not yet signed the blanks and set them to get them to sign and send them to me. Brother Fetzner has sent me all of his correspondence and blanks. He only had 34 blanks signed. I don't know how many are on his roster; I will write to him and ascertain. Brother Kacy sent me two copies of the Philadelphia division wage scale and a copy of his superintendent's reply. I will get in touch with Brother Melchor and see how he is doing with getting the blanks in. I have not heard anything from the Schuylkill division man, but will drop him a few lines at once.

Yours, fraternally,

A. L. REX.

Care O. R. T. 35, Middle Division.

P. S.—Just a word more. The division operator said that he could not understand why the employees put this matter in the hands of my committee instead of first coming to him. I said, "Perhaps I can explain that to you in this way. You have 249 men on your roster. Now, suppose they did not give this work to my committee and would all come to see you personally?" At that point he said he would never receive them; that it would be impossible for him. I said, "Very well; you don't want to meet their committee." He said, "No; I don't." I said, "That's it. You say you won't meet your employees or their committee. Now, you must do one or the other." Well, he saw his mistake and tried all ways to cover it, but I held him to what he had just said.

MIDDLE DIVISION, P. R. R.

All employees in the telegraph department, union and nonunion:

You are requested to sign the inclosed authorization blank, for the purpose of the local chairman on the Middle Division, to show that he has the authority to represent you before the general superintendent for the consideration of a wage scale and schedule. Please sign and forward them to A. L. Rex, Mapleton Depot, Pa., as soon as possible by United States mail.

Yours, fraternally,

COMMITTEE REPRESENTING EMPLOYEES IN TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

This letter was put in each pack that I threw off.

[Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Wilmington Division, No. 58.]

NORTH EAST, MD., April 12, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER, General Chairman.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Referring to your letter of April 10, instant, relative to being approached by officials of the company and trying intimidate the local chairmen, I wish to state that on the morning of December 22, 1911, Assistant Division Operator C. J. Rudolph came to me on train No. 280 and asked me if I was still local chairman of the Maryland Division, and when I replied that I was, he said he was sorry, as he had hoped that I had not been reelected under the new system division, and said he thought it would not do me any good to serve as chairman, and that the company would probably make trouble for me if we should attempt to force recognition for the O. R. T., and said he had hoped that I had given up the local chairmanship, as I had been a long time in the service and he would not like to see me get in trouble; also said the company would fight us and would use the new order against us, and said they expected the new order to help them out; said that the opposition was coming from Superintendent of Telegraph Johnson and that the general manager would uphold him.

Approached again on train No. 280 on January 15, 1912, and practically went over same ground; said the local chairmen of New York and Philadelphia divisions had resigned, and endeavored to get me to do the same, and intimated that if it came to a show-down the company would discharge me; and said they would not meet us on account of our being affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and said the company would expect the new order to furnish men to fill our places in case we should go out on strike.

Approached again on train No. 280 on January 19 by C. J. Rudolph, who practically went over same ground and tried to induce me to give up the local chairmanship.

Approached again on train No. 280 on February 10, 1912, by Mr. Rudolph, and he said that Supt. Whitney had called him in his office and informed him that all the local chairmen but six had resigned, and said to him, our man will have to resign as local chairman. I told him to tell Mr. Whitney that I positively refused to resign the chairmanship and that I reserved the right to do as I pleased when off duty. He has not mentioned the matter to me since.

Yours, fraternally,

H. B. ABBISON,
Local Chairman.

PHILADELPHIA, May 22, 1913.

DEAR SIR: Found your card in mail box. If you are in town you can call Friday night, 23d, after 8.45 p. m., as I don't get home until 8.45 p. m. and there won't be anyone here to let you in, as the family will be away. If not, most any night will do after 8.45—to-night if you get this in time.

I can't call at the Windsor, as some one is sure to see me, etc. (Meaning P. R. R. detectives.)

Yours,

A. W. STOUT,

MESSRS. J. F. MILLER, Chairman O. R. T., Baltimore, Md., and
G. E. NIGHTINGALE, General Secretary O. R. T., Newfield, N. J.

DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: By request of yourselves I submit the following statement as told to me by Brother M. Kunin as having been made to him by one

G. C. Williams: "The company has got you marked up; so have they Austin. I get my orders from New York, and the company pays me for coming around."

This G. C. Williams was supposed to be operator in "PR" Camden at the time, and these words took place in "JN" signal tower, Mount Holly, at the time Brother Kunin was on duty.

HAROLD G. AUSTIN.

DISCRIMINATION.

LUTHERVILLE, Md., April 21, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: In answer to yours of the 16th, will say that I bid in one of the positions as extra operator in "B" office (superintendent's office) that was advertised on March 19, and was second oldest man making application for same, according to my seniority rights, but on April 3 I was called to the office by Mr. Donnelly, division operator, and was told by him that I stood second for the extra work in "B" office, but was barred from same on account of being a member of the O. R. T. I said to him, "How about it if I withdraw?" He said: "That is up to you, but you can not work in that office while you are a member." I told him I was a paid-up member until June 30, and if that was to bar me from this office I would have to stand it. He did not tell me I would have to withdraw from the order, but said I would not be promoted while I was a member of same. On April 5 he took another operator (Lanius) in this office ahead of me, and I wrote and asked him why he had done it. (Attached find a copy of letter.) On April 9 I was again called to the office, this time by Assistant Division Operator Kendig. When I went in Mr. Donnelly got my letter that I had written him and began reading it to me, and said: "Now, Smith, in this letter you want to know why I brought Lanius in 'B' office ahead of you, and I want to tell you now, as I told you a few days ago, you can not work in 'B' office while you are a member of the O. R. T." I told him all right; that, as I was a paid-up member to June 30, I could not do anything further. Mr. Kendig then spoke up and said, "Why can't you get a withdrawal card?" I told him if he would give it to me in writing that I would have to get out of the order in order to get promoted I would see what I could do about it. This he emphatically refused to do. About this time Mr. Kendig got up and went out and stayed about five or eight minutes and came back and told Mr. Donnelly that they would have to have a man for "B" office that night and would put me in there pending the superintendent's decision. He then took me over to "B" office to get my orders from the manager of the office, and on our way over there he said to me, "Now, Smith, we are going to put you in here to-night, but if we ever hear of you taking any part in or attending any O. R. T. meetings you will be discharged at once." I thought this was pretty tough after a man giving them 16 years of loyal service as I have done to be treated in this manner.

Yours, very respectfully,

G. M. SMITH.

BALTIMORE, April 23, 1912.

J. F. MILLER, Esq.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Yours of a few days ago received and contents noted. In reply to your inquiry as to why I dropped out of the O. R. T. would give you the following. This is not an exact copy of what took place verbatim, but is a sketch of the incident, and the facts given are entirely correct and worded as nearly as possible to remember them:

On January 11, or possibly the 10th, I was approached by Mr. Kendig, our assistant division operator, and told that it was desired by Mr. Latrobe, the superintendent, that I drop the O. R. T. I then asked him if he had told D. L. Koller, our secretary, that Mr. Latrobe said that if he did not drop out of the O. R. T. he would remove him from "B" office, and he said, "No; he did not say that, and he did not think Mr. Latrobe said it either; so after talking about it for some few minutes, and not being able to come to an agreement on it, he suggested that I go see Mr. Latrobe about it. This I did at once, and Mr. Latrobe said to me, "Jacoby, I want you out of the O. R. T. I will not have any man in 'B' office that is a member of that organization." I then asked him if I did not get out of the order whether it was true that he would remove me from the office? He said, "No; I won't say that, but I will say that I won't have any man in that office that is a member of the O. R. T." So after talking over the matter for about 30 minutes I left him with this answer: "I will think over the matter and let you know my decision." I left the matter go until February 8th or 9th. Then I was notified that Mr. Kendig wished to see me. I saw him down on the concourse of the station, and he opened the matter about the withdrawal from the O. R. T. with this assertion: "Jacoby, Mr. Latrobe says he wants you to get out of the O. R. T.; and do it at once or he will take you out of 'B' office." I asked him if he was sure that that was the way Mr. Latrobe expressed himself, and he said "Yes; those were the very words he spoke." I then asked him if he thought Mr. Latrobe would really remove me if I did not drop the O. R. T., and he said "Yes; I am sure he will, for he is a very determined man in matters of this kind." He also said Mr. Latrobe wished me to get a withdrawal card so as to show him I had really withdrawn. I answered that neither Mr. Latrobe or Mr. Donnelly or any other official had any reason or cause to doubt my word, and that if I said I would withdraw that I certainly would do so, and that furthermore I was in arrears in dues now for the present quarter and could only get a withdrawal card by paying up the semiannual dues, and that I would not pay this amount for a withdrawal card for Mr. Latrobe, Mr. Donnelly, or anyone else. Then Mr. Kendig, after asking what the amount would be, said, "I don't blame you for not wanting to pay that amount for the withdrawal card." Then he said, "Well, just drop a letter stating that you have withdrawn, and I will show that to Mr. Latrobe as a verification that you have really done so." I answered, "You just write me a letter stating what you want and I will answer it. As there has been no writing about this matter as yet you will have to take my word for it until you write me." I have not seen a letter from him yet.

Several days after this I was on a car going home, and Mr. Kendig got on it and immediately approached me in the matter as to what I had done in it. I said, "Nothing at all." He said, "What do you mean by nothing at all? Have you acted in the matter, or what do you mean?" I told him I had allowed myself to become suspended for nonpayment of dues and that I was at the present time not a member of the O. R. T. He then said, "You are better off, as it would not do us any good to belong to it." Then I immediately told him that I differed in opinion about that and that we could not agree along that line if we talked until the day of judgment, and that I preferred not to discuss it with him. He had my word for it that I did not belong to the order, and that ended the incident. So we commenced to talk about other things. This is about the meat of the matter. Of course, there was much more said during the two meetings, but that is about the summing up of all that occurred.

Hoping I have set myself straight before you in the matter when I say that I was compelled to either drop the O. R. T. or be taken out of the office, and that, owing to the drain upon my resources for the 10 months that I was in Texas for my health, I was compelled to take a step that was very disagreeable to me. I may be censured for the action that I have taken in the matter, but that is a matter that every man must settle for himself. My conscience is clear on the matter, and thus I feel as near satisfied as a man can be who was compelled to do a disagreeable action through a power that he was unable to overcome.

Thanking you for your kind inquiry about the family, and saying that they are all well and hope you and yours are the same, I beg to remain,

Yours, respectfully,

GREENWOOD, DEL., April 29, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

General Chairman O. R. T., Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: As long as we moped along under the local-division plan our superior officers on the Delaware division gave us something like a square deal, but since we have awakened from our slumberings and adopted the system-division plan they have used their time both day and night in gunning for O. R. T. men on the road. Our division operator has been far more active, however, in the game of intimidation than any of the other officials, as he has used the company's time going from place to place holding conferences with the men and using all kinds of argument and coercion, and even threats, in his effort to force us out of the O. R. T.

We are being discriminated against on account of our affiliation with the order, while nonmembers with enough against them to discharge 25 members do as they please. On one occasion they declared a tower closed when it was moved in order to give a man a job he was not rightfully entitled to. Our men who have been promoted to the superintendent's telegraph office at Wilmington have been forced out of the order, thereby causing them to lose their life insurance policy, which protected their families in case of death. On the strength of this they are forced into spying and doing detective work for the company.

Is it not possible for a good man, who gives the company honest, efficient service every day, to work on the Pennsylvania Railroad and be a member of the O. R. T. without being threatened with dismissal and the refusal of promotion when his turn comes?

I would be glad if you would take this matter up for investigation.

Very truly, yours,

THORNDYKE ROE, Block Operator.

CORBETT, MD., May 10, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER.

MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your welcome letter at hand. Glad to hear from you again. I am not very busy at the present time; only made nine days last month, but think I may fare better this month. I don't think there is any show for me now in this department. I am endeavoring to get a new start in a different direction; can explain better when I see you again. That $4 rate surely ought to make the "nons" sit up and take notice. I will have my cousin now in a very short time. It seems as though I have been losing track of things since I lost my old job at "BA" and can hardly keep up to date. Send us some news now and then; we need something to help us keep up the fighting spirit. I am inclosing you some remarks from conversations with the assistant division operator. According to his idea he doesn't see anything for us, but I told him he had to show me. At least, I gave him to understand that much. These remarks are a little long, but I had to send them that way in order to include all the little points of interest.

I trust you are in better health by this time. Don't work too hard, Frank. We all appreciate what you are doing. I want you to accept my appreciation as an individual.

Trust I may be able to see you soon again and have a good long talk.

With many wishes for your success, I remain,

Fraternally, yours,

EDW. C. MERRYMAN, Jr.

March 18, 1912, as I was about to go on duty at "B" office, Mr. Kendig approached me and asked me if I was a member of the O. R. T. I told him I was, and he advised me to get out, saying I would benefit myself by doing so, and intimated there would be more show for me if I did so. I told him I did not feel that way about it, and as my time was getting short our conversation came to an end.

Sometime after this I had occasion to see him on a matter of business, and when we were through he called me out in the hall for a personal talk, and the following conversation took place; he said: "Now, to be perfectly honest with you, you are standing in your own light by remaining in the O. R. T." And he said: "Mr. Latrobe asked me yesterday if you belonged to the order, and I told him (although I knew you did) I was not sure, but would find out. I withheld this information from him, because I know if he knew you were a member of the order he would not let you work one day in 'B' office, but now he will be asking again, and I will have to tell him."

I was approached several times after this and asked to get out of the order. One time he said: "I can tell you honest, the company is not going to recognize the O. R. T. and you men are only making trouble for yourselves."

On Saturday, May 4, 1912, while working day duty in "F," Calvert station, Mr. Kendig stopped in to see me. He brought up the question of getting out of the order. During the conversation he said: "The general manager is not going to receive your committee," and said he understood our committee tried to arrange for an audience with the G. M. through the superintendent of telegraph, but were turned down. He went on to say: "You people are not going to get anything, for there is always somebody fighting you." I said: "Yes, I know there is a fake order by the name of O. R. T. D. A. & S., etc., trying to put up a fight, and you know where they are getting their support." "Oh, yes," he said, "I acknowledge the company is supporting them, and that is the reason you will not be recognized." He said, "What did the O. R. T. ever get you?" In reply I asked, "Did not the O. R. T. win the 8-hour day for the men?" And he said, "Yes, and that is about all." I told him if he O. R. T. never wins anything else I am willing to support it the balance of my days as an operator for that.

I then said, "There is no getting around the fact, organization is the workman's only salvation." "I acknowledge that," he said, "and if I was in a position to support an order in my line of business I would not hesitate a minute to become a member." Also told him our order was not here solely to compel the company to grant us a living wage, but to better our conditions in general; to look after one another's needs, and share one another's burdens; and to help those in need. And also told him our motto was, "Give our employer the best service we are capable of rendering." The subject was then changed.

FRENCHTOWN, N. J., May 14, 1912.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,
General Chairman.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The following is in substance the conversation that took place between the division operator, Mr. W. H. Wilmot, and myself relative to my membership and activity in the O. R. T. on the three different occasions that I was summoned before him in regard to this matter:

In the latter part of December, 1911, I came to his office at his request. He said to me, in substance, "You are a member of the O. R. T.?"

"Yes."

"Your name has been handed to me as a paid organizer and very active."

"No, sir; I am no paid organizer nor never have been; neither have I ever received a cent from the order."

After a few general remarks derogatory to the order, such as the affiliation to the American Federation of Labor, etc., he concluded by saying, "Now, it would be very unpleasant to me to be compelled to suspend or dismiss you on this account, and I would be pleased to have you say to me now that you would cancel your membership. I made some reply about being paid up to December 31 and would think it over."

Some two or three weeks later, after I had been elected local chairman, I received another message to come to his office. On entering he said, "I am told that you are local chairman, and if this is the case you might as well quit right now," striking the table with his fist.

I replied, "Yes; I see I have; but I have not as yet decided to act. I do not think I will quit in any event, but would it not be well to hold the matter in abeyance until I decide? My membership expired on December 31, and I have not as yet renewed." He appeared to be satisfied, and this was about all of importance at this meeting.

On March 4 I received the accompanying letter, after my name had been published in the directory of the Telegrapher as local chairman.

On April 10 last I received a letter to come to the office next day. On entering the office he took from his letter file one of my circular letters that I had sent to the "Nons," appealing to them to enroll themselves on the right side and to turn down the fake concern. He said, "I see you are still active in the O. R. T. after you told me your membership had expired December 31."

I replied, "Yes; but I renewed it; I changed my mind."

He said, "Well, now, I would have thought a great deal better of you if you had told me you had changed your mind and not have me believe you were not a member."

I replied, "Now, Mr. Wilmot, I can not see where that would make any difference. I consider I have just as much right to belong to the O. R. T. as an engineer has to his brotherhood; a fireman, a conductor, a brakeman to theirs; but," I said, "if I were working for the D. A. & S. as others are doing on the divisions, would you object?"

"No," he said, "the company recognizes the D. A. & S."

Then I entered into a statement, wherein the company, for reasons that the operators were familiar with, wished to turn down a committee representing the majority and recognizing a committee representing the minority, and that the operators would not stand for it. After some argument on these questions, I was dismissed, no threats being made against me this time.

Yours, fraternally,

J. G. SIMANTON,
Local Chairman.

DEAR SIR: Are you aware that the St. Louis O. R. T. Journal is printing your name as the local chairman for the old Belvidere division? You told me you were not a member after January 1. Why do you allow the use of your name?

W. H. WILMOT,
Assistant Division Operator.

Mr. J. F. MILLER, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Yours of recent date received, and in reply will say that some time last December I was in the division operator's office and he, A. A. Witter, asked if I was a member of O. R. T. I said "No," to get something out of him. He at once congratulated me on not being a member. Said the insurance was a grand thing, but that was all. Advised me the O. R. T. D. O. & S. was the one to belong to, and handed me a card of J. C. Crouse, who came over the road in a week or two with an annual pass riding freight trains. I put all the boys wise on this branch and he sure got his calls from every one he approached—with no results. Then on January 24 he came to my office about 9.45 a. m. and said he understood I was booming the O. R. T. I said, "I don't know." He said he would advise me to drop it or I would lose my job with the company. I said, "I might as well belong to O. R. T. as the one he recommended." He said there was a great lot of difference; that the O. R. T. was antagonistic to the company. He then left, advising me to think over the matter seriously. My relief day was on January 25, and I had also asked off on the 26th, having asked five days ahead. He said he understood I was going out to solicit for O. R. T. Of course I told him what I thought of that. I did not get off my extra day asked for until I went to his office about it, on the 25th. This man retires July 31. I will also call your attention to the fact that vacancy in superintendent's message office here has always been a fight every time a new man goes in, there being a good bit of extra work there during vacations. About six weeks ago he advertised extra work, and a fellow bid it in, or rather they coaxed him to, and one of the youngest men on roster has been working it. This is not right. I was the next oldest bidder on this position. For some unknown reason he is knocking on me.

Hoping to hear of your meeting with the management soon, and that all matters have been satisfactorily adjusted, I am,

Fraternally, yours,

A. P. WOODBRING.

FRANKLINVILLE, N. Y., September 18, 1913.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,
2916 Huntingdon Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I wish to call your attention to the following facts: That I am informed that Mr. D. C. Daley has filled a political position at Albany, N. Y., from January 15 until July 1, 1913, but whether or not he drew a yearly salary or not, I am unable to state. If it is the case, however, I would suggest that the proper commission be informed to investigate whether it is lawful for an official of a railroad company to accept a political position with the State government favoring the interests of railroad corporations, and as a reward for so doing he is retained in the service of the Pennsylvania Co. and resumed the duty of division operator on July 1, 1913. It might be well to have this investigated, to ascertain whether or not he is drawing a yearly salary from the New York State government. Whether or not it is lawful for an official of a railroad company to accept a political position with the government without first resigning from the railroad company, and to find out just what the position was that he filled.

This man above mentioned is very active in politics and gives his employees very little satisfaction or justice. He is very antagonistic to union labor, and in some cases has made threats and bold insinuations to frighten his employees to resign from labor organization. This for your information.

Yours, fraternally,

BURT SUTTON.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,
General Chairman, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The following may be of interest to you: On or about September 6 Mr. D. C. Daley, division operator Buffalo division of the P. R. R., and my employer, came to Cadiz (tower where I am working) on train at 6.30 a. m. Directly upon his arrival the subject of organization was brought up by this statement that he made, "Sutton, I heard that you are a hot-headed O. R. T. man." I admitted that I was a member of that organization, that my dues were paid, and that I intended to remain a member. For nearly an hour and thirty minutes we were engaged in an argument, during which time organization was discussed in general. I remember distinctly the following statements made. He said that I did not understand the fundamental principles of labor organization, that he being older than me and my employer he was in position to advise me. He asked me if I did not realize that he could discharge any man he chose to within a week and if the superintendent so recommended; that the officials of the O. R. T. in the general offices at St. Louis were nothing more or less than a bunch of grafters and more interested in their salaries than the welfare of the members; that if I went out on a strike (as you will remember, a strike was pending) I should consider myself discharged and that I would be a martyr to the cause. That after I assured him that my ballot had been somewhat delayed he said that he would learn within two hours after my ballot reached Philadelphia which way I voted, for or against a strike. He stated that the P. R. R. Co. had men stationed at our headquarters for that purpose. He requested me to withdraw from the O. R. T., and that if I could not see my way clear without belonging to an organization he would suggest that I join the O. R. T. D. A. & S. He said that if the members of our organization was called out on a strike the company could continue business on the Buffalo division main line with a very few offices, perhaps five or six. This division is one hundred and twenty-one miles long; also stated that only three offices would be required on the Rochester branch, ninety-nine miles of track. He said that men were in readiness to fill my position and that if I ever went out on a strike that I could never be reinstated in the service of the P. R. R.

On or about September 23 Mr. Daley called again and organization was brought up the second time. While I was busy at the office, as I was on duty at the time, he went to my house and had a conversation with my wife. He soon, however, returned to the office, and during the conversation that we had at this time he (Mr. Daley) said that if I resign or withdraw from the Order of Railroad Telegraphers he would stand to my back so long as he could render me any assistance. The title to my house was in question at this time and efforts were being made by the company, through the section foreman, to eject me therefrom. Mr. Daley assured me that he was big enough and man enough to fight those persons who were making the effort to have me ejected from the premises and that he would guarantee that I would remain unmolested if I would resign from the O. R. T., as he would make no effort in my behalf so long as I remained a member.

I immediately had a lease drawn up to lease the ground that the house stood on and paid the farmer who owns the land all the back rent due on same. This action on my part settled the right I had to remain on the premises as far as the company was concerned, as I have not heard any comment on the matter, nor were there any more efforts made to remove me from the premises. This effort to have me withdraw from the O. R. T. proved a complete failure.

You will notice in each of the above cases I was strenuously requested to withdraw from organized labor, but as the right to belong to a labor organization is a personal privilege any person has a right to expect I intend to remain loyal to the order. However, I do not approve of my employer taking the above course in trying to have me withdraw from organization.

I am unable to say just what action will be taken next, but I assure you that I attend strictly to my duty to the railroad company at all times, and for the division operator to come to me, as I have stated in the above, he is doing me a very great injustice, in view of the good service that I have rendered at this office.

This for your information. With very best wishes, I am,
Yours, fraternally,

B. SUTTON.

[The Order of Railroad Telegraphers. Pennsylvania Railway system, division No. 17.]

KEATING SUMMIT, PA., April 27, 1914.

Mr. J. F. MILLER,

General Chairman O. R. T., System Division 17.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Mr. D. C. Daley, division operator of the Buffalo division, called me on the telephone about 2 p. m. Thursday, April 23, and asked me if I could get on No. 51 and meet him in Olean, N. Y., on arrival, as he was coming to Olean on No. 44 from Buffalo, N. Y., and wanted to see me a few minutes; also saying he would stop train No. 56, an express train for Philadelphia, Pa., to let me off coming home.

I met him in Olean, N. Y., on arrival of train No. 51. He immediately approached me on the subject of being an O. R. T. member. He said, "I understand you are an agitator for the O. R. T. on the Buffalo division. You know the P. R. R. does not recognize the O. R. T. nor will they recognize them in the future. We do not want the men from St. Louis coming over here telling us what to do," how much the P. R. R. should pay the operators; that the P. R. R. knew what their offices were worth and how much they should pay better than the men from St. Louis, and that we would get our proportion of a raise when the company could give a raise.

He said, "You can not get promotion and expect any favors from the P. R. R. if you stay in the O. R. T." I said, "Why don't you talk to the O. R. T. D. A. & S. men and tell them same as you do the O. R. T. men." He said, "They are our men; we can talk and reason with them, and they know what we can do." I asked him if he did not belong to the O. R. T. at one time, and he said, "Yes; I was chief telegrapher in Olean, N. Y., when we had a membership of about 124, and when we had a meeting in Olean, a bunch of them would come into the meeting and get drunk, and I never was more disgusted with anything in my life than I was to belong to them; that the majority of the O. R. T. men were boozers and boomers, and the most of them carried a card to show some operator to get a quarter or so; we have them come in and stick a card in the window to the operators in 'BF' office, Buffalo, and ask them for a quarter; of course you will find a 'non' once in a while the same way."

I told him when he had a promotion for me I could withdraw from the O. R. T. if necessary to get the position until such time that I wished to renew my membership, and he said, "If you do not get out now you will not be considered for promotion."

He said, "It will not be many years when labor organizations will not be recognized in the world, and when it comes and you fellows have learned the lesson you will come back to the company and beg for a job."

Just as I was leaving he said, "Then you'd rather buck the corporation from which you get your bread and butter and listen to those fellows from St. Louis." I said, "Yes, sir." He said, "Then you will be put on a list as an agitator, and you need not look for any promotion or favors from the company."

Local Chairman Buffalo Division, System Division 17.

Mr. T. E. FIDLER.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: A few days after the last increase for D. Y. office was granted, Mr. John Kerl called to see me and to inform me that they had received an increase for us, and while in conversation he told me if I did not drop the order that my position was at stake. I told him that if my service had not been satisfactory they would have discharged me long ago instead of retaining me for 23 years.

Yours, truly,

H. D. ELLENBERGER.

DEAR SIR: About March 25, 1912, Operator John Kerl, of New Freedom, called on me at "J" tower, when the following conversation passed between us, he saying: "You heard of the increase in pay effective at 'J' tower March 1." I replied: "Have no official information." He said: "I am here officially to inform you. Also that credit must be given the O. R. T. D. A. & S. for getting this raise. Furthermore if you are a member of the O. R. T., you are to withdraw and join the O. R. T. D. A. & S. or resign your position with the company." I replied: "That may be all right, but I am not alarmed, and when it comes to that there will probably be some one else have something to say."

Mr. T. E. FIDLER,

3415 North Twenty-second Street, Tioga, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: In regards to your letter to H. W. Sutton dated August 23, 1912, concerning any statements made by any division official or Mr. Kerl about joining the O. R. T. D. A. & S., Mr. John Kerl approached me some time ago and said that if I did not drop out of the O. R. T. that I would lose my position, and that if I cared to prove this statement to write to Mr. Gamble Latrobe, superintendent, and he would tell me the same thing. Mr. Kerl also said that he was doing some organizing for the O. R. T. D. A. & S. at the same time.

I am sure you can get this same statement from a big number of the rest of the boys along the line.

Yours, respectfully,

C. C. SUTTON.

THE DAUPHIN,

Mr. T. E. ELLIS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I have been told by Mr. G. Magee, operator, Baltimore, that he applied to Mr. James Donnelly, division operator, Baltimore division, P. R. R., for position as telegraph operator, which was given him, and after filling out all necessary papers for the position Mr. Donnelly "asked me if I was a member of the O. R. T. I told him I was. He then told me he could not hire me then and could not do anything for me unless I withdrew from the O. R. T. I then made application for withdrawal card and then showed the letter to Mr. Donnelly and he said he did not want me to do that; just wanted me to not pay up and drop out. That was after showing him that letter. I was given a position."

Mr. H. B. PERHAM, Washington.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Perhaps you are not acquainted with the situation on the Belvidere division—a part of the Trenton division, P. R. R. Just before the institution of system division 17 it is claimed that Callahan, local chairman, Belvidere, disorganized the men by telling them he was told to leave the O. R. T. or be dismissed, and it is said he added to the men that they also would be discharged if they did not leave the order. The men now are to be disabused of the idea that they will be again betrayed if they join us. Added to this is the presence on the division of 16 working O. R. T. D. A. & S. people, but the Belvidere is the only part of the Trenton division thus effected.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,

To whom it may concern:

I, W. W. Glasgow, while in Pittsburgh, Pa., on October 29, 1912, I went to the office of the division operator, Mr. Murphy, of the Pittsburgh division, and asked for a position as telegraph operator on the above division. The reason of my calling at his office was based upon a letter that I had received from Mr. Murphy, stating that he could use me providing I was competent of working an interlocking office on a four-track system. When I appeared before Mr. Murphy personally on the above date I was taken in the message office and examined on through wires. After this examination, I took the copies and presented to the clerk of Mr. Murphy for inspection. Everything seemed favorable. The clerk then said that Mr. Murphy desired to speak to me. The clerk then took me into Mr. Murphy's office. Upon entering the above office Mr. Murphy saw that I wore an O. R. T. button and asked me if I was a member of the above-mentioned order. I replied that I was. He then said: "We have been having trouble with the O. R. T. on our division. We are having telephones placed in our offices, and in a short time we will not be beholding to the O. R. T. or to telegraph operators for their service, and I do not think that it would be advisable for us to hire any more O. R. T. men on this division." He asked me what division of the O. R. T. that I belonged to, and I told him Division 31, or the Missouri Pacific. He said: "I expect that they are solid on that division and that you were required to belong to the O. R. T. to work on the Missouri Pacific. I told him that it was. I then asked Mr. Murphy if that was all he had to say, and if he could not give me work, and he said: "That is all." I thanked him and walked out of his office.

I overheard the chief clerk to Mr. Murphy tell an operator that was sick for several days, that he had no one to relieve him, and that he needed about 15 operators, and that he would have to keep on duty. This conversation was over the telephone.

PHILADELPHIA, April 26, 1913.

TO PAUL D. HEUBICH.

DEAR SIR: I am very sorry to tell you that I can not afford to go into the O. R. T., as I have so much to pay out now it would swamp me if I went into the O. R. T. I trust you will keep the conversation and the notes that you got from me secret, as it would hurt me if they got out.

Thanking you for your trouble, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

H. L. DESTLER.

P. S.—I will not be able to go into the O. R. T. at any time, so you can cross my name off that paper that I signed.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: See attached note from Brother A. L. Rex, dated April 29, 1913, in relation to what Brother J. F. J. O'Connor, 1028 Spruce Street, Camden, N. J., said to him about an interview that he had with the clerk of the division operator, P. R. R., Camden, N. J.

Brother Fred. Johnson, Hornerstown, N. J., lately told Brother Rex that he is next to go into the train dispatcher's office, P. R. R., at Camden; that not long ago Mr. Wampole, clerk to the division operator, called him to headquarters and asked him if he belonged to the O. R. T. Johnson told him that he did. Wampole told him that they had no objection to the men out on the road belonging to the O. R. T., but O. R. T. men would not be permitted to work in the dispatcher's office.

Brother Rex states that when he solicited the membership of Mr. A. W. Dann, Camden, N. J., in the O. R. T., Mr. Dann replied that he would be a damn fool to join the O. R. T., inasmuch as he is in line for work in "CF" office, Camden; that if he joined the order he would get no work in "CF" and would be taking "bread and butter out of his own mouth." The same old story as comes from practically all over the system.

T. E. E.:

While talking to Brother J. F. J. O'Connor, 1025 Spruce Street, Camden, N. J., said that a few days ago he was called to the office at Camden, and that the division operator's clerk asked him if he was a member of the O. R. T. O'Connor replied that he was paid up to June 30. The clerk called O'Connor's attention to the fact that, according to his seniority, he was next to work in superintendent's office, and further stated that they had no objections to the boys along the line belonging to the O. R. T., but Broad Street would not permit them to let O. R. T. boys work in superintendent's office, and in case they would permit any to work in the office that were in the O. R. T., as soon as Broad Street would learn the fact they would demote them at once.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: See attached letter from Brother J. H. Austin, assistant local chairman, Trenton Division, P. R. R., with reference to what Brother Fred Johnson, Hornerstown, N. DELANCO, N. J., April 30, 1913.

BROTHER ELLIS:

I want to give you a little information, but I was told confidentially not to tell it, but I am going to tell you and you can go see him if you desire, but don't let him know I told you or I won't get any more out of him. Brother Fred Johnson, of Harnerstown, N. J., works third trick at "B. J.," Mount Holley. I was talking to him on the Mount Holly station Monday night. I saw he wanted to tell me something by his actions. He said this: "I was called on the phone by one of the dispatchers, Mr. McCabe, that I had a chance of going in the dispatcher's office, and come down, Stanley Woompool—that's division operator's assistant—wants to see you." He went down and saw him. He took him in his office and said, "Johnson, there is room for one man in D. S. Camden dispatcher's office, and you are in line for it, but you know you belong to the O. R. T. and you can not belong to that and work in there." He said, "Now, Johnson, I know how you feel about it, but that's the company's orders. We don't want any of our men to belong to it anywhere but out on the road. We can not help it, but you can belong to the D., A. & S.," he said.

So Johnson said to me: "Now, I suppose if I go in there and drop the O. R. T. I will be a sucker in the opinion of the men out on the road." I said, "Yes;" but he said "I hate like hell to see all the rest going in ahead of me, and just because I belong to that I can not go in there." I think that means, the way I take it, that he is going to drop us and go in there by his actions now.

If the information is of any use to you use it, but don't let Johnson know I told you, see. Probably I will get more. How are things? Best wishes.

Yours, fraternally,

J. H. AUSTIN, A. L. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Brother Rex reports that Brother O. R. Simmers, Phoenixville, Pa, stated to him that Division Operator J. C. Moran, P. R. R., Schuylkill division, Reading, Pa., recently said to him after having asked Simmers if he had joined the O. R. T., and Simmers answering that he had, that it might not be the best thing for the boys to join the O. R. T., that Mr. Atterbury did not approve of the boys joining the O. R. T., on account of it being radical, and that he did not approve of its methods. Simmers asked Moran if he should understand that the men were to be discharged because of their membership in the O. R. T., Moran replied, no; explaining there is a law preventing such action and went on to say that Mr. Atterbury objected to the O. R. T., that he (Moran) had nothing against the O. R. T., but had to carry out instructions given him by higher officials. This is the Moran that attended our open meeting at Pheonixville, Pa., on June 30, 1913.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I inclose herein a certificate of membership issued free gratis by an organization known as the O. R. T., D., A., & S., with headquarters in Philadelphia, Pa., to Mr. J. W. Orndorf, whose address is Northumberland, Pa., together with other letters of explanation. The letter written me by Mr. Orndorf is self-explanatory.

For your information wish to state that I went to see Mr. W. S. Minnier, whose address is 151 Church Street, Sunbury, Pa., who declared to me in the presence of witnesses that he, too, got a free certificate, practically in the same manner. With best wishes, I am, Issued at the general offices, Philadelphia, Pa., July 1, 1912.

NORTHUMBERLAND, PA., August 28, 1912.

Mr. PAUL A. WENRICH,
Organizer, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Sunbury, Penna.

DEAR SIR: About one year ago I gave my application to Mr. W. P. Brown for the O. R. T. D. A. & S., together with a dollar, and one month after I handed him this application I requested him to return me the dollar, as I had decided not to join the body. This he refused to do. I have been receiving their monthly publication, which is edited in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., ever since, and I have not paid one cent since I paid Mr. Brown the dollar.

Notwithstanding these facts, I received a certificate of membership on the 17th of July, 1912, free gratis and against my will, which I take great pleasure of enclosing herein, in the hope that it will help the consistent organized telegraphers of North America in showing those concerned, at the proper time, the tactics this so-called organization is resorting to in boosting their membership by issuing these free certificates.

I am willing to testify at any time regarding the facts as herein set forth.

I most sincerely hope the information imparted in this letter will be of service to the general committee representing the O. R. T. and the men in the telegraph department east of Pittsburgh and Erie.

With best wishes to the general committee and the cause they represent, I am,
Yours, respectfully,

J. W. ORNDORF, Operator.

Mr. P. A. WENRICH,
Organizer, O. R. T., P. R. R. Lines East of Pittsburgh and Erie.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Referring to the papers you have in your possession signed by J. W. Orndorf, wish to say that I can substantiate all the statements contained therein, inasmuch as I have been and am now working in the same office with Mr. Orndorf, who has confided in me the facts set forth in his communication to you by word of mouth time and again. It is evidently plain that this so-called organization is issuing bogus certificates free gratis and to men who are not now and who never have been "paid up" in that "body," in order to boost their membership and make things "look but like what they ain't," in order to discredit the consistent organized telegraphers of North America (the O. R. T.), who are in reality representing 95 per cent of the telegraphers on this division.

With best wishes, I am,
Fraternally, yours,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The reason I couldn't get the papers from Mr. W. S. Minnier is because he claims he destroyed them. He further claims he has friends in the O. R. T., D. A. & S., and when I wanted him to make affidavit regarding the facts he "ran under the platform," but I have him fast, as he declared himself very plainly in the presence of a witness.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: For your information permit me to say that a telegrapher employed on the Elmira division of the P. R. R., by the name of Frank C. Collins, whose address is 213 Colwell Avenue, Elmira, N. Y., admitted in the presence of Brothers E. A. Johnson, Starkey, N. Y.; C. G. Robinson and J. J. Clair, of Montour Falls and Watkins, N. Y., respectively, that he—Collins—received a paid-up card in a so-called organization of telegraphers, known as the O. R. T., D. A. & S., free gratis, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Collins has not paid anything into that organization for over six months prior to the time he received this free certificate.

I have no seen Mr. Collins personally, as yet, but will do so as soon as possible, and will advise you fully when I do so. In the meanwhile you can make use of this information, as the witnesses were very emphatic in their declaration, which was made in the presence of Brother Newman, first vice president of the O. R. T.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: Although, as you are aware, I voted against a strike, and I trust there may be no necessity for one, I feel anxious to see fair play. I realize that the new order, known as the O. R. T. D. A. & S., has apparently set up the claim that they represent the majority of the men—a claim I feel is false—yet who knows might not be bolstered up to appear correct? I therefore call immedaite attention to the fact that I have been receiving regularly, for more than a year, the paper known as the Wire and Signal, yet have never subscribed for it or requested it. And on making inquiry among the men here I learn that several of them, both O. R. T. and nonmembers of either the old or new, are now and have been receiving the above-named paper regularly. I therefore suppose that the mailing list of the new order contains many, if not all, the names of the telegraphers, and possibly others hereabouts, gratis, like those I mention. Now, then, if that is the case, surely their mailing list ought not be used as evidence to support any claims of representation, and I therefore inform you of this matter.

Kindly, yours,

C. W. MELOY.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Referring to your letter of some time ago regarding the sending out of free paid-up certificates to certain members of the O. R. T. D. A. & S., beg to advise that Mr. W. A. Gosson, now a signalman located at Whiting, N. J., in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad, states that he has been receiving cards in Auston's organization for the past two years, and that during that time he has not remitted them one penny. This man is now a member of the railway signalmen's organization and would be willing to give testimony to this effect if called on.

IN RE COMPANY MEN ATTENDING MEETINGS ALL OVER THE SYSTEM ON FREE PASSES AND PRESUMABLY ON COMPANY TIME.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., January 2, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: During the series of O. R. T. open meetings held by the undersigned over the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie the following Pennsylvania Railroad Co. employees, who are representatives of the alleged Pennsylvania Railroad Co. organization for telegraphers, etc., were frequent attendants and did all possible to discredit the Order of Railroad Telegraphers and its grand officers: W. L. Overdorff, assistant yardmaster, New York, 257 West One hundred and eleventh Street, New York City; R. H. Conway, interlocking repairman, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. F. Bannister, Pennsylvania Railroad Station, New York City; M. W. Burke, Pennsylvania Railroad Station, New York City; Adam Reed, "PO" telegraph office, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa.; J. W. Green, Thirty-second Street Pennsylvania Railroad office, Philadelphia, 837 North Fortieth, Philadelphia, Pa.; M. J. Kelley, train director, Tower "A," New York Pennsylvania Railroad terminals, New York City.

There were others, but the above named were the most active, especially Overdorff, Conway, Kelley, and Reed, who were at most of the meetings. Beginning in September and ending December 9th, 1912, meetings were held in Trenton, N. J., Camden, N. J., Wilmington, Del., Harrisburg, Pottsville, Altoona, Sunbury, Williamsport, Lock Haven, Pittsburgh, and New Freedom, Pa., some of the men mentioned were at each of these meetings, all of them acknowledged they were traveling on free transportation furnished by the P. R. R.

At Williamsport Mr. T. E. Fidler, a member of the P. R. R. telegraphers committee, said to Mr. Overdorff, "How does it come you can get away from your job with the P. R. R. at New York to attend all these meetings?" It is claimed Overdorff told Fidler the company did not know he was absent from his regular duties.

A considerable number of P. R. R. employees believe the P. R. R. arranged to relieve these men for the purpose of allowing them to attend these meetings and that their pay by the company went on uninterruptedly.

Adam Reed was absent from his position in "P. O." telegraph office, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, Pa., some months. It is said that he claimed the company had transferred him temporarily into the supply department, but this did not seem to interfere with Mr. Reed's attendance at our meetings.

Martin J. Kelley, train director, tower "A," New York terminals, was at times out on the road organizing among the telegraphers repairmen, etc., for the alleged company organization (named O. R. T. D. A. & S.), and it is also claimed using a regular P. R. R. "employees' pass" during such times.

It was stated by one of these men in our meeting at Pottsville that L. K. Marr, train master, New York terminals P. R. R., New York City, is a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen in good standing, and at that time Martin J. Kelley had in his pocket Mr. Marr's receipt for last term of dues in that organization, whether for the purpose of assisting him in getting members into the alleged P. R. R. Company's organization for telegraphers, etc., or not, it was not stated.

If it is desired to know at just what meetings certain ones of the above-named men were in attendance and dates of meetings, I can give you the information.

Yours, fraternally,

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 10.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 9, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM, President, New York.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Information comes to me this a. m. from Brother McGrail, Altoona, reading in part as follows:

"After the conductor on the train which I used to the tower this date collected his tickets, I asked him if he knew anything about the new association; he said, 'You are d—— right I do.' I attended the meeting at Pittsburgh last Monday out of curiosity, and I saw the s—— heels of the Pittsburgh division there and prime movers."

McCrail says the conductor named Hepney and Bently had been thrown out of the O. R. C. account of "underhanded work" last time they were taking a strike vote; also the same man went down to Walls, Pa., during the shopmen's strike and made himself conspicuous in "butting into affairs which he should have stayed out of."

The conductor also told McGrail that Conductor Collins (chairman of the meeting) went to the company and told them he was satisfied when last strike vote was taken. He said the whole move had a mysterious appearance; that it is always good to beware of Greeks bearing gifts.

"Tom, you were right about discredited movers so far as the regular unions are concerned, and I think we should keep track of this thing."

I am sending some of this to a certain few to-day. Received a letter from Miller this a. m., in which he says he left Harrisburg before my request to look up the origin of the articles appearing in the daily papers was received, he also said there is to be a meeting at Wilmington to-night and asked me to be there. There is an open meeting of Auston's bunch here to-night, and if I find I can't get in there I will go to Wilmington.

Telegram from Wenrich the 7th stated he is in bad shape, no relief from the pain, bedfast.

I will try and get our men to get in touch with the other brotherhoods on this association matter. It appears to me cooperation can be brought about through this new move on the part of the opposition. Do you wish me to do this?

Brother H. A. Ramsey, this city, told me yesterday that McLaughlin told him last week that he was done with the O. R. T. and all labor organizations; that he done lots of running around for Quick and Perham in bygone days; and that he had tried to land a position after he got down and out and was given no consideration at all. Ramsey says Mack is trying to get on the P. T., and that he had good backing in the person of O. A. Scheetz, who, Ramsey says, is a stockholder. Regret to say that it is generally understood in labor circles in this city that J. J. McLaughlin is a detective employed by a large agency for the purpose of spying on the men, etc.

I have more information regarding J. J. McLaughlin and when I get it completed I will be pleased to let you have it. I am told that he is giving pitiful tales of hardship, etc. I told Brother Ramsey when he told me regarding Mack that I was exceedingly sorry to learn of his misfortunes, and if he saw Brother McLaughlin to send him to see me. DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: I am sending you herewith additional information with reference to the new organization on the P. R. R. east of Pittsburgh and Erie, which was the subject of my circular letter of May 28, 1913, to the general committee.

See report of Brother Rex, attached, my circular letter to our general committee here, even date, and the report of Brother Wenrich's interview last Sunday with Mr. Rothermel, of Reading, Pa. The latter follows here.

Rothermel's interview was solicited by himself and he stated to Wenrich that George Hoffman, telegrapher, Pottsville, Pa., a member of the O. R. T. D. A. & S., of whom I have written you before, said at a recent D. A. S. meeting in Reading that the P. R. R. is trying to get away from the "54-road alliance"; that Hoffman is one of the boosters of the new association; that Conductor James Faith, who is Hoffman's father-in-law, is also a booster; that Superintendent of Telegraph Johnson, P. R. R., told Faith that Hoffman is a good man for the work; that Faith gets letters from the various P. R. R. superintendents regarding the matter and permitting him to solicit members among the employees; that Faith is a member of the O. R. C., but is regarded as a weak sister.

Rothermel stated that so far as he had become acquainted with the new organization proposition, the following, in addition to those mentioned above, are working in the interest of the movement: George Diebert, assistant yard master and clerk, Pottsville; T. J. Martin, yard master, Pottsville; W. J. Shick, agent, Pottsville; J. H. Dupell, engineer, (expelled from union), Pottsville; J. D. Myers, engineer (expelled from union), Pottsville; M. A. Kerr, section foreman, Reading; J. A. Sweeney, telegrapher (D. A. S.), William Penn, Pa.; ——— Leary, passenger conductor (ax to grind); ——— Brown passenger conductor (ax to grind).

Rothermel says Telegrapher Boyer, of whom I have written you before and who gave us good information, is peddling information over the division that the O. R. T. D. A. & S. recently endeavored to harmonize with the old order, but that the O. R. T. would not do the right thing, therefore the fight continues.

I expect to get information regularly in regard to this matter and will see you shortly with reference to the situation generally. Have not heard from you with reference to the open meetings I have mentioned as being in favor of holding at Lancaster, Norristown, and Philadelphia.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

AS TO ALLEGED RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE P. R. R. AND THE O. R. D. T. A. & S.

PHILADELPHIA PA., March 30, 1913.

T. E. ELLIS:

While at Robinsville, N. J., on March 13, 1913, I was in conversation with Relief Operator C. H. Robinson, who lives at Camden, N. J. He informed me that he was a member of the O. R. T. D. A. & S., and therefore there was no use for me to talk to him. I asked him if he did not think that the D. A. & S. was a company order, and he replied that he did. He further stated that he was compelled to be a member of the above organization in order to get extra work in the main office, and if he could get a few dollars more per month by being a member of the above organization, regardless if it was a company affair, that he would be very foolish to drop it, as he had a family, etc., to keep and that he was just looking out for himself.

Robinson continued to say that the company positively would not permit any of the employees to work in the main office that were members of the O. R. T. Therefore he was willing to continue his membership with the O. R. T. D. A. & S.

Summed up, Mr. Robinson's declarations were that he knew that the O. R. T. D. A. & S. was a company organization and that he had to be a member of same in order to work in the main office, which is "CF," Camden, N. J.

A. L. REX.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 3, 1913.

To all members P. R. R. General Committee greeting:

Referring to my recent circular letter.

Brother A. L. Rex, of the Grand, per my instructions proceeded to Pittsburgh, Pa., on May 31, 1913, and attended a meeting of P. R. R. employees there yesterday, June 2, and reports there were 116 present.

Mr. J. K. Lynn, Harrisburg, Pa., called the meeting to order. Mr. J. H. Collins, passenger conductor, Middle Division, was made chairman of the meeting. Mr. J. H. McCully, Connemaugh Division, was made secretary of the meeting. Mr. H. O. Hooper, an employee of the P. R. R., made a few remarks.

Conductor Bixler, of the Middle Division, suggested the organization or association be named The Pennsylvania Railroad Employees Mutual Benefit Association

Brother Rex reports that Mr. Collins stated the P. R. R. Co. would be glad to handle the funds of the association.

Future meetings subject to call of the chairman. Mr. Collins stated he would finance such meetings if necessary.

My information from other sources and in territory not mentioned by Brother Rex is that the active people in the preliminary work and prior to the Pittsburgh meeting are those who may not be regular with the unions in which they are eligible to membership. I therefore suggest a correct union history of each of the men above named be obtained and that you also investigate the union standing of each employee who is interested in the formation of this association, reporting any information obtainable.

Letters from different members of our general committee, including General Chairman J. F. Miller, state they have no knowledge of this new association or organization, indicating there is a desire to keep such knowledge from us.

For your information.

With best wishes,
Fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
General Delivery.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 27, 1913.

Mr. M. SALTER, Conductor,
24 Fayette Street, Phillipsburg, N. J.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Brother J. G. Simanton, O. R. T., local chairman, Trenton Division, P. R. R., Frenchtown, N. J., has requested me to give you the names of some of the more prominent employees of the P. R. R. lines East who are working in the interest of the new so-called Employees Mutual Benefit Association, stating that you desired this and other information for use on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and I take pleasure in complying with the request, as follows: Lon Johnson, conductor, Monongahela Division; Herbert Peters, conductor, Susquehanna-Williamsport Division; J. H. Collins, conductor, Middle Division; Mr. Bixler, conductor, Middle Division; J. M. Faith, conductor, Schuylkill Division; J. K. Lynn, assistant station master, Harrisburg, Pa.; Robert Britton, foreman car repairers, P. T. Division; J. M. McCullough, Connemaugh Division.

These names have come to me in different reports from over the system. Mr. Faith, of the Schuylkill Division, has been reported to me as having been active on several different divisions. His son-in-law, a Mr. Hoffman, of Pottsville, Pa., has also been reported as having been active and, it is said, attended the meeting on June 2, 1913, at Pittsburgh, Pa., where the association was formed. Mr. Hoffman at that time was a member of the dual organization known as the O. R. T., D., A., & S., and, in fact, until recently was known as a local officer for that concern, which is now practically out of the running here so far as membership is concerned, according to all information at hand, as a result of the energetic campaign prosecuted by the telegraphers here during the past year.

For your information I will state that immediately after I was informed of the movement on May 26 last, and up to the present time, I have done all possible, with the assistance of our local chairman on this system, to acquaint the men in our department and also the men under the jurisdiction of the other four brotherhoods with the movement, cautioning all employees to investigate well, in order to be perfectly satisfied as to the character of the association and the real intent of those who were behind it before committing themselves to its support. I have also taken the matter up with the presidents of the five great brotherhoods on three different occasions. On September 16, 1913, I recommended to the five presidents in a joint letter that a committee be formed for the purpose of acting jointly on this system in protecting our joint interests against dualism and also against any desire entertained by the corporation for dual organization conditions, and suggested that such committee be formed by selecting five or more men from each of the five organizations, viz, B. of L. E., O. R. C., B. R. T., B. L. F. & E., and O. R. T. I have also urged the five presidents to get together and act jointly in this important matter.

There has been several joint meetings held under the auspices of the five brotherhoods for the purpose of considering dualism and the advisability of forming a closer alliance between the five brotherhoods, and I have noticed that the rank and file is practically a unit in favor of such procedure, and in my opinion would not hesitate a moment in forming an effective cooperative alliance for joint protection. While there are obstacles in the way of federation as we understand it under the "Cedar Rapids plan," and which by the way I have not so far observed any great results from, there is so far as I can see absolutely nothing in the way of effective cooperative alliance by the membership of the five brotherhoods employed upon any system of railroad in this country, I am absolutely in favor of it, I hope it will be rapidly put into existence, and am not afraid to go on record as stating that the day is not far distant when it will become a necessity.

In my opinion the membership of the five brotherhoods should hold joint open meetings at least once in each month upon each division of any system for the purpose of educating the employees along the lines of real unionism as employed by the five brotherhoods, the meetings to be conducted along educational lines.

My personal opinion with reference to the subject matter of this letter is that there is perhaps a desire by the managers' association to successfully launch dualism among us over the entire country, and this was my opinion from the beginning, later news from the Lake Shore, Jersey Central, St. Louis Terminal, and one or two other places I have in mind rather bears out the opinion.

Brother A. I. Kauffman, general chairman B. L. F. & E., Altoona, Pa., has in his possession, I understand, a typewritten copy of the constitution and by-laws said to govern the P. R. R. Employees Mutual Benefit Association.

If I can serve you further will be glad to do so.

With best wishes, I am

Yours, fraternally,

H. B. PERHAM, President O. R. T., St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIRs AND BROTHERS: The peril of "company organization conditions" affecting all classes of men employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, in my opinion, is such that immediate joint action by the presidents of the five great brotherhoods is absolutely necessary at the earliest possible minute.

In my opinion we are confronting a situation the gravity of which is not entirely appreciated by all concerned and that it will be found is not entirely confined to this system. I believe the corporations are laying the foundation for a vigorous effort to put us all out of business, and that if we jointly line up now against this menace it can be wiped out, but later on if delayed there will be a different aspect.

Personally I can see no obstacle in the way of such an alliance between the five brotherhoods for such purpose, and believe it absolutely necessary to form such alliance to save each of the five organizations here. My appeal in this matter is not a selfish one for my organization. We have practically put the dual organization formed to fight us out of the running; our men are alive to the dangers threatened, and with me desire to assist all legitimate union labor in the field. The fight is aimed at all of us. In retaliation we can best succeed through joint action by all, therefore I call your attention to the suggestion contained in my letter on this subject dated September 16, 1913.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS,
Organizer, The Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

[Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.]

PEORIA, ILL., November 3, 1913.

Mr. FRANK PAQUIN,

First General Vice President Brotherhood Railway Carmen,Kansas City, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Upon my return to this office I find your letter of October 30, and I am not surprised that you should be interested in the situation on the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. (east). In order that you may know all that I know of the matter, I will recite the situation as follows:

1. For many years past the Pennsylvania Co., by a systematic employment of members of this brotherhood for "special-duty service," have succeeded in discounting or discrediting much of the brotherhood's work. While these men will not confess that they are "spotters" there is no question in my mind but what they furnish information to the officials and discourage our members doing that which the officials object to, as a part of the services they perform and for which they receive extra compensation. I mean by this that while these members of this organization are nominally "air-brake inspectors," "inspectors of switching yards," etc., they are expected to do "dirty work" on the side. The result of this policy has been that the brotherhoods have in past years been quite weak on the Pennsylvania lines east.

2. Notwithstanding the methods adopted by the railroad companies to weaken this brotherhood and others, as just stated, within the past few years, the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Order Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen have acquired a degree of aggressiveness in wage matters that is surprising, not only to others but to the officials of the Pennsylvania Co. While this new characteristic of employees of the Pennsylvania lines east has not been so pronounced with the engineers and conductors, so far as the B. R. T. and B. L. F. & E. are concerned, I believe I state the truth when I say our membership have developed a high degree of courage in protecting their own interests. During the year 1912, a temporary cooperation between members of the O. R. C., B. R. T., and B. L. F. & E. (which cooperation the members of the B. L. E. refused to join), secured a very fair settlement of the electrical question and adjusted many grievances that could not have been adjusted otherwise. During these negotiations it became necessary to take a strike vote, and it appeared at one time that nothing could avoid a strike of all conductors, trainmen, switchmen, firemen, etc. The fact that the B. L. F. & E. included almost half of the engineers on the road would have made the strike a very serious one. Since that time the B. L. E. and B. L. F. & E. have agreed to cease their wrangling and have, so far as wages, working conditions, and grievances are concerned become one organization, in that the two organizations support each other in all such matters.

3. Having regard for the wonderful changes in the work of the brotherhoods, as heretofore set forth, certain officials of the Pennsylvania road (east) conceived the idea that the only way to weaken, if not destroy, the four railway brotherhoods was to institute an organization of all employees on the Pennsylvania Railroad. While the prospectus and the statements of the organizers of this new association would indicate that the officials of the road have nothing to do with it, the fact that the officials are approving the movement—in fact, minor officials are acting as organizers for the movement—leads us to believe that this new organization is simply an instrument adopted by the Pennsylvania lines (east) to destroy these four brotherhoods. Among the advantages offered by the new organization for all employees of the Pennsylvania lines joining it are that the expense will be less, wages, working conditions, and grievances may be adjusted more readily by the friendship of the officials of the company, cooperative stores will be instituted hereafter, cheap insurance and pensions will be assured, etc. It is not strange that the shop employees, track employees, clerks, and other branches of service that have been coerced in the past, would gladly look to an organization of this kind, which they could join without fear of dismissal from the service of that company, and the result has been that the organization made wonderful strides for a few weeks, and it was claimed that whenever a majority of the employees of the Pennsylvania lines (east) were members of this new association, all schedules and agreements with the four railway brotherhoods would be abrogated and the new organization would make schedules for every man in the service, etc.

4. For the past two or three years Mr. W. H. Pierce, a special organizer of this brotherhood, has been doing excellent work on many roads, among which the Pennsylvania Co. has been a most prolific field. When he was confronted by the arguments of the organizers of the new organization he found himself greatly handicapped in securing applications for membership from the young firemen who had just entered the service and who had been led to believe that their best interests lay in the new organization instead of in the B. L. F. & E. Mr. Pierce, being a very aggressive man, fought the new organization as best he could at public meetings, and, so I understand, at one public meeting where a large number of employees of the Pennsylvania lines from all classes of service, including some of the officials, were present, Mr. Pierce advised the shopmen, etc., that if they desired to form an organization they should form one of their own and not join an organization intended to displace the railway brotherhoods. Such a suggestion was received with such hearty acclaim by those present that I understand Mr. Pierce secured the signature or approval of 700 men present who heretofore have been denied the privilege of joining any organization. I understand from Mr. Pierce that he has no doubt that he can organize the shopmen, possibly the trackmen, and the office men in an organization of "Pennsylvania employees," and that without very much opposition from the officials. I do not mean that they would approve the breaking up of their own scheme, but it is understood that they would probably not dismiss men from service for joining the organization referred to. I have advised Mr. Pierce that he has nothing to gain by organizing these men, for, not being in that line of service, they would probably elect officers from among their own ranks, and after all of his own efforts he would have nothing, not even compensation, for his work. In reply, he has said that he was not looking for office or compensation, but that he was determined that the Pennsylvania Co. was not going to disrupt these railway brotherhoods by their new scheme, and he has been "fighting the devil with fire."

I am sending carbon copy of this letter to President Ryan, of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen; to President Perham, of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers; to President Franklin, of the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers; to President Johnston, of the International Association of Machinists; and to President Kline, of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, and for that reason I have described the situation at length.

I shall be glad to hear from all concerned, stating any objection they might have to the organization of the employees on the Pennsylvania Railroad into one organization, with the exception of those crafts represented by the railroad brotherhoods which will be exempted from membership therein.

Yours, fraternally,

W. S. CARTER, President.

Mr. H. A. ENOCHS, Chairman,
Broadway Central Hotel, New York City.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Your favor of the 7th instant received. I am glad to note what you say about your men watching matters connected with the new association. My information from the system shows much energy is being displayed by the boosters of that scheme and not without results. The following bit of suggestive information came in from Altoona, Pa., a couple of days ago, or so:

"Mr. Howard Collins, conductor, middle division, recently visited the P. R. R. shopmen at Altoona in the interest of the new association, among other things saying that it is to pay insurance and take up grievances, to be beneficial-industrial, that the members of the various brotherhoods are getting tired of paying fat-bellied officers big salaries; that committees will be composed of employees and railroad officials; that in that way differences could be adjusted right here on the ground; that Mr. Long is getting tired of having committees in Philadelphia all the time," etc.

That's beautiful, isn't it? The "home-circle" idea so well loved by the corporation is thus beautifully outlined, and many men in all departments are falling for it; that's where the danger lies.

I hope you have put up a case that will win out.

With best wishes,
Fraternally,

10404 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., October 1, 1913.

To the General Chairmen B. R. T., B. L. F. & E., B. L. E., and O. R. C., Pennsylvania Railroad, East.

DEAR SIRS AND BROTHERS: Information comes from the Monongahela division this morning that is as follows:

"I have been advised that there are something like 500 on this division that have signed the tentative application for membership. They are explaining that it is a new relief department, something to take the place of the old relief department."

For your information,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Information from the Williamsport division this morning is as follows:

"Passenger Conductor Herbert Peters is gathering in men on the mutual benefit association. Mr. Peters resides at Harrisburg, Pa."

WESLEYVILLE, PA., October 4, 1913.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: This will acknowledge receipt of yours of 1st and 2d inst., referring to Conductors Lon. Johnson and Herbert Peters, of the Monongahela and Williamsport-Susquehanna divisions. This man Johnson has been into this kind of dirty work before, while Peters never did belong to anything and is a "non air" as far as our order or the B. R. T. is concerned. All I have to say that if the new organization can't get anything better to represent them than men of this kind they are in a very bad light, in my opinion.

Can not see where any man with any intellect at all can be drawn into anything of this kind at all, the idea of the committee that the constitution of that organization provides for is enough to kill it in my estimation. If we are to be represented by officials of the company we are working for, no need of any organizations at all, and the sooner our men will see where they are in bad, and I believe it will be one of the strongest points to show all concerned the folly of this move.

Very truly, yours,

J. B. HENDRICKS, Chairman.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: You will remember the report of my interview with Adam Reed last fall, especially that part of it referring to the transfer of his services from the telegraph to the supply department, thus fixing the source of his salary. Your files show my reports of some of his movements during the time referred to.

On last Tuesday, in an interview with one J. J. Dulley, 368 East Price Street, Germantown, Pa., regarding P. R. R. telegraphers' union matters, when asked if he did not consider the D. A. S. a company affair, said: "Well, myself and others I might mention did not have such a thought until after Reed attended the meetings over the system last fall, also doing some organizing for our order, while it was understood that he was in the supply department; then the subject came under discussion on account of the company paying the salary." Dulley is a radical D. A. S. man, and says he don't care if it is the Salvation Army, he will support it, providing it "brings home the bacon."

For your information.

FAVORING COMPANY ORGANIZATION.

HARRISBURG, PA., July 6, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Met Brother C. S. Melcher, local chairman, 531 Curtin Street, Harrisburg, Pa., last evening.

Brother Melcher informs me that last February he was on the east end of the Philadelphia division soliciting information-authorization blanks; met several Marr men, and in argument with them stated that they did not have more than 50 telegrapher members, etc.; that shortly afterwards the division operator "called him in" and told him the superintendent had instructed him to get after him (Melcher), and said that "no doubt you want to hold your job. It is said you have been misrepresenting the new organization," etc.; "advise that you keep off," or words to that effect.

Brother Melcher in the interview said that it would not do for me to go on right of way, as I would be arrested for trespass.

Melcher could give me little assistance so far as post-office addresses of the men is concerned, but I have him working on the matter and hope we may be able to secure more blanks in this territory as soon as he can get the addresses in proper shape.

ALTOONA, PA., January 6, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, 1378 Montclair Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Ex-Mayor Mr. S. W. Hoyer, 1900 Third Avenue, Altoona, Pa., at his home last (Sunday) night, January 5, 1913, among other things, stated to me as follows:

That in the beginning of his administration Mr. G. W. Creighton, general superintendent, P. R. R., Altoona, Pa., approached him about as follows: Invited the mayor to his office; said, "I hope you and the P. R. R. will get along nicely"; that the P. R. R. proposed to dominate the political situation in Altoona in the future; and things along these lines.

That about the time the P. R. R. shopmen's strike in 1911 was brewing, Creighton called the mayor to his office and told him of the impending trouble and asked his cooperation, saying interesting things.

That during the strike General Supt. Creighton on at least three different occasions suggested and practically asked the mayor to bring about a riot in order that the State constabulary might be brought into the situation, for the purpose of scaring the men into submission and getting the organizers out of the city. When the mayor refused, and called attention to the fact that such action would cause death, he was told, "What of it; policemen are paid to take such risks." The Mayor stated the police force was for the purpose of preventing trouble and not for the purpose of creating riots, Creighton always being insistent that the mayor "start something."

That General Supt. Creighton tried to get the mayor (Hoyer) to illegally arrest Organizers Gallagher, Schmidt, and others, in order to get them out of town.

That he (Hoyer) heard General Supt. Creighton tell Albert W. Beckman, manager the Baker estate, to prevent the proposed meeting. (See copy court proceedings already sent you; also see statement by Attorney Henderson relative to the swearing of Beckman.)

That it is a fact that Creighton did rent halls, etc., and otherwise prevent meetings in and around Altoona.

That Creighton endeavored to put up a job on him (Hoyer) after this trouble, whereby Hoyer would be implicated in a criminal way in connection with a political campaign.

That Creighton repeatedly told him (Hoyer) that he had 171 armed P. R. R. policemen in service here, and at a cost of $750 per day, urging Hoyer to do something to relieve the company of that large expense, and was as often told to let the men go, that the city police could and were handling the situation without trouble, which was the facts.

That Creighton tried to put up a job on him (Hoyer) by congregating certain citizens, every one of whom were political opponents of the mayor's and including four newspaper men, together with some of the P. R. R. official family, in Creighton's office, then telephoned Hoyer, asking him to come to his (Creighton's) office, where Hoyer went in company with his chief of police, finding the layout as above stated. Creighton stated the meeting was for the purpose of finding some way to stop the strike, etc., and suggested that he (Creighton) and his people retire, allowing the mayor and the others left to fix upon a plan. The mayor at once scented trouble, feeling that it was the plan to elect a chairman, pass any resolutions desired by the company, making him a party to the procedure, the newspapers doing the rest. Hoyer flatly refused, and asked Creighton if the men out on strike were to be reinstated. Creighton emphatically stated they would not be. Then Hoyer said, striking the table with his fist, "In that case to-morrow I myself will lead the strike, and to a finish," and in consequence of this stand by Hoyer most of the strikers were taken back by the company.

That Mr. F. N. Allman, chief fire department, Altoona, Pa., witnessed the assault upon the person of J. Gallagher, near the Senate Hotel, Altoona, Pa., in 1911, and that he said to Mr. J. D. Spangler, Blair County detective and constable, first ward, Altoona, who watched the assault, "Why do you not arrest Luther?" Spangler replied, "He is a constable." Then Spangler and Luther left the scene together. That there is no doubt but what this assault was a frame-up, as was also the one upon the boy in Juniata, of which he heard something at the time.

Hoyer also says he heard about the Graham case at the Senate Hotel, and also believes that a frame-up.

Hoyer says the situation at the time of this trouble was simply horrible, meaning the attempts by the P. R. R. officials as above, and the whole truth is almost unbelievable.

There were other P. R. R. officials named by Hoyer, but I give Creighton, as he was the principal in all the above. One Mr. Durbour, now deceased, remarked when told that Gallagher would probably die, "Well, likely a good thing if he did," according to Mr. Hoyer. He gives other information, much of it, such as the purchase of guns by the company, etc., and will willingly repeat all at any time and under any circumstances, simply in the cause of right and justice, and says he has no ill will against the P. R. R., but that such men and methods should be eliminated from among honorable people, etc.

Fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AND COERCION BY THE P. R. R. CO. APPLIED TO ITS EMPLOYEES WHO ARE AFFILIATED WITH CERTAIN LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 5, 1913.

Mr. G. Z. Stover, local chairman O. R. T. committee, Monongahela division, P. R. R. address 243 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., said to-day among other things, as follows:

That to his personal knowledge ex-local chairman O. R. T. committee, Monongahela division, P. R. R., who is at this time employed by the P. R. R. as a telegrapher, was called into Division Operator C. J. Isler's office, Pittsburgh, and told by Isler to resign his office as local chairman; that he (Isler) was not prepared to say what action Superintendent Mitchell would take in case this was not done; that if he did resign the office of local chairman he (Isler) found that the local chairman was in line for promotion to the position of train dispatcher.

It is stated that then Isler referred to the age of the local chairman (about 49) and to his large family (wife and six or seven children), and said other things along this line.

The name of the above ex-local chairman is C. A. Burgess, Pittsburgh, Pa., a member of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers of some 20 years' standing, and an old and very reliable employee of the P. R. R. Mr. Stover requests that Mr. Burgess' name be handled with care; otherwise serious consequences might result to Mr. Burgess.

INTIMIDATION, ETC., BY P. R. R. OFFICIALS AMONG CERTAIN OF ITS EMPLOYEES ON ACCOUNT OF THEIR BROTHERHOOD AFFILIATIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 24, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Referring to Article No. 2, your petition to the Industrial Commission. I am informed that Division Operator Moran, Schuylkill division, P. R. R., with office at Reading, Pa., is intimidating or trying to intimidate his men on that division in the following manner: Selects a man who has recently left the dual organization and joined the O. R. T., or those who have at one time or another expressed themselves in favor of doing so, asking if they have joined the O. R. T., and saying to them that they should not join the O. R. T., that the P. R. R. does not recognize the O. R. T., but does the O. R. T. D. A. & S.; that it would be easy matter for him to discharge them, as he could do so for any little thing he might find wrong about their "sheet," and other things along this line.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 21, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM, President,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Brother P. A. Wenrich, grand division organizer, while soliciting membership for the Order of Railroad Telegraphers among the employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad in the city of Philadelphia and its environs, among other employees has met the following people who, he states, have made the following statements to him, each statement following the name of the man who made it:

M. J. Gallagher, leverman, 4659 Lancaster Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., says that he desires to become a member of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, but fears to join the order singly on account of adverse influences that probably would be brought against him by P. R. R. officials, naming L. K. Marr, train master, New York, and the general yard master, Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Gallagher is a member of the B. R. T.

M. J. Maloney, leverman, 48 West Southampton Street, Chestnut Hill, Pa., says that he desires to join the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, but dares not do so alone on account of L. K. Marr and other P. R. R. officials. Mr. Maloney is now a member of the B. R. T.

R. McAllister, leverman, 1455 North Fifty-fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., says that he has dropped out of the dual organization, and is willing to join the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, providing the balance of his coworkers on the "elevated" (P. T. division) join at the same time, but is afraid to take single action on account of L. K. Marr and other P. R. R. officials, implying that he would lose his job on account of such action.

G. M. Gable, telegrapher, 1343 North Allison, Philadelphia, Pa., says that he is dropping out of the dual organization because of the fact that he does not admire the manner in which the dual organization has been conducted; that he desires very much to become a member of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, and will do so if a goodly number of the employees will join at the same time, but is afraid to do so singly on account of the influence of L. K. Marr, and when Wenrich called his attention to the fact that L. K. Marr is located in New York, Gable said "Yes; but he is here more than in New York," adding that Marr is a member of the P. R. R.'s official "labor commission." Gable went on to state in giving his reasons for his fears that he knew of one particular instance wherein Marr approached an employee on the P. T. division, P. R. R., and told him to drop his membership in the O. R. T.; failing to do so he would have to take the consequences.

A. D. Sheldon, 225 Ramsey, West Philadelphia, Pa., says he would not dare leave the O. R. T. D. A. & S., and join the O. R. T., as those not belonging to the O. R. T. D. A. & S. were persecuted so much that life became almost unbearable on the P. T. at Seventeenth Street tower, and that O. R. T. members would be especially persecuted.

It. McNeal, leverman, 5719 Woodland Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., says he is afraid to join the Order of Railroad Telegraphers on account of the influence of L. K. Marr, who is a member of the P. R. R.'s labor commission, and goes on to state his reason as follows: That at the time Mr. Marr became train master or general yard master for the P. R. R. in New York, Mr. Marr sent for him and asked him if he would accept a position on his division. McNeal said to Mr. Marr that he would be glad to accept a position on his division, and requested that a position be also given his son. All arrangements were made to this end, but the arrangements were never carried out, as he believes, that it was ascertained that he was not a member of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. at that time, further stating that it is generally understood on the P. T. division that men in the telegraph department could not secure employment under Mr. Marr unless they were members of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. Mr. McNeal exhibited fear of the consequences should he join the O. R. T. unless a majority of his coworkers should accompany him in such action.

Thomas J. Robinson, "relief," 949 Falon Street, Philadelphia, Pa., says he is afraid to leave the O. R. T. D. A. & S. and join the O. R. T. on account of L. K. Marr, train master, New York, being on the labor commission of the P. R. R. meeting each week with other P. R. R. officials in Broad Street station, implying that his reason for so believing is that Marr was the cause of the dual organization being organized.

E. E. Creely, jr., relief telegrapher, 2128 Orthodox Street, Frankford, Pa., says that he is afraid to leave the O. R. T. D. A. & S. and join the O. R. T. individually on account that the company might take advantage of the condition of his eyesight, thereby causing him to lose his position.

Charles I. Fisher, telegrapher, 1419 North Robinson Street, Philadelphia, Pa., says that he is afraid to leave the O. R. T. D. A. & S. and join the O. R. T. on account of the attitude of the train dispatchers in "S" office and also the men in "JR" office, the latter the division superintendent's office. It is said that Train Dispatcher Howard Brown, of "S" office, is one of the men, and John Green, of "JR" office, another who most strongly urge the O. R. T. D. A. & S. proposition among the men, and that the men along the line fear the position and influence of those two men should they antagonize the O. R. T. D. A. & S. or dual organization proposition by leaving the O. R. T. D. A. & S. or joining the O. R. T.

A number of these men state that they do not desire to insult L. K. Marr, who has befriended them, by leaving the O. R. T. D. A. & S. or joining the O. R. T.; also expressing their confidence in him as a man. Others express grave doubts as to Marr's sincerity in the past in relation to matters affecting regular organized labor.

This statement will be continued from time to time.

For your information.

Yours, fraternally,

T. E. ELLIS.

Approved:

PAUL A. WENRICH.
Grand Division Organizer O. R. T.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 20, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The two meetings at Reading Pa., August 19 were held according to program. There were but a half dozen at the morning meeting outside of members of the general committee, Wenrich, and myself. The meeting was informal, and the principal subject under discussion was the lack of attendance by the P. R. R. telegraphers, and according to the information gained it was decided that the attitude of Division Operator J. C. Moran toward the men and the O. R. T. since the Phoenixville meeting on June 30, and also to the fact that too much time elapsed between meetings was responsible.

Brother H. F. Strunk, 316 Seventeen-and-a-half Street, Reading, Pa., stated that Mr. Moran approached him, asking if he belonged to the O. R. T. and went on to state that, of course, he could not discharge him directly because he belonged to the O. R. T., as there was a law prohibiting such procedure, but that almost any little thing might be found against him and his discharge ordered therefor; and while the discussion was going on Moran let it be known that he might at any time receive orders to proceed as above. It seems Mr. Moran canvassed his entire division for the purpose of intimidating the men, including members of the O. R. T., nonmembers, and members of the dual organization, and during each interview stated practically as above. To Brother O. R. Simmers, Phoenixville, Pa., who did not attend either meeting, it is said Mr. Moran stated as above and added that the objection to the O. R. T. on the Pennsylvania came from Mr. Atterbury. Others of the men have also stated that Mr. Moran's attitude and words suggested that he wished them to understand that he is simply following instructions.

At the night meeting, General Chairman Miller in the chair, there were 17 present all told, including 3 P. & R. men.

Train Dispatcher A. W. Haws, who is an ex-O. R. T., also ex-O. R. T. D. A. & S. member, and for one term a member of the board of trustees of the dual organization, and while a member of the board of trustees, according to his statements to General Chairman Miller and myself at Reading, came into possession of information which caused him to leave that organization, further stating that this was due to irregularities practiced by J. R. T. Auston.

Mr. Haws also states to General Chairman Miller and myself that regardless of the words spoken by Division Operator J. C. Moran in his address at our open meeting at Phoenixville, Pa., on June 30, 1913, since then Moran is approaching his men by informing them that the P. R. R. does not desire its telegraphers to hold membership in the O. R. T.; and while the law prohibits him from discharging them from the service because of their affiliation with the O. R. T., any little thing might be found against them and their discharge ordered on that account—words to that effect. Mr. Haws condemned the attitude and procedure of Mr. Moran in this matter, as above stated.

For your information.

AS TO THE P. R. R. PITTING ONE EMPLOYEE AGAINST ANOTHER FOR SECRET PURPOSES AND ITS PECULIAR WAY OF TREATING WITH THE DUAL ORGANIZATION.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 20, 1913.

Mr. W. H. Boyer, 380 Second Avenue, Phoenixville, Pa., stated to me to-day in the presence of Paul A. Wenrich, at the Phoenix Hotel, Phoenixville, Pa., as follows:

That he was recently elected local chairman O. R. T. D. A. & S. Schuylkill Division, P. R. R., and that last Monday, March 17, 1913, he, with other members of the general committee of the O. R. T. D. A. & S., met by prearrangement at Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa., Mr. Johnson, superintendent telegraph, P. R. R.; that the only other P. R. R. official there present was Mr. L. K. Marr.

That it was made known to him by J. R. T. Auston, prior to above meeting, that Mr. Marr would be present.

That J. R. T. Auston knew exactly what was to be given above-named committee in way of concessions prior to the time the committee went to meet Mr. Johnson.

That he (Boyer) and the committee found the "readjustment" (concessions) made by the P. R. R. all ready for them in "blue print" when they got there.

That Mr. Johnson stated to the committee that the P. R. R. would never meet an O. R. T. committee, and that this is all there was said about the O. R. T. at the "conference."

That he (Boyer) was told to leave at Broad Street all that he had heard and seen there.

That it was stated, or that he was given to understand, that had the two Reading, Pa., O. R. T. meetings on March 13, 1913, been held two weeks earlier and the action of O. R. T. D. A. & S. men been noted the Schuylkill division P. R. R. would have gotten nothing in way of concessions.

That he (Boyer) asked Mr. Johnson what the readjustment allowed by the company netted all the telegraphers employed by P. R. R. east of Pittsburg and Erie, Mr. Johnson said "these papers do not show that." Boyer says that 29 positions on the Schuylkill division gains $1,012 annually, and are the only ones affected by the readjustment; that most of these are the higher paid positions, in consequence of which there is much dissatisfaction among the men already; that the men also as a rule believe the money handed out by the company to the dual organization is for anti O. R. T. action; that in his opinion there will not be more than a dozen O. R. T. D. A. & S. members left on the Schuylkill division in 60 days from now; that this "readjustment" is the one asked for in either 1910 or 1911. That there are three men who run the O. R. T. D. A. & S., and they are Messrs. Johnson, superintendent telegraph P. R. R., Mr. L. K. Marr, New York, and Mr. J. R. T. Auston, Philadelphia.

That after the "conference" Mr. Huffman, former local chairman O. R. T. D. A. & S., Schuylkill division P. R. R., took him (Boyer) to J. R. T. Auston's office, Filbert Street, Philadelphia, and there asked Auston questions along lines to draw answers from Auston in Boyer's presence that the O. R. T. D. A. & S. was not a company organization. That he (Boyer) is satisfied that reports preceded him to Philadelphia that he had been seen talking with representatives of the O. R. T.; this, I told him, was beyond doubt. He says that general chairman Giles of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. committee came all the way to Phoenixville to visit him yesterday, March 19. That he intends to remain with the O. R. T. D. A. & S. as local chairman a while yet to see what will happen; that at next meeting of D. A. S., at Reading, he will tell the members of just what occurred at Broad Street, as he agreed to do this when he was elected to the office of local chairman; that there will be no one else serve as local chairman; that if they oust him there will be none there.

Boyer stated, in a slow and deliberate manner, as follows during the interview: "If a fellow that is crooked will serve well as general chairman D. A. S. and is foxy he will be sure to get a fine job with the P. R. R.," and cited others Marr and Hartman, along with the declaration.

That the members of the O. R. T. D. A. & S. on the Schuylkill division P. R. R. began to get wise to the proposition latter part of last December, and they are convinced of the true situation.

This interview was prearranged by Wenrich and myself after he had a short talk with Boyer on Tuesday, when Boyer put a much different line of statement to Wenrich. I went over notes of the interview with Brother Wenrich to-day after the talk with Boyer, and he will write Brother Miller this evening of the interview, as per Miller's request. Therefore I am sending it only to you.

T. E. ELLIS.

AS TO RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE P. R. R. AND THE O. R. T. D. A. & S.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 21, 1913.

Telegrapher J. P. Connell, Haddonfield, N. J., second trick at P. R. R. tower, said in part as follows to-day:

That J. W. Kelley, telegrapher, has been employed on the Atlantic Division P. R. R. for the past three years or more; that he understands Kelley is a close friend of L. K. Marr, New York; that Kelley is a southerner, and it is thought he came from the B. & O. Ry. in Virginia, to the P. R. R. That last spring (1912) Kelley represented to him (Connell) that if himself and the other operator then employed at "H I" tower, Haddonfield, would join the O. R. T. D. A. & S. he would guarantee them at least a $5 per month increase in wages right away; that himself (Connell) and Telegrapher H. Panacoast joined with Kelley and paid him $1 each for membership, but as there was no increase in wages, as per Kelley's guarantee, both dropped out, refusing to pay any more money into the order. Kelley is an organizer for the O. R. T. D. A. & S. and works third trick "H I" tower, Haddonfield, N. J.

That during last summer (1912) Kelley was relieved from his duties as telegrapher for two or three weeks by Extra Telegrapher O. A. Coppage, and it was rumored that Kelley was down on the Baltimore Division, P. R. R., doing "gum-shoe" work among members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers. Kelley himself told the men at Haddonfield that he had been on the Baltimore Division, but refrained to state what he was doing there. It was also rumored that Kelley was on the P. R. R. pay roll at that time, but he does not know anything about the facts in the case; so states Connell.

That the above-named vacation was the only one from "H I" tower for Kelley so far as he remembers.

NOTE.—It will be remembered that Auston wanted Tatlow to go among a number of O. R. T. men on that division and Tatlow's refusal to do the dirty work is the cause of the split between Tatlow and Auston, as given by Tatlow. Boardman at Winslow states the same thing, as do others acquainted with the matter. Now we find a P. R. R. telegrapher was relieved from duty for the purpose. Dates have not been given me account nonmemory, but same will be furnished with other information on this subject in future reports.

THE GARDENIER,
NEWARK, N. Y., December 6, 1912.

Mr. T. E. ELLIS, Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: On the 15th of October, 1912, Brother W. M. Chilson, of 74 Pleasant Street, Canandaigua, hired to P. R. R. on Elmira Division, under Mr. J. Shears, division operator, who asked him if he was a member of O. R. T., and when he was advised in affirmative, he (Mr. Shears) told Chilson he had better drop it as it was not recognized by the P. R. R.; that the O. R. T. D. A. & S. was the organization to get in, as they were doing things, etc.

I took Brother Chilson in O. R. T. at Towanda, Pa., in fore part of this year.

On either November 6 or November 21, 1912, the paymaster asked Brother L. M. Rumsey, How about the telegraphers strike? Whereupon Brother Rumsey said, "Don't know; no doubt we will hear more about it," whereupon the paymaster and clerk gave him a sniff and horse laugh. No doubt they are doing this all over the system. "73."

AS TO P. R. R. FOSTERING DUAL ORGANIZATIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 8, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

President, New York City.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Telegrapher Weaver, P. R. R., Phillipsburg, N. J., recently stated to Brother S. G. Simanton, local chairman, Frenchtown, N. J., that: "P. R. R. Telegrapher Harte, chairman the D. A. S. above Phillipsburg, had been telling the men up that way that if they would join the D. A. S. they would get a raise in wages. When the "hand-out" occurred last March no one above Phillipsburg received any of it, Harte himself included. Harte did not like this, and took the matter up with Telegrapher Vetter, the D. A. S. man at Lambertville, N. J. Harte claimed Vetter said to him, "Well, now, boy, get busy and get these men all in the D. A. S. and you will all get something in the next advance." Harte was not satisfied with this, and said he wrote Vetter about as follows: "I have not received any advance at all yet, and I want it as promised, and so do my men. Now, I will give you 10 days to fix it up, or I will give the whole rotten shooting match away." It is said in a day or two Division Operator Cross and Telegrapher Vetter went to "C R" tower and held a long conference with Harte. Immediately after this the list was corrected to include two more towers on the upper end. It is not known how Harte was

P. R. R. ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AND COERCION ON ACCOUNT OF ITS EMPLOYEES' MEMBERSHIP IN CERTAIN LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 5, 1913.

Mr. G. Z. Stover, local chairman O. R. T., committee, Monongahela Division, P. R. R., address 243 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., says as follows:

That A. G. Mitchell, superintendent P. R. R., Pittsburgh, Pa., said to him after calling him to his office last fall, that if he (Stover) expected any promotion on the P. R. R. he would have to withdraw from the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

That if the company needed a train dispatcher and there were two men to pick from, one a member of the O. R. T., the other a nonmember, ability equal, the O. R. T. man having advantage in seniority, that the nonmember would be chosen for promotion over the O. R. T. member.

That there have been several men promoted over him, and none of them have better records and none of them more ability than he has; that he is absolutely sure this is due to his membership in the O. R. T. and his position as local chairman for the men.

That at one interview with Division Operator C. J. Isler, P. R. R., Pittsburgh, Isler told him (Stover) that the O. R. T. was not popular with the P. R. R. and would never be recognized by the company; that he understood the O. R. T. D. A. & S. was all right and being recognized by the company; that Stover was making a big mistake in his activities as local chairman. Stover declares he can name other instances in connection with these features.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 11.

NATIONAL HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., September 15, 1912.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

President O. R. T., City.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: As per your instructions of the 9th instant, I addressed meetings on the P. R. R. at the following points: Harrisburg, Pa.; Williamsport, Pa.; Elmira, N. Y.; Latrobe, Pa.; Red Bank, Pa.; and Freeport, Pa. I found the men at all those places enthusiastic and ready to back up their committee to the extent of striking if it becomes necessary. They have every confidence in the committee and yourself.

From personal talks with the prominent men of each of the divisions that I visited and my personal observation I am of the opinion that 90 per cent or better will strike should one be called.

The officials have visited every employee, and in some instances, especially the ladies and old employees, have endeavored to intimidate them into saying they would not strike. The ladies were told they would never be permitted to work again and the old employees were advised that they would lose all rights in old-age pension fund if they struck.

Employees who have been superannuated by the Pennsylvania R. R. Voluntary Relief Association have been advised that they would be expected to return to the company's service should a strike take place.

In the territory I visited you can depend upon the employees walking out if a strike is called.

The company's organization cuts no figure in that territory, as there are no members worth mentioning out there; I only learned of two of them.

Yours, fraternally,

J. A. NEWMAN,
First Vice President O. R. T.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,

President, City.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Within the past week I have addressed meetings of Pennsylvania employees in the telegraph department at Greenwood, Del.;

Wilmington, Del.; Camden, N. J.; Trenton, N. J.; and Baltimore, Md.; meeting in all about 400 men. They are very much incensed against the treatment they have received from their employer and the way their committee had been used recently.

The situation is further aggravated by the company attempting to form an organization of its employees to be used for its own purpose, the company being willing to meet representatives from its own organization and treating with contempt the committee that was elected by the employees to represent them. The company wants the small minority to represent the great majority, and as a consequence 100 per cent of the men favor a strike.

I canvassed the situation closely and you may rely upon the truth of this statement.

Fraternally, yours,

J. J. DERMODY,
Fourth Vice President.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 12.

P. R. R. VOLUNTARY RELIEF.

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 5, 1913.

Mr. G. Z. Stover, local chairman, P. R. R., Monongahela division (O. R. T.) committee, 243 5th Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa., to-day stated in part as follows:

That in 1910 the Voluntary Relief (P. R. R.) became practically a compulsory proposition; that it is the policy of the company to not engage the services of men who can not successfully pass the Vol. R'l'f examination; that while he does not now belong to that relief it is due to the manner in which he has filled out blanks and answered questions by examiners; that it has been suggested to him by the division operator that "you do not need to go into very close details, they do not need to know all about you," words to that effect; this in an endeavor to get Stover to pass the examination and take membership, which Stover does not want, declaring the Vol. R'l'f is but a graft.

That it is a popular and general belief among the employees of the P. R. R. that several years before they reach retirement age demotion is given them in order to reduce rate of pension when retirement comes to them; that pension rates are arrived at by the average wage of the man during the last 10 years of service.

That the P. R. R. gained a very large sum of money through the "laying off" or discharging its shopmen and the strike resulting from this action in 1911; that there were men in the shops who had been in the service for 25 years and all those who were dismissed from the service or went on strike and belonged to the relief lost all they had paid into it; those who were taken back went into the service and into the Vol. Relief as new employees and members; of course, those who were barred by age from the relief are not members.

T. E. ELLIS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 14, 1913.

Conductor Newcomer, work extra, 1142, on P. R. R., between Moores and Chester, Pa., Feb. 13, 1913, among other things stated as follows:

That the P. R. R. Vol. Relief is compulsory, inasmuch that an applicant for work must pass the examination of the Vol. Relief examiner before a position will be given, and if not successful with the examination no position will be given the applicant; in other words, it is join the Vol. R'l'f or no job.

Station policeman, P. R. R., Broad Street Sta., says same thing and adds that he was never asked to join the relief, but was put there at once before he went to work, pays $1.50 each month. I understand same thing exists on the Philadelphia and Reading R'y.

There is also reports that the P. R. R. runs a double insurance; that is, when they put a new employee into the $500 class they place his risk with some regular insurance company for $1,000; this was mentioned by Conductor Newcomer and also Operator W. H. Gibson, Moores, Pa.

T. E. ELLIS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 22, 1913.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM, President,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Referring to article 5 in your petition to the Industrial Commission, it is a matter of discussion among some of the employees of the P. R. R. that a large number of the foreigners who enter the service of that company, and, of course are compelled to contribute to the Vol. Relief, do not give their correct names from one reason or another. In case anything happens to these men there is no legal connection whereby the heirs or beneficiaries may recover. It is said the company officials understand this feature.

PENNSYLVANIA LINES WEST OF PITTSBURGH.
INDIANAPOLIS DIVISION, OFFICE OF DIVISION OPERATOR,
Columbus, Ohio, May 7, 1914.

Mr. A. H. LANTZ, N. I. Cabin, Ind.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your note of May 1, the company furnishes you the position and pays you the salary, and as they have an insurance for the benefit of employees, they wish all employees to be members of the R. D.

It seems to me it is a mistake for a man not to be a member when he is in the service. Of course, if you can not see it that way, will send you a blank for withdrawal.

Very truly,

J. H. McALPINE,
Division Operator.

MARCH 18, 1915.

Geo. F. Hoffman, 641 Dauphin Street, Harrisburg, states that he has worked for the P. R. R. for three different times; the last period being for six years.

He was laid off in November, 1913—furloughed—in company terms.

For the first three months after he was furloughed he continued to pay his Volunteer Relief payments of $1.50 a month. The fourth month the company refused his payment, saying that he had been dismissed from the service. They did not return the $4.50 which he had paid after leaving the company service, nor is it their custom to do so in similar incidences.

Mr. Hoffman says that he individually has received as much from the relief as he has put into it, as he was sick for 27 months on a stretch, but his case is typical of the company practice.

GEO. F. HOFFMAN.
W. H. PIERCE.

HARRISBURG, PA., March 20, 1915.

To who it concerned:

This is to certify that I, the undersigned, do hereby state that I was furloughed on March 28, 1914, and that the P. R. R. accepted relief money after the same. I was also dropped from the service about June 15, 1914, and have receipts that the said R. R. Co. accepted relief money for that entire month and did not offer to return to me the surplus. I will also state that I was in the first-class relief.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD—WORKING CONDITIONS, TELEGRAPHERS AND TOWERMEN.

Working conditions are continually going from bad to worse on the railroad.

On the Pennsylvania, in the Philadelphia district, it would be hard to picture the exact conditions, for it is almost beyond description to give a truly accurate pen picture.

In speaking of the telegraphers and towermen in the vicinity referred to, it must be said: While conditions in the recent past have been well-nigh unbearable, the company has lately been heaping insult to injury by unceremoniously laying off large numbers of men and closing up offices.

It was rumored that one morning soon after the last lay off as high as 25 telegraphers reported for work at one place and nothing for them to do. The recent lay off is not the first that has occurred this year.

It is beginning to look as if the telautograph may soon be used as an excuse for displacing more men, for these machines are being installed and message business is being diverted through other channels, the object unquestionably points in the direction of further retrenchments.

It is not because the duties of the men in this department have in any way lessened that the company has found an excuse for this reduction, on the other hand the work is continually becoming harder and harder, with no relief in sight; and instead of giving some form of assistance by putting on additional men they are just doing the opposite, and adding unjustifiably to our already tremendous burden.

This burden to which reference is made, and upon which too much emphasis can not be placed, can only be pictured in an illustration of words, and will bring out more clearly the true meaning of this so-called contention relative to working conditions.

The list of physical wrecks, premature deaths, etc., about to be shown, has caused deep sorrow and distress in many homes, from among our associates—passed and present—with whom we have worked shoulder to shoulder, and in behalf of whom we are now registering a protest of words.

The list about to be presented are of men who are, or have been employed in about three or four of the block offices of this little terminal division, and reference is made to the particular individual cases, so that others who follow may benefit.

The following is a partial list of those of the employees affected on this division, and while perhaps in one or two instances may not be shown just as accurately as might be, yet they are given as nearly correct as possible at this time.

The two following sudden deaths occurred, a few brief weeks apart, and early in the present year, 1914:

Faber Sellers, telegraph operator, "A" tower; died suddenly on his return home from work one day in early part of present year. Put in many years service at this office. In prime of life.

William C. Frazier, telegraph operator, "C" tower; died suddenly at his home one day after work early part of present year. See many years' service at this office. He was in the prime of life.

It was perhaps about five years ago that the following death occurred: M. J. Flynn, leverman, "B" tower; died suddenly on his way to work one morning, while in the prime of life; hardly past 47 years; was an old employee; formerly worked at "N."

The following is a list of those more or less seriously affected physically, and presumably directly the result of overwork:

John O'Brien, leverman, "B" tower; physical wreck; has been confined to his home, and absent from work for over a year. Doubt expressed as to his recovery or return to work. Has seen many years' service, and is aged about 45 or 47 years.

William Duffy, leverman, "B" tower; physical and nervous wreck. After being confined to his home for many months he was finally removed to an insane asylum, where he now is. He, also, is over a year away from work, and doubt is expressed if he may again return. He is an old employee, and about 47 or 50 years old.

These are all men of families.

Joseph Uleau, leverman, "N" tower; physical wreck, and has been absent from work for the past 4 or 5 years. Doubt expressed as to his return to duty. Was one-armed man, and having family, being aged about 47 years.

James Hutton, leverman, "N" tower; physical and nervous wreck for about two years. Was absent from work for over a year before returning to duty. Now working over a year. Is an employee of over 30 years' standing, and is about 49 years of age.

Death: Robert McNutt, leverman, "A" tower; physical and nervous wreck, having died in early part of present year after some months' confinement to his home. Was also a telegrapher with same company some years previous. Was old employee, and aged about 48 years.

Death: Harvey Miller, train director, "N" tower; physical wreck, and said to have died in the almshouse broken hearted. He was an old and faithful employee, and a demotion he received hastened his death about three years ago. He was about 58 or 60 years of age.

The following deaths were undoubtedly hastened because of worry over their work. These men died possibly within the last 3 to 5 years:

Low Brown, leverman, "K" tower; died at about 55 years old, after brief illness. Old employee.

John Beatty, leverman, "C" tower; died at about 55 years, after extended illness. Was an old employee.

Willard Brown, telegrapher, "B" tower; died at about 50 years, after brief illness. Was an old employee.

The following victims departed for a premature grave without having hardly reached the age of 50 years, and all died within a year or two apart, and about perhaps ten years ago:

T. O. Gallagher, train director, "A" tower; physical wreck, and died after a brief illness. Without a doubt overwork hastened his premature death. For years he worked this nerve-racking job without any assistance, but soon after his death two assistants were appointed. He was an old employee, and aged about 47 or 48 years.

B. F. Donecker, ex train director, "A" tower; died a suicide, while holding the position of yardmaster at Broad Street Station. Unpleasant surroundings hastened his end and rumor had it that his sudden death was the cause of a threat of demotion. Aged about 48 years.

E. M. Myers, ex train director, "A" tower; died after a short sickness, hastened by the death-dealing grind at "A" soon after his appointment as yardmaster, having been elevated to the position left vacant by death of Donecker. Was old employee. Age about 48.

Here is another victim of the dreadful "daily rush": M. E. Casey, telegrapher, "JR" office; physical and nervous wreck; absent from work 2 to 3 years, and in bad shape yet. Still confined to his home. He is an old and faithful employee and in the telegraph department many years. He is aged about 48 or 50.

The following is an additional list of towermen who were seriously affected by this nerve-racking daily drudgery:

I. F. Gill, train director, "A" tower; collapsed from the strain while on duty. After a lay-off period and recuperating he resumed his usual occupation. In service many years, and aged about 47 or 48 years.

L. M. Hatton, ex-train director, "A" tower; became a physical wreck, and after an extended lay-off returned to his work and finally accepted a new position of clerkship to the yardmaster. He has been long in the service, and is aged about 49 or 50 years.

W. J. Wilson, ex-train director, "A" tower; became a physical wreck, and after a great loss of time finally accepted a new position at Washington, D. C., with the new Terminal Co. there. Was about 30 years in the service, and now aged possibly 50 years.

J. K. Osmond, ex-train director, "A" tower; collapsed from the strain while on duty, and after an extended lay-off returned to work in the capacity of leverman, which is a decided demotion. He has been many years in the service, and is aged possibly 46 or perhaps less.

W. G. Cox, train director, "N" tower; became a physical wreck. His condition was aided none by the foul atmosphere from the large engine yard close by, besides the acid fumes from electric batteries located in cellar of building. After much loss of time he finally got located at "B" tower, same occupation. Has been long in service, and is aged about 48 years.

Wm. J. Wilson, electrician, "N" tower; became a physical wreck and resigned his position to get away from the unbearable surroundings. The foul atmospheres here also were anything but favorable to his condition. He had lost much time through sickness and was forced to this action in the interest of his health. He was an old employee, and about two years ago, when he resigned, he was about 50 years old.

Chris. Shread, electrician, "N" tower; became a physical wreck, and is at present confined in a sanitarium. He is away from work for the past six months or more. He, with others who were affected, frequently found cause for complaint over conditions and the filthy, unbearable atmosphere. Aged about 47. Worked 12 hours. No vacation. He was old employee. He filled position vacated by Wilson, who also worked 12 hours and no vacation.

The following is a list of men who were forced to free themselves from their jobs rather than submit to continual injustice and the unbearable surroundings:

D. C. Dickson, train director, "A" tower; relinquished his position and accepted a demotion at another office as block operator to be relieved from the tremendous responsibilities. Is an old employee, very steady, and aged about 48 or 50 years.

C. D. Richards, train director, "A" tower; resigned his position about five years ago. Old and steady employee. About 45.

J. W. Richman, train director, "A" tower; resigned position couple years ago. Old and steady employee. Aged about 35.

Elmer Derr, day operator, "N" tower; relinquished his day job for a night office at another end of the district (no promotion) to be away from the "grind", the abusive tactics of those in authority, and the unhealthy surroundings. Old employee, and aged about 35 years.

This is just a few individual cases picked up hurriedly from the terminal division and noted here. Many other such cases may be traced by a more careful investigation. All the above information is simply presented to clearly define as briefly as possible the intolerable conditions under which the men here are forced to put up with.

The greatest number of cases referred to is confined to practically the last five years, with perhaps just a few running as far back as 10 years.

Previous to 10 years ago such occurrences as described were of very, very rare existence. Collapses and breakdowns were not then known and deaths in this department seldom happened. It is clearly seen by this that there is something wrong, and something is radically wrong.

It is a fact that most all of these men referred to had some experience with organization at one time and know of its advantages, but unfortunately at the present time a very small percentage of them are affiliated with the labor movement.

This is the secret of their trouble, and had these poor unfortunate human derelicts not abandoned their organization as they did there would not have been such a sad story to tell.

This subject matter is not being presented from any selfish motives, nor is it appealing for any action in behalf of the afflicted ones; on the contrary, it is purely presented as a lesson in the advantages of organization.

This does not infer, of course, that we wish these unfortunates any further bad luck; far from it, for it is only natural that we sympathize with them, but after all there is little to be accomplished by sympathy; therefore we are compelled to direct our activities more and more earnestly in the direction of organization.

The men who have been lucky enough to continue at work and who have not yet been stricken down in their tracks are surely beginning to show "the worse of the wear." They are beginning to show that worn-out appearance, and numbers of them are becoming very nervous, and this is plainly visible in their daily makeup. It is remarkable, indeed, that they have not been driven to drink.

Speaking of retrenchments, this may be justified to perhaps some degree on the railroad, but absolutely not amid the rank and file, where the lash is falling and where all the useful and laborious work is done. Higher up there is lots of opportunity for exterminating waste. This is the sort of waste that undoubtedly was referred to when the railroads were urged to reduce their operating expenses. A little investigation is all that is necessary.

At several of the block offices on this Philadelphia Terminal Division and where hundreds of trains are handled daily, there are no levermen employed, although they are equipped with the electric-pneumatic interlocking, and the telegrapher has to do all of this work, handling the switches and signals.

Some of these offices control subway and tunnel trains and make movements on their respective sections controlling trains running on from three to five divisions of railway.

(1) One morning recently a telegrapher reported off sick who had worked one of these offices where tunnel, subway, and surface trains were operated. No experienced man was available for his place. A telegrapher was sent to this office who was not familiar with the work. To overcome this great difficulty the 12-hour electrician on duty down stairs was called up to help out and requested to operate the levers for balance of the day, which he did.

(2) At a similar office close by and where the night leverman's services were dispensed with not long since, the day leverman failed to report until late in the day, and consequently the telegrapher on duty was forced to handle the enormous business single handed during the busy hours of the morning.

During the busy season, in the summer months, when the vacation list is in operation, at these offices the greater portion of the men work from 30 to 40 and 50 days before they got a single relief day, and then when it is their time for vacation they get a stingy week or 10 days. Some of them do not even get a vacation and some of them get only one relief day a month.

At one time it was the custom to give all offices, or most all, ten days' vacation and two relief days monthly, but since the men's organization has been disrupted the company has taken advantage of this, and many of such privileges have been abolished.

If the telegrapher and towerman had any brains at all he might be only working three or four days a week, just like some of our locomotive engineers, and be receiving big wages like them, for their position is just as responsible, and more so than that of the engineman, but it seems they can not see the length of their nose.

Among other things which have proved to be a great annoyance and affecting lever men (together with the ground switchmen) is the fact that boys are being brought into service to fill those positions, and for the most part they are the sons of officials, foremen, or other influential individuals directly or indirectly associated with the company.

When a lever man (or a switchman) tries to get a day off for some good and sufficient reason he is invariably informed that nothing can be done for him and that there is no boy available to fill his place.

When these boys are first employed they are started as messengers; then, after a few weeks, or perhaps less, they are used as telephone operators at some tower.

Usually at "N" tower, West Philadelphia yard, these boys are "broke in." This office controls the big passenger-car yard there and is the principal feeder for Broad Street Station. The messenger boys and telephone boys employed there are encouraged to pick up the work, pay close attention to the lever manipulations, and within a brief period of time they are pressed into service as levermen, and they are also used on the ground, filling the capacity of switch tenders.

In these capacities the boys mentioned are required to report train movements, both in the yard limits, to and from the main tracks, and also transmit orders between the yardmaster (and other officials) and the train crews.

The ages of these boys range from 16 to 18 and 19 years, and there are instances where they have filled some of these positions at the age of 14 years. When these boys get to learn a little something about the work, then the situation of the men concerned becomes almost unbearable in many cases, for they usually know more than a man, and the boys are, besides, encouraged by those in authority.

They go so far as to direct train movements and the like when the man in charge is busy on phone or otherwise engaged or temporarily absent.

Wrecks, delays, and other forms of confusion have already occurred by such irregularities, and there are instances where men have suffered discipline because of the same, and there is evidently no redress.

In cases where trainmen or enginemen are involved and where discipline is to be dealt out, the towerman is forced to keep quiet and not divulge these irregularities for fear he himself would be punished and perhaps lose his job, and all because of the fact he has no organization to back him up in his protest. If these things could be made clear to the train hands and point out the dangers to which they are exposed it is possible that there would be a different story to tell before many months. For their benefit they should insist on the recognition of our organization and encourage the unorganized to unite, thereby hastening an understanding whereby all these dangers will be eliminated.

In former years it was the custom to employ older and more experienced persons in these positions, especially for tower work, but a change seems to have occurred, and not for the better.

Either cripples or old experienced men used to be given the preference with a chance to fill these jobs on levers, but such opportunities are rare now.

Besides, most of these boys who hold the positions seem to be able to do nearly as they please and "get away with it," as the men in charge offer but little resistance, presumably because of the influence back of some of the lads.

Promotions for lever men and operators seldom occur, but when a chance vacancy of this character does occur some "pet" usually gets the job, and who, very often, comes from another department or branch of the service.

The towermen here in this short district, which is commonly known as the elevated, are all old, experienced, and faithful employees. The company does not seem to appreciate their value; neither are they holding out any special inducements that would in any way tend in the direction of encouragement.

The wages are not such that a man can afford to take a day off once in a while to rest up; on the contrary, it takes every cent that one can make nowadays to keep the wolf from the door. Besides that constant grind, grind, grind on the job keeps the doctor almost constantly on the move propping us up for just one more day's work. These doctor bills must be paid, and nearly all of us have some good-sized bills already.

Nearly every day you hear of some new victim in some of the departments who is "all in" and is not now working every day like he used to. These are facts, and all that a person has to do is simply go amongst the men; you can see it right in their faces. It shows up clearly and no mistake. About worked to death, so to speak.

Recently an engineer had some slight trouble with his engine, and it was getting close to leaving time. He called in one of the towers to report the defect, and recommended a change of engines. The poor fellow was just about ready to collapse. He was simply "all in." He was a nervous wreck and he looked it. Hundreds of instances may be quoted, but why continue? There is a reason for all these terrible things. Retrenchments and further retrenchments help it along. The work is carried on just as hard after retrenching as it was before, and just as much of it. But we are urged to hurry, and if we are not inclined we are politely informed that So-and-so does it and we got to. So there you are. Organization can improve this condition if it will half try. This same state of affairs exists among the trainmen as well as that of the enginemen. Their boss also has got them all about half scared to death.

The men in all the towers alike have the same kick. All you can get out of them is, "It's hell; it's hell."

Attention might be directed to one, for illustration, in West Philadelphia, that is known as "N" tower, or otherwise "the madhouse."

Up until about three years ago this office was in charge of a train director, one who directs movements to be made. Some changes occurred in the district, and finally the assistant yardmasters were given desk room in this large tower. After some few months, and when the A. Y. Ms. had slightly familiarized themselves with the tower work, it was intimated that some few of them were desirous of taking hold of it themselves and running it without a train director. Anyhow, preparations were made for the change, and the train director was finally removed. At the same time one or two of these A. Y. Ms. realized it would undoubtedly work a hardship on them, but the "bright lights," or the younger element in the movement, had that wish carried out, for their desire predominated. They were now destined to fill two positions, that of assistant yardmaster and also that of train director, and they are now making a sorry plight of it. Of course they are saving money for the company, and naturally the job is made harder for somebody. Besides, trains are being made up and moved; but how? Wrecks, delays, and inconvenience to the traveling public is the result. Human wrecks, also, is one of the results. These A. Y. Ms. try to make up trains, and they also try to move them. There is little or no system in their methods and mismanagement dominates. There was no seeming special instructions given these men as to how their work should be performed, and now they are having a hard time to hold their end up and keep things moving. They do as best they can at making up trains and make a very faint attempt at directing movements.

Making up trains is one thing and directing movements is another, and that's sure.

The passenger yardmaster has a corps of assistants all over his district. He has two special assistants who work 12 hours, day and night. They are in charge of the West Philadelphia district, and make "N" tower their headquarters, all the assistants in the district coming under them. The two 12-hour men get in the neighborhood of $150 per month, and the other assistants get, perhaps, $15 to $20 less.

The "rule" at "N" tower is about like this: The 12-hour man "calls combinations," and his 8-hour assistant also calls combinations, all at the same time. Then they get busy on the phones, and the leverman is being continually prompted to "keep 'em moving." If he moves them right, then all is well, but if he moves them not right then the vulgarity and sarcasm is something unbearable. Conductors and trainmen take a turn at it, suggesting movements to the leverman at times, and he is supposed to take notice to it. and usually things go wrong again, then there is more trouble for the leverman. And to help the leverman along in his troubles the telephone boy or the messenger boy gets on the job, and as usual must obey; then, 9 times out of 10, there is more trouble for him. Wrecks innumerable have occurred at this place, and some men have been hurt and many suspended because of this state of affairs.

No two men of these assistants call combinations alike; that is, when they do call them. Invariably, their principle instructions to the leverman is, "Keep 'em moving; keep 'em moving."

Very few of these men know anything about interlocking, know little about the routes, and practically nothing about the switch or signal numbers, and there is continual confusion.

This is a very big yard; in fact, three yards in one; and with 30 to 40 tracks. Road engines and shifters are constantly on the move, making up, backing, and pulling empty passenger trains. Once in a great while they have an occasional passenger in, but not very often. On special occasions, or in emergency instances, we find it necessary to handle loaded ones.

Discipline for yard men is just as severe as for men controlling the passenger tracks.

Not long since a switch failed to work at this place, and the electrician was called to remedy defect. He made it safe to make one movement over it. Then a movement was awaiting to pass over same switch, but over another point. The leverman protested that it was unsafe to do so, but the man in charge insisted that he do it. The result was a wreck; engine and cars derailed. For this the leverman and electrician were both disciplined.

On another occasion when the man in charge was busy on the phone, the phone boy called a combination for a road engine to back in from engine yard to pick up his train. The leverman had to obey. The route was not properly protected and should have been carefully guarded by the a. y. m. in charge. The result was an empty draft of coaches backed straight into the side of the road engine, derailing and wrecking the rolling stock. For this a brakeman got a very severe suspension. In this instance all hands had to jump hurriedly to save their lives, and there were some narrow escapes.

This is some of the many, many experiences at this point. It is the result of one man trying to fill two men's jobs. But it's becoming common now on the railroad—one man doing two or three men's work. It's about time something was done to stop it. It's dangerous.

The way men in authority talk nowadays is something ridiculous, for they demand that you not only carry out the work of your own department, but they also insist that it's otherwise—for you work for the ——— railroad and you got to do this, you got to do that, and you got to do just what I say. In other words, they insinuate they will take an engineman off his locomotive to tamp ties, if necessary, or a telegrapher or clerk from his office to drive spikes. This is practically the situation in so many words. And they even brag about it.

Another unbearable annoyance at "N" is the fact that these a. y. m.'s come on duty and sit right down to work with their full street clothes on, and in some instances wearing their overcoats. Up goes the windows at their pleasure, and stay that way until they see fit to close them. This in the dead of winter, too. The leverman and operator in their office garb are forced to suffer and pay doctor bills. The only satisfaction you get is, who the hell cares.

These a. y. m.'s fight one another like cats and dogs. Their responsibility is so very great that they keep nagging and picking at one another in crazy struggle trying to keep the business moving on time. Just lately two of them almost came to blows. Then one of them will turn around to the leverman and say, "Have you got that—why that movement we were just talking about." Then the leverman is in wrong again if he don't happen to have it.

These men are all old employees and came from the train service, and an old man is not young by any means when it comes to handling this kind of business. This case might compare with the taking of a canal-boat captain and placing him in charge of a large, modern ocean liner, and it makes nearly a similar comparison. They threaten reorganization—meaning, you'll lose your job. They threaten everybody, when it suits their convenience, in the struggle keeping business moving.

Very often when a regular a. y. m. is off for a few days or on vacation then they will send a conductor or a brakeman to fill his place. Oftener the latter. This is not all pleasant.

When a leverman or an operator reports off acct. sickness or the like, then usually it is a case of double up. This means 12 hours' work, and it's a hard, hard proposition, for, truly, 8 hours is really too long to work in one of these infernos.

Another thing is the difficulty of getting to the toilet while on duty in some of these offices. Very often a man is compelled to go the full 8 hours without being able to attend to the wants of nature, either because of the rush of business or the fact that the toilet is unhandy to reach at the proper time. Besides some of these toilets are filthy dirty.

The a. y. m. has been very successful in imposing several of his duties over to the table of the telegrapher, and the latter must be good, for it will not benefit him in the least to raise a protest. He knows what would happen.

During all these hard times when business is so "bad" the traveler will occasionally see some ladies riding in smokers among the men, and because of the overcrowded condition of the rest of the train. On these trains you very frequently find passengers standing for hours, and no seats; then, besides, there are very many instances where they got to open their own trap doors to get out of the cars at the stations, because of not enough of trainmen.

There has been much said about irregularities in these pages; in how many of these instances has the law been broken? In several, undoubtedly.

What can be done to prevent recurrence? How is this to be stopped and the law breakers punished?

If this grind is to continue, as it is shown in the list of victims here recorded, what is to become of the additional human derelicts that will surely result, following their maimed, shattered, and disfigured condition?

The slaughter has become unbearable, and the turning point should be at hand. Praying and appealing is out of the question. Something more radical should be the order of the day. Demands should be our ultimatum—nothing less—for this is a life and death struggle.

We should urge the enginemen, the trainmen, and conductors to take notice. We should urge that they aid us in an attempt to gain recognition. We have the proof, and we can show to the world that we have a real grievance. We positively would get the support of these organizations. We already have been assured, locally, that they will stand by us. The grievance is just as much their grievance as it is ours, for their members are in danger of injury from irregularities, besides some of them are being punished or suspended unjustly—and is this not a grievance for them?

No time like the present, and now would be an opportune moment for action.

If an organization with a hundred or two men can command respect of the officials of the Penna. R. R. like a certain element that now exists, insignificant as it is, and get a lot of free advertising at the same time, what might we not expect with our several hundred members, if we go the right way about it, and backed up by the influence of the other four great brotherhoods?

The following is a proof of the contemptible frame-up:

This circular was recently sent out from the offices of the Pennsylvania Railroad, accompanied by a small book of so-called regulations:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., October 27, 1914.

All concerned, telegraph department, Philadelphia terminal division:

We send herewith copy of Regulations for the Government of Employees of the Telegraph Department, effective October 1, 1914.

It is to be understood that these regulations were proposed by the committee of operators who are members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Dispatchers, Agents, and Signalmen, and have been agreed to by the company after various conferences with that committee.

H. LOGAN, Division Operator.

The oppressed ones have now been heard from, and their message is in good hands, let us hope.

P. S.—The a. y. m's at "N" have all stated times innumerable that they could not perform their full duties properly and fully as it is expected of them. They have all intimated to their respective levermen time and time again that they could not call combinations or look after the movements and attend to their own work, too. And this is a fact.

The a. y. m. must keep a true and correct record of all his cars as he moves them from place to place, and is constantly making notations on his various sheets and lists, is on the phones almost constantly, and giving orders to crews, and has not the time to call combinations intelligently.

Nearly every time a leverman sets up a route without getting proper instructions it is invariably wrong; then a signal must be put to danger, which is in violation of the company's rules. This is one of the principal reasons for this protest. These men have confessed their inability to fill the two positions.

Recently an a. y. m. picked up a paper weight, savagely, because of some irregularity of the leverman, and showed a disposition of firing it at his head, saying, if it was not for the law, etc., what he would do. If this was a joke it was a serious one; besides, there was a number of men present, and it was very humiliating to the leverman, who was innocent of any wrongdoing on his part.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 23, 1914.

Mr. H. B. PERHAM,
President, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Some time ago my attention was called to the illness of Brother W. F. Duffy, leverman, "B" tower, this city, and who resides at 1543 N. 57th St., Phila., Pa., and who holds a card in the grand division of this organization; I was advised that his illness was due to overwork. (Last summer I called on Brother Duffy, when he produced his membership card and requested it to be held secret for the present at least.) In view of the above, I immediately called at his residence to pay my respects and to see if there was anything the brothers could do for him. Mrs. Duffy advised me then that Brother Duffy had been taken to an asylum and that nothing but his work put him where he is, and that Mr. Duffy worked some thirty years for the P. R. R.

Last week I learned that Dr. Chas. J. Cavanagh, 1518 Pine Street, Philadelphia, Pa., was Brother Duffy's physician, and determined to call on the doctor, which I did with the following result:

Dr. Cavanagh says that during the month of Nov., 1913, Wm. Duffy, with whom he had been acquainted for some twenty-odd years, came to him in a very nervous condition, claiming that detectives were following him, and that the P. R. R. was laying for him and watching him to find a cause to discharge him, threatening to commit suicide, and laboring under all kinds of hallucinations. The doctor says he tried to have Brother Duffy admitted to Kirkbright's Sanitarium, but the specialists told him that Kirkbrights would not think of such a thing (Kirkbright's is an institution for the elite, and, I am told, charges from $20 to $40 per week to keep a party there), but that finally he received word to bring his patient; but is unable to say who is keeping Brother Duffy there, but thinks the P. R. R. is doing it; he says he noticed a notation "Pennsylvania R. R." on the slip and $5 when he signed up, and is not sure whether it meant place of employment or that the company was putting up the cash. (I saw Mrs. Duffy since the interview with the doctor, and she tells me that she is putting up the cash at the hospital, but that the company had an investigator there, and that she expects them to do something more than pay the relief before very long. Mrs. Duffy is getting the relief money regularly.) The doctor says Kirkbright's said they would keep him for 13 weeks, and that he is there now since Jan. 3rd, 1914. (Mrs. Duffy further states that one of the first questions the company inspector asked her was whether Brother Duffy was a member of any of the R. R. organizations, and says she replied that he was not at this time but had been until this Marr trouble came up in 1906.) Doctor Cavanagh says he has known Brother Duffy and his entire family for some twenty years and knows that his present condition is not due to dissipation, nor was there a strain or taint of insanity in the entire Duffy family, and is therefore of the opinion that the mental strain of his work drove Mr. Duffy insane. Dr. Cavanagh says he is willing to testify to these facts at any time, but requests that he be not put on the stand as a specialist, as he is nothing more than an ordinary physician.

I gave the facts above set forth to the inspector or investigator on Thursday night of last week.

For your information.
Yours, fraternally,

PAUL H. WENRICH,
Organizer, General Delivery, Philadelphia, Pa.

PERHAM EXHIBIT NO. 13.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 22, 1913.

Mr. Michael Hennesy, shoe cobbler, Pitcairn, Pa., an intelligent, old-fashioned Irishman, 63 years of age, with a shop facing where the scenes occurred in 1911, in connection with the shopman's strike, said to-day:

That he saw about all that occurred, so much so that he neglected his work; that the company undoubtedly used methods which they hoped would bring on trouble, but that the people there were level-headed people and it could not be done.

That one day a dozen or two P. R. R. Company "bulls" (these people all call them "bulls") marched up and down the streets of the borough, he feels, for the purpose of inciting the people to violence, but that the people were too wise and did not molest them; that this marching was not repeated nor had it been done before that day he saw it.

That the P. R. R. sent for the sheriff to interfere; the sheriff came to Pitcairn, but found no trouble and said he could see no use in making expense for the county by bringing deputies there, as everything was peaceable, but after this, as the company was not succeeding in keeping men at work in their shops, as the strikers were successful in persuading those working to quit and join the strikers, the sheriff was again sent for by the company, and he came with his deputies, assisting the company as above, he supposes at the expense of the citizens of the county, a demonstration of the strength of capital and corporations over labor, as he put it; that he believes the company now realizes it made a great mistake in 1911, as it lost the cream of its shop employees at Pitcairn; the methods used were very bad, and the men only wanted the right to join and belong to their union.

Judd. Bruff is sheriff of Allegheny Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 23, 1913.

M. D. Cameron, physician and burgess of the borough of Pitcairn, Pa., to-day, among other things, said as follows:

That on May 18, 1911, he left Pitcairn, Pa., at 5.03 or 5.04 a. m. for Fayette County, Pa., for the purpose of looking at a piece of timberland. Met there a Mr. Wm. Oler. That he returned to Pitcairn at 9.30 or 10 p. m. same date.

That the night before (May 17) he told Chief of Police Porter of his intended trip on the next day and asked Porter to act as mayor until he returned; that it was known about a week before by citizens of Pitcairn that he was to make the trip.

That when he returned he was told that the company "bulls" had marched in the borough streets, but of course he had not witnessed it. I asked him if it was supposed that the chief would act thus. He hesitated and said, "Well, it has been said that the president of the council is the man, but, of course, was at work during the day and could not do so."

That he sent for Sheriff Bruff, who came to Pitcairn a number of times during the trouble; that Bruff, he was sorry to say, sympathized with the men and made light of the idea of sending deputies into the town, claiming the action was not needed; that it is a fact that Bruff made speeches favoring the men.

"Q. What, in your opinion, brought on all this trouble, Doctor?—A. Well, it was outsiders; the P. R. R. objects to its employees belonging to unions coming under the A. F. of L., giving its reasons for suggestion, that the A. F. of L. makes so much trouble for both employers and employees; the P. R. R., however, does not object outside of that.

"Q. Did you meet the heads or officers of the four other organizations, trainmen, engineers, etc., that came here?—A. Yes; I met them; Mr. Lapp, of Baltimore, was one. I called them to my office and had, with other citizens, a conference with them. There was no P. R. R. official there; this meeting was for the purpose of finding some way to get the shopmen to return to work, cease striking."

Cameron says many strikers told him they did not know why they were out on strike.

That quite a number moved to other towns, Irvin for one, and then came to work on trains, as they did not want to go to work from Pitcairn on account of the action of the strikers at the "bridge," where they congregated, hooting, calling those who went to work "scabs" and other vile names, this action by the strikers was the reason he (Cameron) insisted on Sheriff Bruff sending deputies into the situation and which he finally prevailed on Bruff to do.

That the day that 150 or so of the P. R. R. "bulls" came across the bridge and lined up it had been reported to the shop officials that a man wanted to go into the shops to work, could not do so account strikers, and had taken refuge in Mr. Lewis's store, but that this report proved to be an error; the "bulls" were sent to help this supposed individual out.

That the attitude of the strikers at the bridge at all times was one of force and not moral suasion.

That the sheriff had about 40 deputies there; that most of them were appointed from the ranks of the strikers.

That he has no idea whatever why the P. R. R. "bulls" marched in the streets the day he was out of town; that they did not do so before or after that date (leaving it for me to find out, I suppose).

That after his conference with the officers of the four other brotherhoods, he called on a lot of strikers, among whom was Charles Denny, and told them, making it very strong and clear that the attitude of those officials meant that the strikers would receive no assistance from those brotherhoods and did not have their sympathy; that they were not in accord with the actions of the men on a strike, urging them to go back, etc.

That he (Cameron) was P. R. R. doctor, 1893 to 1896, but never received any wages, simply granted a pass; that he quit the job because there was no money in it for him.

Cameron, answering my question relative to company laying off men, said, "Yes; I think they did; a few, not many though." I hinted at a thousand; he laughed and said, "One third that number would be nearer it."

That he was through the P. R. R. "bulls'" headquarters; made a complete visit to all cars; thinks the company had about 200 of them there; thought the "bulls" looked ordinary men, pretty fair-looking lot of men, in fact; that he was also through the headquarters of the men imported in by the company to take place of strikers.

"Q. Doctor, are you acquainted with Mr. Kepple?—A. Yes, sir; have known him a number of years.

"Q. Do you consider him a good citizen; is his word good?—A. Yes; Kepple is a good citizen, and I will accept any statement he might make as the truth.

"Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Born, of Wilmerding?—A. Yes, sir; Born is also a good citizen, above the average in intelligence, and a man of his word. I will accept his statement as truth."

Cameron says that about fifty days after the strike was called a lot of strikers engineered a "return to work in a body move," because they did not wish to call any stigma down upon themselves singly; that "hundreds" returned to work in this movement, all inside of 48 to 96 hours.

Cameron also said of Born and Kepple that he heard them talk to the men in committee room several times, and that he considered their talks very reasonable and that good advice was given by them. Of Freeman he said, while he was not so well acquainted, he did not like his manner so well, etc.; that there was a foreigner on the committee that "wouldn't do," words to that effect.

Cameron said the "few" men laid off were treated so in Feb'y and March, 1911, he believes.

That he never saw car loads of strike breakers brought into the place.

T. E. ELLIS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 25, 1913.

HENRY PORTER, night policeman, Pitcairn, Pa., to-day, among other things, said:

That during the shopmen's strike at Pitcairn, Pa., P. R. R. shops in 1911, he did not make any arrests, nor did he have occasion to make any arrests; that everything was peaceable; that neither did the day policemen have occasion to arrest anyone during that period.

That there was no occasion to bring either deputy sheriffs or the State constabulary; that deputy sheriffs were brought in, but that was because the strikers were successful in persuading workmen to join the strikers; that this was not done by force, however; that the strikers were also persuading trainmen to assist the strikers, but did not use force in either case, but talked to them.

That the day the P. R. R. "bulls" marched through the streets of Pitcairn the burgess had gone out of town; that the night before this the burgess had said to him that he was to be out of town the next day, and requested him (Porter) to act as burgess while he was away; that the "bulls" marched early in the forenoon; that he did not molest the "bulls"; that he went to his home and retired at 11 a. m.

That the strikers nor citizens molested the "bulls"; that had they done so, he would have called Sheriff Bruff on phone; later said would have called Mr. Coursan first, as he was president of the council and his superior borough officer; that he did not know the "bulls" were to march; that no one had said anything to him about it, and that he did not know why they marched; that it was not done previous to that day nor after that day.

Asked if he had orders to call Coursan or Bruff, he said, did not remember of such orders; that it was a long time ago, two years ago; this was a favorite answer of his; seemed very reluctant to talk about anything connected with that strike.

About the first answer he made me was, "I do not know anything about it," but gradually opened somewhat.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 29, 1913.

Mr. M. L. KECK, real estate agent, Pitcairn, Pa., this evening, in the presence of four witnesses, among whom was D. A. Sherrer, said as follows:

That there is no doubt but that J. F. Coursan, Pitcairn P. R. R. shops, is responsible for the marching of the P. R. R. special agents through the streets of the borough one day during the shopmen's strike in 1911; that the burgess was out of town that day; that no marching was done before or since that day; that Mr. Coursan was in Pitcairn on that day. During the conversation Keck said that Cameron is burgess only in a nominal way; that he accepted the office with that understanding; that J. F. Coursan is president of the council.

That the system of "on and off" practiced by the P. R. R. in its Pitcairn shops is very wrong and unjust to the men, and was one of the causes of the men attempting to organize in 1911; that the P. R. R. discriminates yet against the merchants of Pitcairn who were sympathizers with the men in 1911; that he was at the meeting between the burgess, the four trainmen brotherhoods, and a few other citizens; it was arranged for, and proved a success in starting the men back to work. This meeting mentioned by Burgess Cameron; see report. Keck leans strongly toward the railroad company. Do not think he knew who I was.

That an agreement was made that one "bull" might come to the post office for mail each day.

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 29, 1913.

Mr. McKELVEY, retired, P. R. R., Altoona, Pa., east end shop, foreman, now on P. R. R. pension, at the home of Mr. J. T. Lewis, Pitcairn, Pa., this evening, among other things, said:

That he as a member of the B. L. E. struck with others on the P. R. R. in 1877; that P. M. Arthur, then chief engineer that brotherhood, declared the strike illegal and took the charter from the P. R. R. men; that he then left the union and never joined it again; that some years ago he became foreman at East Altoona, Pa., was drawing $180 per month when retired, and now draws a $103 per month pension less $2.50 per month, which is taken out account his $2,500 policy or death benefit in the volunteer relief. That the rate of a pension is determined somewhat by the average rate of pay for the last ten years of service; that about the only bad feature connected with the vol. r'lf is that demotion or lowering of the rate of wages during the last ten years decreases the rate of pension, but he believes the company fair in dealing with this matter.

That in his opinion Mr. Thomas, former master mechanic for the P. R. R. at Altoona, was altogether responsible for the dissatisfaction among the men in those shops, due to his policy relative to piecework; that a certain card from his office denoting certain changes was found by the men; this dissatisfaction caused the men to begin organizing; that the men in his shop were not dissatisfied, but sympathized with the others and also organized, but did not remain on strike long, some coming back next morning; that Mr. Thomas left Altoona shortly before the trouble.

53 years in P. R. R. service.

10426 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

AS TO CONDUCT OF STRIKE BREAKERS AND "BULLS" DURING SHOPMEN'S STRIKE, 1911.

THE COLONIAL HOTEL,
Altoona, Pa., February 8, 1913.

Justice Thomas Trimbath, Franklin, Cambria Co., Pa., on Feb. 7, 1913, at his office said, in part, as follows:

That it seemed to him that the P. R. R. placed their cars containing strike breakers and "bulls" in such position that it might have caused trouble, due to the objectionable and beastly conduct indulged in by those people in the presence of the citizens.

That to his personal knowledge these men were many times guilty of deliberate indecent exposure of person in plain view of women and children; that he saw these acts on several occasions; that the matter was reported to officials of the P. R. R., but without avail so far as he knows.

10432 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

CREIGHTON EXHIBIT NO. 3.

[The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, Eastern Pennsylvania Division. Office of General Superintendent.]

ALTOONA, PA., May 9, 1915.

Mr. FRANK P. WALSH,
Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

DEAR SIR: In my testimony before your commission we quoted figures from Altoona machine-shop reports covering the pay of ordinary laborers, under which head we have 492 day workers with an average monthly wage of $52.83 and 87 pieceworkers with an average monthly wage of $69.47. Among these men were included 28 high-rated men, because they fit into this classification better than any other, as follows:

	Cents.
1 storehouse-attendant gang leader.....per hour	44.8
1 laborer gang leader.....do	42.3
1 storehouse stock man.....do	41.4
6 storehouse stock men.....do	38.5
2 laborer gang leaders.....do	37.2
1 laborer gang leader.....do	34.7
4 storehouse stock men.....do	32.0
4 laborer gang leaders.....do	30.7
2 laborer gang leaders.....do	28.2
3 storehouse attendants.....do	28.2
3 storehouse attendants.....do	26.9

These high rates resulted largely from the fact that their particular work required a better qualified laborer than the usual laborer's work, and they carried with them an advanced rate. When the company made the two separate 10 per cent advances and the 6 per cent advance in pay it was applied to all alike, resulting in the above high rates for this class of service.

General Superintendent.

AUSTON EXHIBIT NO. 2.

[Filed with statement of J. R. T. Auston, president Order Railroad Telegraphers, Despatchers, Agents, and Signalmen.]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 17, 1911.

Mr. S. C. LONG,

General Manager Pennsylvania Lines east, Pittsburgh and Erie, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

DEAR SIR: I am advised that President Perham, of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, St. Louis, Mo., has called a meeting of the O. R. T. general committee, Pennsylvania Lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie.

Mr. J. F. Miller, of Baltimore, Md., is the chairman of the committee and the meeting is to be held in Harrisburg, Pa., June 20.

President Perham has expressed his intention to be present at this meeting and formulate some plan whereby the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad will be obliged to recognize the O. R. T. general committee. Also that certain matters affecting the interests of the employees are to be presented for your consideration.

As executive officer of the Order Railroad Telegraphers, Despatchers, Agents, and Signalmen, I feel it incumbent upon me to state that the O. R. T. committee does not represent a majority of the employees of the telegraph department, consequently the membership of our order will most assuredly object to any recognition of the O. R. T. general committee or any adjustments or understandings entered into with that committee.

In view of the harmonious relations now existing between our general committee (O. R. T. D. A. & S.) and the management, I trust you may deem it no more than just and equitable that such relations shall not be disturbed through any contemplated action on the part of Mr. Perham or his committee.

Yours, very truly,

J. R. T. AUSTON, President.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 20, 1912.

Mr. S. C. LONG,

*General Manager Pennsylvania Lines,
Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.*

DEAR SIR: Being advised that the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of St. Louis, Mo., is again endeavoring to secure official recognition, etc., the following protest is filed in behalf of the employees who do not desire to be represented by the organization referred to:

Since 1905 another representative general committee has had many conferences with the management of the Pennsylvania Railroad lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie. The committee has been headed at different periods by the following chairmen: L. K. Marr, W. G. Bucher, John W. Hartman, and C. M. Giles, all employees of the telegraph department; and the committee has been representative of and has legislated for not only the employees of that department, but also for employees of other departments who have been represented on the committee.

¹ Telephoner.

Mr. C. M. Giles is the chairman at the present time. The business relations between the committee and the management have always been harmonious and the results obtained for those the committee represented have been appreciated.

It is stated that the O. R. T., of St. Louis, Mo., has secured the signature of 2,700 employees and that 1,900 are members of that organization. The signatures attached to what is called a "certificate of authority" authorizing representation through an alleged committee formed under the laws of the O. R. T. and guided by the advice of its national president, Mr. Perham, who has been in consultation with said alleged committee.

According to the St. Louis people, they represent 1,900 organized and 800 unorganized employees east of Pittsburgh and Erie.

The general committee (Mr. Giles, chairman) represents 3,278 organized employees and 8,722 others, including the 1,900 alleged O. R. T. members and the 800 nonmembers. My estimate of the total number of employees is as follows: 5,000 in telegraph dept.; 2,000 agents; 4,500 signal maintainers, linemen, and electrical workers, and about 500 train despatchers and train directors. (The estimate for telegraph department includes telegraph and telephone operators, signalmen, lever men.) This estimate makes a total of 12,000 employees, all of whom are eligible to membership in the organization I represent, and 3,278 of whom are represented by Mr. Giles's general committee as organized men and 8,722 as unorganized. This representation can be proved by data showing increased pay distributed regardless of membership in the O. R. T. D. A. & S., but secured through the argument of and the presentation by the general committee, headed at this time by Mr. Giles.

In behalf of the 3,278 organized employees who have not signed the certificates referred to I hereby file a protest against any official recognition being given to the so-called committee now in Philadelphia, which is headed by either Messrs. McGrail or Miller, and is said to be composed of Messrs. Rex, Truitt, Fidler, Nightingale, and Arendt. The reasons behind this protest are as follows:

1. The 2,700 certificates to represent were secured by paid agents of the St. Louis organization, who, it is alleged, made misleading statements to encourage the signing of the same.

2. As there are 5,000 (estimated) employees in the telegraph dept., 1,900 of whom are claimed to be members of the O. R. T. of St. Louis, Mo., and 2,302 are in the O. R. T. D. A. & S. of Philadelphia, from an organization point of view the Philadelphia organization has the best of it.

3. That the general committee—Mr. Giles, chairman—has and does yet, not only represent 3,278 organized employees, but also the 2,700 signers of the certificates as well as the 6,022 unorganized employees who make up the total of 12,000 employees for whom the said committee has and is still legislating.

4. To recognize the petition of the 2,700 employees practically means the acknowledgment of the right of a minority to legislate for a majority—the minority in this instance being the 1,900 organized men, or 2,700 organized and unorganized men, wanting to represent 9,300 other employees. The general committee—Mr. Giles, chairman—has always represented the 12,000 employees regardless of their affiliation with either organization, or with neither organization, so far as securing increased pay and amended regulations are concerned.

5. It would be impracticable for the management to attempt to do business with two general committees representing the same employees.

6. No good reason being advanced for the withdrawal of official recognition from the general committee—Mr. Giles, chairman—it would be extremely unjust and irregular to do so in view of the harmonious relations existing between the management and the committee as well as the fact that there are matters under official consideration which said committee presented to the management and is now awaiting a decision on. Those matters are of importance to the employees and it would be quite inconsistent for the management, after receiving the papers from the committee and discussing them with the committee, to ignore them and advise the committee, through its chairman, Mr. Giles, that official recognition had been withdrawn, etc., and no equitable reason given for such action.

I respectfully ask your earnest consideration of the above. Should the parties seeking your official recognition decide to appeal to a national board of mediation, etc., I assure you it will be a pleasure for me to be present and aid in the placing of data before said national body which should be absolute convincing proof that the claims of the St. Louis people are made on unstable foundation.

Hoping nothing may occur to disturb the present cordial relations now existing between Mr. Giles's committee and the management, I remain,
Yours, truly,

J. R. T. AUSTON,
President.

CHENERY EXHIBIT.

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM PARK TO C. T. CHENERY, OF THE INDUSTRIAL RELATION COMMISSION IN REPLY TO CHARGES MADE BEFORE THE COMMISSION BY MR. W. H. PIERCE.

Why did you go to Pitcairn during the shopmen's strike in 1911?—Ans. I was called there by the local representatives of Div. 772 and later ordered there by Grand Chief Stone. See copy of telegram from R. F. Jackson and W. S. Stone.

What request, if any, did you receive from the company in connection with this strike?—Ans. I was called on phone by Supt. Allibone and asked to get into communication with the local representatives in and about Altoona. See copy of telegram sent local representatives at Altoona.

Were you paid by your organization for going to Pitcairn, and if so, at what rate?—Ans. At this time the chairman was not on a salary, and I received time lost on my run and expenses—amount to a little more than $89 for the month of May, 1911.

How long after the end of the strike was it before you saw Mr. Johnson?—Ans. If I recall rightly the strike was in May, and some time near the latter part of August is when I saw Mr. Johnson.

What conversation, if any, did you have with Mr. Johnson about money matters at this time with reference to your visit at Pitcairn?—Ans. I had no conversation other than at this time Mr. Johnson handed me an ordinary envelope, with the statement that it was a token of appreciation for the manner in which I had handled the Pittsburgh situation. At this time I did not know what the envelope contained. I later discovered that I had accepted an envelope containing $200.

Did you tell anyone of this transaction?—Ans. Yes; I informed two members of our general committee at my first opportunity, Mr. J. A. Donlin, 309 N. Vanburen St., Wilmington, Del., and Mr. G. R. Johnson, 203 Mercer St., Phillipsburg, N. J.

Why did you decide to return the money?—Ans. Because I had been paid by the men I represent, and did not feel that I was entitled to this money.

When did you return the money?—Ans. I am not able to say just when it was. I delayed the returning of this money, waiting for an opportunity to present itself. I carried the money with me waiting for an opportunity.

What was Mr. Johnson's attitude when you returned the money?—Ans. Mr. Johnson was not pleased, and argued with me that I was justly entitled to this money, as much so as other men who had been paid for lost time and expenses, and insisted on me retaining the money. I would not do so, and at this time I did make a remark to Mr. Johnson that I wanted to be in a position to say that I had never gotten any money from the railroad except what I had signed for in the pay car the same as other men.

Please state the circumstances attending the receiving and the returning of this money.—Ans. On leaving Mr. Johnson's office, after a conference with him, the member who was with me was called to one of the clerk's desk in the outer office, and while he was there Mr. Johnson came to the door between the inner and outer office and handed me the envelope. When I returned it I went back to his office, placed the envelope on his desk, and told him that I could not accept it.

How did your organization feel about the matter?—Ans. Charges were preferred against me by one division, and after a trial by the general committee I was acquitted of the charge of intentionally accepting money. The trial was held in Sept., 1914. I was again reelected in March, 1915, having only 5 votes against me. Charges were preferred against me on the strength of what I had told the members of the committee myself.

My commission expires first Monday, January, 1916.

SUNBURY, PA., May 9, 1915.

Mr. S. C. LONG,

General Manager P. R. R., Broad Street Station,

Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I note by to-day's papers in the proceedings or testimony before the Industrial Labor Commission that a letter had been submitted by you, in reply to the charges by W. H. Pierce, that the chairmen of the four brotherhoods had been bribed, in which you are quoted as stating that when the trouble started in 1911 in Pittsburgh the four chairmen were asked to go there and urge their members to live up to their agreements, and that their efforts were successful, and on their return to Philadelphia they were presented with $300 to reimburse them for their expenses, quoting the names of the four men who were then chairmen.

That letter in the form it is quoted surely places me in a very bad position with all organized men, and particularly so with the men who have recently reelected me as their chairman, for the following reasons:

First. I was not asked to go to Pittsburgh by the company, they having only asked me to get into communication with the local chairmen, which I did, and hold copies of the wire I sent them.

Second. I was called to Pitcairn by the local representatives from that point, and later ordered there by Grand Chief Stone.

Third. I have once had charges placed against me for a similar charge, wherein I admit that at this time (1911) I was handed a letter by Mr. Johnson, not knowing what it contained at the time, and inadvertently placed it in my pocket, to discover after I left the city that I had accepted an envelope containing $200.

Fourth. Your statement, if correctly reported, states that I was given $300. The men I represent will naturally conclude, and will have just reasons for doing so, that I did not make a truthful statement when I was tried on this charge, or that I had been given money more than once and did not make it known.

Fifth. In the published report of your letter to the commission you did not state that I returned this money to Mr. Johnson, telling him that I had been paid by the men I represent in this case and could not accept it from the company.

In view of these facts, together with the wide publication in this evidence, I cannot allow the matter to stand as it does for the public to-day—if for no other reasons on account of the taunts that may be thrown at my children by their companions.

I would therefore ask, Can you and will you correct this statement that I was given $200 instead of $300, as quoted, and also that I returned the money to Mr. Johnson, the man who had handed it to me, giving this correction to the commission that it may be as widely published as your former letter?

I had hoped to leave home for the convention in the city of Cleveland not later than Tuesday evening, May 11, but I can not do so with this matter standing as it does; and if you can not make this correction, I shall surely be compelled to seek an audience with that commission for the purpose of getting this question correctly before the people for my own protection.

Anxiously awaiting an early reply, and hoping that you will see your way clear to promptly correct your former letter, and in such a way that it will reach the public as widely as before,

Yours, truly,

WM. PARK,
Chairman Engineers' Committee.

Mr. C. T. CHENERY,

Representative of Industrial Labor Investigating Committee, 928 Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Since your visit to my home yesterday I have received a reply from Mr. J. C. Johnson answering my letter to Mr. Long of May 9. He also incloses a copy of the statement given you May 11 in further reference to the charges made by W. H. Pierce.

While his letter to me is very plain and clear, his statement to you of the 11th is put in such a way that I feel that a more complete statement from me should be made, and in accordance with this I desire to add to my statement of May 13 the attached sworn statement as supplementary to my former statement that the commission and the public may have all the facts.

Yours, very truly,

WM. PARK,
Chairman B. of L. E., Pennsylvania Lines East.

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT TO QUESTIONS ASKED AND ANSWERS GIVEN BY ME
TO MR. CHENERY, MAY 13, 1915.

In Mr. Johnson's statement of May 11 he quotes several remarks, and in such a way that they would appear to have all been made by me at the time I returned the money, which is not the case.

Mr. Johnson has asked me on several occasions since I returned the $200 to come in and get it, stating that it was intended to reimburse me for time lost and expenses while at Pittsburgh during the shop strike (1911), and each time advanced some reason for me doing so, which I have always answered with some argument as to why I should not.

I will not attempt to deny this statement in general, but I must try and disconnect it to some extent that the commission and the public may know and understand.

When I returned the money he (Johnson) took exceptions to it and explained what it was for as formerly stated, and among many other remarks made I did say that it would not be understood in the way he put it, and if the question was ever raised a different construction would be placed on it from the way he understood it.

I had very good reasons to believe that the question would be raised, for I made no attempt to keep it an absolute secret. I had told many of my members all about it long before I ever heard of it through other sources and before W. H. Pierce used it in his speeches to discredit the train organizations, and I told the members of my own organization all that he produced when he brought charges against me and had me tried before our general committee.

I do not recall ever saying anything about reelection, but on one occasion when I was asked again to come in and get the money, among other things I did say that I had charges against me now over that money and would have to stand trial at our next meeting. At this time I had no reason to say anything about reelection, for we were not to hold an election at that meeting.

After this trial, at which I had but one vote against me, or one vote for conviction and one member refused to vote, I was again asked to come in and get the money, or permit it to be sent to my wife, with the remark that it was all over now—meaning I presume the trial I had just gone through.

At this time I replied that it was not all over and that the question was likely to go to the convention before it was over. This was the only time the convention was ever mentioned to the best of my knowledge.

MY DEAR MR. CHENERY: I am inclosing copy of Mr. Johnson's letter to me answering my letter to Mr. Long of the 9th.

10440 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

This letter is a fair and plain statement, and if Mr. Johnson wants to be fair and not try to discredit the train organizations he should have made this same statement to you rather than muddle it as he did by trying to tell what I have said the many times he has tried to have me take this money, all in one short paragraph.

Note: He says, "In order that the facts may be known to whomsoever they concern."

I feel that the men I represent and myself are very much concerned and that the people who saw the letter appearing in last Sunday's papers may see this letter from Mr. Johnson. May I ask you to have the press print the same as a correction of his former letter.

W. PARK.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 11, 1915.

Mr. WILLIAM PARK,
General Chairman, B. of L. E.,
941 Railroad Avenue, Sunbury Pa.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the statement made before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, at Washington on May 7th, to the effect that you were given $300 to cover expenses and compensation in your efforts, during the shopmen's strike at Pittsburgh in 1911, to prevent employees, and particularly engineers, from leaving the company's service and urging them to remain at work and maintain our contractual relations, which expenses and compensation were paid you after the strike was over and everything cleared up.

In order that the facts may be known to whomsoever they concern, and particularly the locomotive engineers, this is to certify that the amount paid was $200 instead of $300, as stated, and this amount was returned to me by you with the verbal statement that the men you represented had paid you. We regret this was not made clear in the original statement.

In order that you may be fully informed, I am attaching a statement made to the commission.

Yours, truly,

J. C. JOHNSON,
Superintendent Telegraph.

[Inclosures.]

STATEMENT OF MR. J. C. JOHNSON, OF THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO., TO THE COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, MAY 11, 1915, IN CONNECTION WITH STATEMENTS MADE BY MR. W. H. PIERCE.

As stated in Mr. Long's letter to the commission, after the strike was called at Pittsburgh in 1911, we notified the general chairmen of the different train-service brotherhoods that we would like them to see that their men were kept at work and not attempt to go out on strike in sympathy with the shopmen, who were then on strike. After the strike was over, it was decided to remember a certain number of employees on the system who had performed what we considered commendatory service, and a list was made up which included 511 names for cash payments, aggregating $19,041.10, and 285 names for commendatory letters. This included such men as chief clerk to division operator, inspectors, stewards, foremen of car inspectors, transitmen, rodmen, agents, signal apprentices, chainmen, clerks, telephone inspectors, telegraph repairmen, yardmasters, assistant yardmasters, conductors, captains and inspectors of police, lieutenants of police, patrolmen, plumbers, car inspectors, men from the different departments of the shops, such as engine-house foremen, boiler shop foremen, electricians, assistant foremen. These men were paid anywhere from $10 to $150, no one receiving less than $10. In the case of the general chairman, three of them were given $300 each and one was given $200. In the case of every person except the general chairmen, there was a voucher, with a commendatory letter mailed to the person. In the case of the general chairmen, they were given cash at a time when they called at the office to transact business in connection with their work as general chairmen, and were thanked personally by me for the good work they had done in preventing any trouble and keeping the traffic moving smoothly. It was not given to all of them at one time, as their work did not bring them here together, and some little time elapsed between the time it was given to each one of them, although I can not state just how long this was. This money was secured from the general manager's contingent fund, that is the money that was paid in cash.

In the case of Chairman Park, some time afterwards (I don't remember how long) he came to me and said that he understood some one had raised a question about his receiving this money and had put the wrong construction on it, and that he wanted to return it because he wanted to be able to say to his men, at the time of reelection and before the convention, that he had never received anything from the Pennsylvania Railroad but what he had signed the pay rolls for. I told him if he felt that way about it, that I would take it back. While we do not have any record to show just how long these men were at Pittsburgh, if my memory serves me correctly, I would say they were there four or five weeks, but I do not think that Mr. Park was there as long as the other three.

It should be understood that they were not under pay of the company either for wages or expenses during the time they were there, and the money given them afterwards, herein referred to, was for expenses and compensation for work performed.

The rewarding of the men in this particular instance is not a new thing, as it is not unusual in cases of trouble of any kind, floods, prostration of lines through storms, strikes, or any extraordinary occurrence, to reward meritorious service.

MY DEAR SIR: I had a talk with Mr. Hendricks after your interview with him, and the inclosed affidavit is the result. I am sorry that I made this error. If there is anything further I can do to straighten matters out or any help that I can give you, I shall be glad to hear from you.

You will appreciate that all this occurred four years ago, and so much has happened since then that I am sorry to say my memory is not as clear on some of these details as it should be.

SUPPLEMENT TO STATEMENT OF MR. J. C. JOHNSON, OF THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO., DATED MAY 11, 1915, TO THE COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS IN CONNECTION WITH STATEMENTS MADE BY MR. W. H. PIERCE.

In connection with that part of my affidavit referring to amount of money given the four general chairmen, I made no memoranda of giving this money, and, as the giving of it discharged what I considered my moral obligation, I dropped the matter from my mind. When the question was brought up recently, my recollection was that I had given each general chairman $300. I have this day had a talk with General Chairman J. B. Hendricks and am now reminded of what I did, and this is to correct that part of my affidavit in which he is concerned; that is, that he was given $50 instead of $300. I would respectfully ask that my statement be corrected accordingly.

STATEMENT OF A. I. KAUFFMAN TO C. T. CHENERY, OF THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, IN REPLY TO CHARGES MADE BEFORE THE COMMISSION BY MR. W. H. PIERCE.

Q. Why did you go to Pittsburgh in 1911?—A. I was summoned there by Gen. Supt. O'Donnel.

Q. Did the local secretary of the organization or your grand chief also request you to go there?—A. Several of the local members met me in Pittsburgh and asked me to remain there, and also asked the president of our organization to send a grand lodge representative there.

Q. How long did you remain in Pittsburgh?—A. From about May 2 or 3 until June 17, 1911. The dates may not be exactly right, but are very close.

Q. Were you on salary of the organization at this time?—A. Yes, by the day; so much per day, and pay your own expenses.

Q. How long after the conclusion of the strike was it that you saw Mr. Johnston?—A. I can not tell the exact date without referring to the records; but it was about June 24, as near as I can recollect.

Q. The company had not made any promise of payment for your work while in Pittsburgh?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Johnson about money when you saw him on June 24?—A. Mr. Johnson gave me the money.

Q. What conversation took place?—A. During the meeting with the general manager and his representatives and some members of our committee a number of grievances were discussed; at the close of the meeting Mr. Johnson came to me and thanked me for what I had done in the Pittsburgh district during the strike, and also handed me an envelope, plain and sealed, and said: "Here is a token of appreciation from the company and to help to defray your expenses." I said: "I have nothing coming from the company, as the organization paid me for my services during the trouble." He stated that it was due me and that I should keep it, but at this time I did not know what the envelope contained.

Q. How much money was in the envelope?—A. Three hundred dollars.

Q. Did anyone see Mr. Johnson pass the envelope to you?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you tell anyone of having received this money?—A. I did. Mr. H. G. McComas.

Q. When did you tell Mr. McComas?—A. On the way from there to Baltimore.

Q. Did Mr. McComas tell anyone?—A. Not to my knowledge. He has told me since that he has not.

Q. When did it become generally known in the organization?—A. I was charged with having received this money during the summer of 1912.

Q. Have you any idea how this information leaked out?—A. I have not.

Q. Did you ever return this $300?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the company keep it or return it to you again?—A. It was again returned to me.

Q. How was it returned?—A. The same certificate of deposit that I had sent them.

Q. On what bank was this deposit drawn?—A. I can tell the place. I think it was the Third National Bank, right across from Broad Street Station on South Penn Square.

Q. Did they write you a letter or send any statement when they returned the certificate?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did your organization feel about this when it became known?—A. Well, some of them felt that I had done entirely wrong, and others did not seem to think so much.

Q. Did it have any influence on the election of the general chairman the past year?—A. Well, probably so.

Q. How did you feel, personally, about it, Mr. Kauffman?—A. I realize now that I made a mistake.

Q. It did not influence you in your duty toward the company in any way?—A. Not in the least, and I think by referring to the minutes of meetings with committees and the company since that time will prove my statement.

A. I. KAUFFMAN.

STATEMENT OF H. E. CORE, GENERAL CHAIRMAN, B. OF L. F. & E., PENNSYLVANIA LINES EAST, TO C. T. CHENERY, OF THE U. S. C. ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, CONCERNING CHARGES OF W. H. PIERCE AGAINST MR. A. I. KAUFFMAN.

The knowledge of Mr. A. I. Kauffman's having accepted compensation from the Pennsylvania Railroad for services performed during the shopmen's strike in 1911, for which the organization he represented had already paid him, did not become known to the members until sometime in May, 1914.

It is the belief of many of our members that this information was first made known to our membership by Mr. W. H. Pierce.

While no formal charges were ever preferred against Mr. Kauffman for his action in accepting this money, his action was nevertheless strongly condemned by practically all our members, as we hold that it is dishonorable for a man to accept compensation from our organization and the company at the same time.

STATEMENT OF J. B. HENDRICKS, GENERAL CHAIRMAN ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS, TO C. T. CHENERY, OF THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, CONCERNING CHARGES MADE BY W. H. PIERCE.

Q. Why did you go to Pitcairn during the shopmen's strike in 1911?—A. I was ordered there by the president of the O. R. C., and was further requested to come by the secretary of the local division No. 433, at Pitcairn.

Q. What request, if any, did you receive from the P. R. R. during this strike?—A. None; absolutely none.

Q. Were you paid by your organization for going to Pitcairn, and if so, at what rate?—A. I was paid the regular per diem rate of $10 a day, which covers salary and expenses.

Q. How long was it after the end of the strike that you saw Mr. Johnson?—A. The strike was called in May, and it was some time in the middle or fore part of July that I saw him.

Q. Did you receive any money from Mr. Johnson at this time, and if so, please state full circumstances?—A. I was in Mr. Johnson's office some time in July with Mr. Kapp of the B. R. T. While Mr. Kapp was talking to one of the clerks Mr. Johnson stepped up and handed me a plain envelope and said, "Jim, you boys were under a lot of extra expense at Pitcairn, and here is something to help pay this extra expense." After leaving the office I counted the money and found that there were 10 $5 bills in it.

Q. Did you tell any one of this transaction?—A. No; I don't think that I ever did.

Q. Did this transaction become generally known in the order?—A. It did not.

Q. Was this transaction generally known before Mr. Pierce's charges were made public?—A. It was not.

Q. How did you feel about receiving this money?—A. I feel that as I had to work both day and night to keep our organization out of trouble and went to a lot of extra expense that I was justified in taking this money.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with request of your Mr. Chenery, I beg to advise that our organization heard only rumors concerning the acceptance by our general chairman of compensation from the Pennsylvania Railroad for services during Pitcairn trouble in 1911.

Such being the case, the matter has never officially been brought to the attention of the order, and we therefore have had no expression of sentiment by the members.

Very respectfully,

S. C. COWEN,

Secretary G. C. of Adj. P. R. R. Lines East.

[Order of Railway Conductors, General Committee of Adjustment. Pennsylvania lines east.]

TYRONE, PA., May 18, 1915.

Mr. C. G. HASTINGS,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER HASTINGS: Your favor of recent date received and was pleased to hear from you. Thankful for the very kind expressions in reference to my wife's accident. She is improving right along; had the splints removed last Saturday.

Referring again to my former letter suggesting changes in the personnel of our general committee, would state that I was visited by a Mr. Chenery, who represented the United States Commission on Industrial Relations. He asked me to file a statement with the committee whether I had ever received any compensation from the P. R. R. for service during the Pitcairn trouble in 1911. I stated that I had never been called into the field where there had any trouble arisen between the company and any of its employees other than grievances affecting the conductors, but I had received flattering offers requesting me to report action of our organization on lines east. I gave him a copy of the letters I received. He had a statement from Hendricks confessing that he had taken money from the company during the trouble. This was paid through J. C. Johnson's office. If you remember this was rumored at the time the firemen elected Core to succeed Kauffman, who made the confession implicating himself, Kapp, Park, and Hendricks, and under this confession General Manager Long was compelled to admit under oath before the commission that he had paid $1,500 out at this time to the four organizations, giving each chairman $300; Hendricks in his statement tells that he only received $50. I was asked by Mr. Chenery whether any action had been taken by our organization against our chairman on account of accepting compensation from the company. I told him that we had heard rumors concerning this matter, and such being the case, it was never brought to the attention of our committee, as we had never had an expression of sentiment. I immediately wrote Garretson as to these developments, asking his advice, stating that I believed we should take action at once, and I would arrange to call committee in session and prepare charges against Hendricks.

Brother Hastings, I feel this matter should be prosecuted. Brother Garretson stated to me in a letter some time ago that he had heard rumors concerning certain action during the Pitcairn trouble that looked bad. He admitted that he felt this work was going on, but how to get definite information was the question.

I would be glad if you would give me your opinion just what you think we should do. Remember us to your family.

Very respectfully, in P. F.,

S. C. COWEN.

GENERAL OFFICES, CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 18, 1915.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS,

Care Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In further reference to testimony given before your commission by one W. H. Pierce, wherein the name of E. V. Kapp, now deceased, formerly general chairman of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen for the Pennsylvania lines east, was mentioned, have to advise that, if my recollection serves me correctly, Mr. Kapp spoke to me personally at one time in regard to the Pennsylvania Co. donating to himself and others some amount, for the purpose of covering time and expense incurred in 1911 while visiting Pittsburgh and vicinity for the purpose of advising members of the transportation organizations to remain at their regular and usual employment instead of leaving the service, contrary to the constitution and general rules of such organizations and participating in an illegal strike in sympathy with certain carmen, shopmen, trackmen, and other employees then on strike.

I do not remember the amount mentioned by Mr. Kapp, nor do I find any record of correspondence passing between this office and Kapp in connection with that subject. I am under the impression that Mr. Kapp told me that the Pennsylvania Co. appreciated the assistance given by himself and other general chairmen. Mr. Kapp visited the Pittsburgh territory at that time under my direct instructions and was paid the constitutional amount provided by our laws for such service. He was not, however, paid any amount to cover hotel or other similar expenses, owing to the fact that our constitution does not permit of the payment of any amount other than a per diem of a given amount.

Mr. Kapp's integrity was above reproach, and I have never known of a more conscientious or honest employee of any company. I do not believe he would have accepted any amount from the company had it not been for a generally known and understood custom on that line for the company to reimburse employees for services rendered independently of organization.

10446 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

This letter is written in accordance with a verbal understanding had with one of your investigators at Pittsburgh on the 16th instant, suggesting that I forward this information to the commission.

Very truly, yours,

W. G. LEE,
President.

ALTOONA, PA., May 21, 1915.

Mr. REDMOND S. BRENNAN,

United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of May 13, and would advise that my sworn statement of May 8 covers the subject in question as far as I am able to do so.

The proposed statement you sent me with your letter of May 13 covers a denial of a conversation between S. M. Hoyer and myself. To this I can not affix my signature, as there was a conversation between S. M. Hoyer and myself under the following circumstances:

The interview took place in my office, Mr. Hoyer having asked for an appointment, and at this interview he asked me to grant him a favor for a person he was interested in, who was an employee in our shops. Upon the termination of that interview, and having been importuned by friends of Luther to assist him in his trouble, he having already returned to Altoona, I asked Mr. Hoyer to reciprocate by remitting Luther's fine; therefore I can not add anything further to my original affidavit, which is absolutely true and correct and is returned herewith.

Yours, truly,

R. K. READING,
Supt. Motive Power, Eastern Pa. Div., Pa. R. R. Co.

IN THE MATTER OF THE EVIDENCE OF HON. S. M. HOYER, EX-MAYOR OF THE CITY OF ALTOONA, BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, AT THEIR MEETING HELD AT WASHINGTON, D. C., ON THURSDAY, MAY 6, A. D. 1915.

STATEMENT OF R. K. READING, SUPERINTENDENT OF MOTIVE POWER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD AT ALTOONA, PA.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Blair, ss:

Personally appeared before me, Alex Weir, a notary public, residing in the city of Altoona, county and State aforesaid, R. K. Reading, superintendent of motive power of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Altoona, Pa., who, being by me sworn in due form of law, doth depose and say that his attention having been called to the testimony of Hon. S. M. Hoyer, ex-mayor of the city of Altoona, made before the Commission on Industrial Relations at Washington, D. C., on Thursday, May 6, 1915, wherein he states that Mr. Reading (this affiant), who is superintendent of motive power of the Pennsylvania Railroad, asked him to let up on this man and let him come back to the city; that "they had fixed the judge and the district attorney and the alderman who took the bail, and the county detective, and that I was the only stumbling block. Affiant saith that at no time was there any conversation between said Hon. S. M. Hoyer and this affiant in which the language was used that they had fixed the judge and the district attorney and the alderman who took the bail and the county detective, and that Hoyer was the only stumbling block; and affiant further declares and says that the statement of the Hon. S. M. Hoyer, imputing the aforesaid language to this affiant, is absolutely untrue and without foundation in fact, as no such language was used and no such statement made.

[The Pennsylvania Railroad Co.]

GENERAL OFFICE, BROAD STREET STATION,
Philadelphia, May 11, 1915.

Hon. FRANK P. WALSH,
Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the question raised at hearing at Washington Friday, May 7, at which time you asked Mr. J. C. Johnson, superintendent telegraph, to furnish you a statement of arms and ammunition stored on the system for emergency use, we find that the purchasing agent has in stock in his rooms at Philadelphia 5,113 revolvers, 130 shotguns, 64,107 cartridges, 1,041 riot clubs, 435 pair handcuffs, 1,285 holsters with belts, and 5,013 special-police breast badges, and, as stated to your commission, this material is furnished on regular requisition when needed, and, if used when a strike is in progress, they are collected and again stored after the trouble is over.

Yours, truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,
Secretary United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Transportation Building, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 25, 1915, addressed to Mr. W. W. Atterbury, vice president, asking for certain information in connection with his testimony before the commission at Washington, has been referred to me for reply.

In regard to the first subject—i. e., the number of rifles usually kept on hand by the Pennsylvania Railroad—permit us to advise that under date of May 11, 1915, we wrote Honorable Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the commission, giving him this information. However, in order that your record may be complete in one communication we quote below the following paragraph from our letter above referred to:

"We find that the purchasing agent has in stock in his rooms at Philadelphia 5,113 revolvers, 130 shotguns, 64,107 cartridges, 1,041 riot clubs, 435 pair handcuffs, 1,285 holsters with belts, 5,031 special police breast badges, and, as stated to your commission, this material is furnished on regular requisition when needed, and, if used when a strike is in progress, they are collected and again stored after the trouble is over."

The 130 shotguns are commonly known as riot guns or rifles.

In regard to the second subject—i. e., condition and number of the police organization—we attach statements giving this information in detail.

Very truly, yours,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager.

GENERAL OFFICE, BROAD STREET STATION,
Philadelphia, June 24, 1915.

Mr. LEWIS K. BROWN,
Secretary United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Transportation Building, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of June 4 in regard to the arms and ammunition in possession of the organization of the police, whether in Philadelphia, Altoona, Pittsburgh, or elsewhere, we beg to advise that we do not have any arms or ammunition stored at any point on the system except that referred to in our letter of June 2, which, as before stated, is in the possession of the purchasing agent. We have, of the number of policemen employed on the system, 394 who are armed.

We did not understand that you desired the information as to the members of the police force who are armed until your letter of June 4 was received, and the delay in answering has been caused by making a canvass of the police to find out just who were armed. If there is any more information desired, we would be very glad indeed to hear from you.

Yours, truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager.

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 26, 1914.

Mr. S. C. COWEN,
1533 Pennsylvania Avenue, Tyrone, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I am prepared to place before you a proposition which will add $100 to your monthly income, and the money paid as you desire, either by check monthly or semimonthly, and if preferable cash, special delivery.

At once you conclude the service required must be of a nature involving more than is usually requested in the ordinary affairs of life. In that conclusion you are right, but there need be no misunderstanding or mistake regarding the matter. At the outstart I will state the proposition to be made is presented from a strictly business point of view and will be carried through as such to the end with you, as it is with others in the labor world, if you can see your way clear to accept. Now, then, what I want is a daily letter from you (not every other day) regarding the affairs of your organization; that is to say, a complete report of everything within and without the organization, including, of course, the minutes, etc., of the meetings, special and regular.

You will find this the easiest money you ever earned in your life, and absolutely without the knowledge of anyone except yourself and one other. You are not required to sign your name to letters—only #500—and mail your reports or letters as you will later be instructed to do in case you accept the trust.

The writer is absolutely disinterested in any particular and acts only as a medium through which the arrangement can satisfactorily be completed.

You need have no hesitancy in replying, as this is strictly a straight out-and-out business proposition and not something intended to get you in wrong in any way. It will be carried out, too, in every particular.

I may state that if you render the service you are capable of the pay will be increased to $115 in six months and $125 beginning January 1, 1915.

I wish to further explain for your benefit that the object of getting this advance information is to add to a service intended to be exercised in furtherance of the amicable adjustment or settlement of labor differences and strikes, and as much as possible the avoidance of them. It is believed by advance thinkers on the subject that a good work can be accomplished and organized labor greatly benefited, and to that end the information will be directed, especially within the ranks of organizations with which we are already doing business.

I will appreciate a reply which I now promise will be strictly confidential. I am,

Yours, very truly,

E. W. ELLIS,
Care of 821 Bellaire Avenue,
Brookline, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 15, 1914.

Mr. S. C. COWEN, General Secretary O. R. C.,
No. 1533 Pennsylvania Avenue, Tyrone, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I am sorry you have not written me regarding my proposition made you some days ago, and am not altogether satisfied you want to pass up the opportunity to increase your earnings in the sum proposed. You need have no fear of me in any particular, as I have promised you truly that in case you communicate with me I will protect the same in every way.

I am desirous of having you take up the work, and therefore am not satisfied, as I have stated, to drop the matter. In fact, I would like to have a personal interview if you will grant it, and to that end will here state that I will meet you in Pittsburgh and pay your expenses while here, or I will meet you in Tyrone, at your home or hotel. Do not be foolish and pass up an opportunity like this, as you never will add to your earnings so much money as this so easily.

Trusting I will have the inclosed card returned promptly, I am,

Yours, truly,

E. W. ELLIS,

LABOR AND THE LAW.

(For exhibits under this subject see pages 10903 to 10928.)

COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, May 10, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh; Commissioners Garretson, Weinstock, Lennon, and O'Connell.

Chairman WALSH. Will the house please be in order.

Judge Clark, will you kindly take the stand?

TESTIMONY OF JUDGE WALTER CLARK.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please state your name?

Judge CLARK. Walter Clark.

Chairman WALSH. And your place of residence?

Judge CLARK. Raleigh, N. C.

Chairman WALSH. What official position do you occupy in the State of North Carolina?

Judge CLARK. Chief justice of the supreme court.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you occupied that position?

Judge CLARK. I have been on the supreme court 26 years; I have been chief justice 13 years.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Judge, I believe there was a little general outline sent you, and I might state here that this commission has held public hearings throughout the country and made many investigations, and we have summoned a great many judges and lawyers who seem to have paid particular attention to these matters, or whose decisions have had a certain significance to sort of epitomizing, if possible, the services, or at least the prevalent actions that seem to exist among people and industries in the United States.

With that general statement, and the suggestions that have been made to you, I will ask you some general questions.

First, I will say that we have met with the suggestion in many places, reiterated over and over, that the poor man does not have a fair chance in the courts of justice, and even here we have had the suggestion made by individuals that they perhaps would have to resort to means of their own to obtain justice, and so forth. Now, does the poor man occupy a different position before the law and in our courts than the rich man?

Judge CLARK. He does not in North Carolina; that is, upon the face of things he does not. Of course, we have this circumstance, that the rich man can employ abler lawyers and more lawyers, and I don't know how you can correct it, but there is no prejudice among the judges or among our jurors in favor of one class against others.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made a decision, Judge—I believe you did make a decision in regard to child labor, which evidently has had a bearing upon the whole situation. I believe that you decided a case some years ago in which you fixed the limit at which a child could be charged with contributory negligence, and I noticed it is referred to many times in the matter of legislation governing the same subject.

Judge CLARK. I just remarked that there was no prejudice in favor of or against the poor man, but North Carolina, as you know as well as I do, is a very conservative State, and to a large extent we have followed the idea of individualism. Of course, that has something to do as between labor and capital. Some years ago we had a case in our State where a child 9 years old was injured, and counsel very strenuously insisted that the courts had nothing to do with that; that the child was hired out by the father, and the father had control of the child, and that, therefore, he was accountable for the negligence and not the company or corporation. I wrote a decision that was concurred in by two of my associates, and very vigorously dissented to by the other two, that the father had no control of the child; that the company was aware of his incapacity to work; that they had exposed him to this danger and the company was responsible. (Ward v. Odell, 126 N. C., 947; Fitzgerald v. Furniture Co., 131 N. C., 636.) It didn't meet with public approval at the time, but not long after, after some sessions of legislature, there was passed an action fixing the age at which children could be employed, and there are other decisions in our State on which other acts are taken by the legislature, and successive legislation, as has been the case in other States.

Chairman WALSH. In your opinion, would economic and social questions be considered by judges in rendering their decisions?

Judge CLARK. Not unless they are statutory. Unless in such case as I have just cited, and when legislation is so far behind that the courts ought to take a common-sense view of the case. In this case I have just mentioned where a young child was exposed to these dangers, they have said it was wrong and unjust.

Chairman WALSH. That is the reason I asked you that question, economic consideration seems to have cut a great figure in that particular decision.

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; it did in that case, and on the side that courts generally do. Courts generally throw the gates down, and that is what our courts generally do, for instance, as to car couplers. Greenlee v. R. R. (122 N. C., 977; Troxler v. R. R., 124 N. C., 191.)

Chairman WALSH. Should counsel be given an opportunity to indicate fairly economic and social bearings on judicial decisions in arguments before courts?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; I think they should discuss them.

Chairman WALSH. What was available, for instance, in this case, Judge, trying to arrive at some comprehensive way of building up laws governing these social and economic subjects what did you have available from an economic standpoint when that decision was made?

Judge CLARK. Just simply the common-sense idea of justice that it was not right to take a child 8 or 9 years old and expose him to the dangers of machinery, which cost him his eyesight, or an arm, and that that boy could not recover simply because his father, pressed by the necessities of his home life, had hired him out to the company.

Chairman WALSH. Well, now, as you recall it, Judge, did counsel for the boy urge these broad social considerations that seem to have underlaid this decision?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; he did not.

Chairman WALSH. Then, did the judges have to do that? We would like to get at the minutiae of the thing; did the judges have to consider that themselves? Was it that the judges, or part of them, simply took a notion that it was wrong?

Judge CLARK. In that particular case the whole matter originated with me. I argued with the court and presented the proposition; I said that the world ought to move, and that the decision ought to be as broad as the injury, and that it was time to take a broader view, and two of the judges concurred with me and two dissented.

Chairman WALSH. Your court is composed of five members?

Judge CLARK. Yes; it was then, and is now.

Chairman WALSH. In your opinion, Judge, from your experience on the bench, would it be feasible or possible to have economic advice for the court in some way in cases of this character, so that they would not have to be led to the knowledge that they gathered from the reading of general literature and such sources as that?

Judge CLARK. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how that may be; I know the general trend of the courts is just the opposite of what I have told you. Though the legislation in this country or in England has been in favor of justice to the laborer, our courts being composed generally of elderly men, imbued with ideas they had while practicing at the bar, follow precedents and laws are lost sight of entirely or trimmed down instead of the courts making legislation more progressive.

Chairman WALSH. Many persons who have been before us from the labor side have complained bitterly to us of injunctive process, and told us of their reluctance to submit the matters to the determination of courts generally; have you any opinion you could give this commission as to the reasons for that; that is, whether or not there is any basis for that reluctance on the part of individual laborers or labor organizations?

Judge CLARK. Well, speaking as a lawyer, I do not want to attack my profession or the judges, but as a fact, my observation has been, including the reading of the law books, to show me that the courts are very slow to adopt economic ideas contained in the laws which the legislature has enacted. The judges are generally, as I say, elderly men, and most of them have been employed, before they went on the bench, by great corporations. They, unconsciously to themselves, are biased in favor of the view they advocated when they practiced at the bar. When they go on the bench they are still the same men, and unconsciously they put in force, sitting there, the ideas they advocated at the bar. That has been my observation of the course of the decisions.

Chairman WALSH. How could that situation be modified along legal lines, Judge?

Judge CLARK. I do not know of anything except the slow educative process of public opinion. Public opinion has educated them more or less, and as these elderly men pass from the bench, younger men may go on who are imbued with the ideas of the times. This is a slow process, but how else to do it I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made any study of the Danbury Hatters' case, and the Taff Vale in England?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; like every lawyer, I am familiar with them and know something of both. I do not like to criticize those courts, but, speaking as an American citizen, I can say that I do not agree with them at all or in any respect.

Chairman WALSH. Now, just from the standpoint of citizenship, I wish you would give your comment upon them.

Judge CLARK. My view is that the object of the courts is over and above any mere technicality to do justice between man and man. And as to those great corporations that require large numbers of laborers, if those laborers feel that it is necessary for them to take certain steps, in order to protect themselves, I do not see any reason why they should be made collectively responsible for possible excesses of a few of the men. They are trying to better their conditions; they are only in this world one time, and while here they ought to have a fair show and a square deal.

Chairman WALSH. What is the social desirability or undesirability of such action? Is it better for the State that they be permitted to organize freely or not, Judge?

Judge CLARK. Yes; they ought to be just as free to organize labor as we are to organize capital. If we can organize a great railroad system going from here to San Francisco and put our money together, they ought to be able to put themselves together to protect themselves; they are working to support themselves and their wives and children and ought to have as much right to organize as we.

Chairman WALSH. We have had before us here, Judge, in the last week, the operations of what is called the relief department of one of the railroads.

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. We have had the necessity of taking that up in many other institutions. Have you given any thought to that subject, or have you had the subject before you, as a judge?

Judge CLARK. Yes; we had—we have had several cases of that kind in North Carolina. The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad system runs through our State. They compel every man who takes employment with that company to pay from $9 to $75 dollars a year into that fund; he could not take employment with them unless he paid that sum. It makes an income of several million dollars a year; I did have the figures. And that fund was disbursed and controlled entirely by the officers of the railroad corporation; and under that system, if a man was injured, if he took any benefit—well, he was compelled to—or went to the hospital or received any benefits, he was debarred from going into the courts of the State to recover damages. He might be damaged $5,000 or $20,000. We had one case where a man was damaged twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, an engineer, and he received some $356 benefits, and he was debarred from bringing any action. It came before our court and we held that that arrangement was illegal under our State law and under the general precedent. Barden v. R. R., 152 N. C., 318.) We had had decisions in other States to the contrary, and the result was that by a change of the personnel of one member of our court the decision was reversed. (King v. R. R., 157 N. C., 44.) In the meantime an act of Congress was passed prohibiting those relief departments, and since then it has been passed on and upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in Railroad v. The McGuire, 219 U. S., 549), and one or two other cases, and as a result we have gone back to the former decision, and they are not barred from damages in the case of employees of railroads.

Chairman WALSH. Could you, Judge, sketch the trend of the decisions of your own State in labor cases? Do you have any other instances than the one you have detailed where the age was established?

Judge CLARK. So far as child labor is concerned, our courts have closely followed the statutes and have not attempted to modify them or cut them down in any way. We have tried to put them in execution, following out the spirit of the law. The purpose in our case is twofold, the age of child labor is very low in North Carolina, lower than most of the States.

Chairman WALSH. What is the age?

Judge CLARK. Thirteen, I think; not more than 12 in some cases. The other trouble is that we have no inspection law in North Carolina to enforce that law; there is no way to see whether it is put in operation or not. The practical result in our State is this, that we have in our legislature a committee to which those matters are referred, and they have a system by which this committee is composed of manufacturers, and of course you know exactly what the result is; we can not get any further legislation.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had any experience in the question of the policing of tracks and bridges of railroads?

Judge CLARK. The railroad men in our State, and I am speaking now of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and men of that class, who are always very intelligent men, they say they would be glad if some legislation could be had along this line. We have legislation for the inspection of car couplers and of handholds and of those kind of appliances, but there is none for the inspection of tracks or for the inspection of bridges. And they say—of course, I am not a railroad engineer myself—but they say they have bridges along the tracks that were built to hold 30-ton engines and that sometimes now 200-ton engines go across those bridges, and as they do so they bounce up and down. When one of those 200-ton engines goes across one of those bridges it will sink and rise, and such bridges are very dangerous; and if some means could be devised for inspection of tracks and bridges, it would add very much to the safety of the public in traveling and also to the protection of employees of the railroad. Our tracks are frequently defective, and in some places there is not one good tie in seven. Understand, I have not inspected this matter myself, but these men who are intelligent engineers tell me these things. And when an accident happens "no one is to blame," with no inspection; that is, public inspection of the bridges and tracks. I suppose the railroads themselves have some inspection, but there is nothing to protect the public and the enginemen operating the trains.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had experience in your State with the use of the injunction in labor disputes?

Judge CLARK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you studied the effect of them, generally, in the United States, as a student of economics and the law?

Judge CLARK. I do not think they can be justified, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What are the economic and social effects of the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes?

Judge CLARK. Well, it has been, of course, to irritate the men, because they feel that in an Anglo-Saxon community every man has a right to a trial by jury, and that to take him up and compel him to be tried by a judge is not in accordance with the principle of equality, liberty, and justice.

Chairman WALSH. Do you think that has been one of the causes of social unrest in the United States?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; and undoubtedly will be more so unless it is remedied.

Chairman WALSH. You have observed, have you, judge, the situation out of which these injunctions largely grew, what is called picketing by labor unions?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And have you considered the question of personal rights involved in that?

Judge CLARK. We have had no knowledge of them in our State, because we have had nothing of the kind; we have not had strikes or picketing, or boycotts; the only thing has been one or two trials for blacklisting.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you about the social and legal aspects of blacklisting. Can that be stopped by law, or how?

Judge CLARK. It is prohibited in our State by law; how far it can be enforced is another matter.

Chairman WALSH. What have the decisions of your courts along that line been?

Judge CLARK. The only decision was that it was absolutely illegal to blacklist a man. We made the railroad company responsible for the damages in that case.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have a case in North Carolina where the railroad company was held responsible?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir. It came up on a straight proposition where there was evidence showing that the blacklisting was done. We have had but one case.

Chairman WALSH. Did that proceed along the lines of the common law, or was it under the statute you have mentioned?

Judge CLARK. Under our statute.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered the subject, Judge, of the protection that should be afforded to life and property during industrial disputes?

Judge CLARK. We have had nothing along that line in our State.

Chairman WALSH. Or the use of private guards and detectives?

Judge CLARK. We have had nothing of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Or of martial law or the action of any military force during strikes?

Judge CLARK. We have had nothing to call them out. Our State is very largely an agricultural one, and we have very few labor disputes.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered the extent to which Federal control is desirable in that matter?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; we have never had anything of that kind.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered the extent to which the State may exert control over industrial conditions?

Judge CLARK. Only to the extent of fixing the age of labor and providing against the defective appliances on railroads and in the case of machinery. We have had legislation along that line, and we have had some decisions of our courts tending to show that any failure to use devices and measures for the protection of life and limb, as for instance covering cogwheels. They ought to be guarded, and wherever machinery is used there ought to be every protection that modern invention has found applicable for the protection of labor.

Chairman WALSH. The other commissioners will desire to ask you some questions, Judge Clark. Commissioner Lennon says he has some he wishes to ask.

Commissioner LENNON. Judge Clark, we have had criticism because of the exercise of power by the courts to declare laws passed by Congress and State legislatures unconstitutional; and it has been claimed in some instances that so far as the United States courts are concerned, this power is an assumed one; that there is no justification—actual justification—either in the Constitution of the United States or in the laws enacted by Congress controlling courts giving them any such power. Have you ever considered that matter? If so, what is your view upon it?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; I have considered that matter; and I have always believed that Mr. Thomas Jefferson was right when he said it was an assumed power and that there was no authority to exercise it.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you believe that the exercise of such power, particularly by Federal courts, is a cause of social and industrial unrest?

Judge CLARK. I think so, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you think it is a justifiable cause of unrest?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. That the unrest of that character by the citizenship is a righteous unrest?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir. I think usurpation of power by any department of the Government is a justifiable cause of unrest among the sovereign people.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you believe it would be wise on the part of the Congress of the United States or of State legislatures to by statute prohibit the exercise of such powers by the courts?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. I think the most acute criticism of the courts that we have encountered rises perhaps more often in personal-injury cases than any other, and has to do with the subject of the possible delays in getting a final decision. We find cases where years have elapsed before a poor man has secured a verdict or a final settlement of an original verdict; and they believe that these delays are brought about in order to offset their just claims. What is your experience or what is your observation of the dealings with such matters by the courts?

Judge CLARK. Well, that is a very widespread complaint, sir, and a very just complaint; but how to remedy it is something the legal profession has not been able to ascertain. You take a case which comes up, that there are four or five able lawyers representing a corporation with a young lawyer over here generally appearing on a contingent fee. Now, these gentlemen are men of long experience in the profession and men of known ability, and when they argue the case before the judge and tell him that a witness, or witnesses, is absent or a witness is sick or give excuses of that kind, what can the judge do? It is one of those things inherent in the situation for which it is difficult to provide a remedy.

Commissioner LENNON. Is it not possible that legislation can provide a remedy for this in some way?

Judge CLARK. Well, the difficulty is to find out what legislation can be adopted to prevent this delay. It ought to be prevented. It is a crime and an evil, and has been ever since Shakespeare laid it down that the law's delays were one of the ills to which men were heir to.

Commissioner LENNON. Is it not a fact that the Government of the United States can generally provide a remedy for an admitted evil in the administration of justice?

Judge CLARK. It has been so up to this time.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, it would seem as though we will have some remodeling of our Government?

Judge CLARK. Well, Mr. Taft, who is not known as being a progressive, is now conducting an investigation into some means for avoiding the delays of the law. He is president of the American Bar Association and is working upon that question, and I do not think he has yet been able to find, among many of the members of the American Bar Association, any practicable remedy for that evil. If so, I don't know what it is.

Now, we had a case which came before the court of which I am a member, where a man was killed on a railroad. An action was brought to recover for his death, and able counsel were able to postpone the trial of that case for four years. The case came up to our bench, and a majority of the court thought there was some little technical error in it and sent it back. Four years after that it came up there again, and another little technical error caused it to be again sent back. At the end of another four years it got there the third time, and we thought it ought not to go back again if we could help it, but there was some technical error or other there again, unfortunately, and against these able lawyers one young fellow on the other side, and, of course, you know, as a lawyer, how that is done——

Commissioner LENNON (interrupting). Well, I am not a lawyer, but I am an American citizen.

Judge CLARK. Well, at the end of some four years more it came back for the fourth time, and at the end of that 16 years, the little child, who was 6 months old when his father died, was then 17 years old; and after this great lapse of time and because witnesses had died, and after 17 years of litigation, and after 4 honorable judges doing their best, at the end of the 17 years nothing was had after all that litigation. Now, what is the remedy? I don't know.

Commissioner LENNON. There was an opportunity during those 17 years for that engineer to have starved to death, and his family?

Judge CLARK. Well, the man was killed, you know.

Commissioner LENNON. Or his family, at any rate, to have starved?

Judge CLARK. Yes; and I reckon they came very near it. It certainly was hope long delayed.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, isn't it the duty of the bar association or the lawyers of this country or the judges, to give a matter of this kind the most profound consideration of which they are capable, in order that the remedy shall be found?

Judge CLARK. Yes. In that particular case I wrote an opinion for our court, which you will find in our reports, reciting the history of that case and the evils, and asking what is the remedy. I have done that in other cases. (Penny v. R. R., 161 N. C., 530; Nelson v. R. R., 167 N. C., at p. 190.)

Commissioner LENNON. Will you state to the stenographer, so that we can refer to the case in the law books?

Judge CLARK. I have not the memorandum of the case, but I can send it to you, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. All right; send it to us.

(See Walter Clark exhibit at end of this subject.)

Judge CLARK. And I have written a half a dozen others along the same line. I have tried to impress upon the profession and upon the public that the court really desires speedy administration of justice, and that a delay of justice is a denial of justice. (Nelson v. R. R., 167 N. C., at pp. 188-190.)

Commissioner LENNON. Referring again to the question of the power of the courts to declare laws and acts of legislatures unconstitutional, have you ever made any degree of study of the exercise of that power by the courts, as to its effects upon the economic and social conditions of our people?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; I have delivered two addresses, Judge, along that line, one before the University of Pennsylvania in 1906, and one before Cooper Union, in New York, in 1914, both of which have been published by the United States Senate as Senate documents, and they give my views pretty fully on that matter.

Commissioner LENNON. If you will give us a reference to them, we will get them.

Chairman WALSH. Give us the best reference you can, please, Judge, and we will have them incorporated in our records?

Judge CLARK. They are addresses delivered before the University of Pennsylvania in April, 1906, and published as a Senate document (S. Doc. 87, 62d Cong, 1st sess.), I believe, on the motion of Senator Owen, of Oklahoma. The other address was delivered at Cooper Union in January, 1914, and published as a Senate document on the motion of Senator Overman, of North Carolina. (S. Doc. 610, 63d Cong., 2d sess.)

Commissioner LENNON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Judge CLARK. They were both published or reprinted, I think, during the last year.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson would like to ask you some questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Following up that matter of the law's delay, Judge, would you feel free to express an opinion as to whether or not one of the factors that enters largely into that is—well, for want of a better word, I will say the economic value of a lawyer to his client—depends in a very considerable degree in his ability to aid that client to avoid his legal responsibilities for the payment for injury or damage?

Judge CLARK. Unquestionably that is so, sir, and that is the difficulty; he is employed to delay. He is counsel for the defendant. The defendant does not want to pay. The defendant may know that if it comes to trial when the matter is fresh in the public mind and before a jury sitting over there that there will be a verdict against it. The attorney is retained to prevent that result, and he puts the case off for such time as he can, for 4 years or for 8 years or for 12 years, and by that time witnesses are dead and the impression on the public mind is faded, and he may get a verdict for plaintiff, but certainly for a very reduced amount. Counsel is retained for that purpose.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And as long as the class of lawyers—now, I am differentiating, as the class of lawyers who proceed on the basis that his annual income is based on his ability to do these things is intimately connected with the formation of legislation, in the hope that the legislation by formulating it in such a way that he can defeat it?

Judge CLARK. There has not been a session of the United States Congress or of any State in which there have not been lobbies present and paid for the purpose of defeating legislation that would militate against corporations. You know as well as I do that they do not all stand in the lobby, many have seats in the Senate and in the House.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There will be no dissenting opinion filed. Your State rendered the original decision, or I am in error in saying your State, but a judge in your State rendered the original decision in which the doctrine of fellow servant was passed?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; not the first one. The North Carolina fellow-servant act that was passed in 1898 was drawn by myself.

Commissioner GARRETSON. But you misunderstand the question, Judge. I mean the old, original decision under the common law, a decision was rendered in your State back in 1843, upon which the doctrine grew up, you preceded Massachusetts in that decision, did you?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; I think it was Murray v. R. R., in 1842 in South Carolina.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I was under the impression it was in North Carolina in 1838 or 1848?

Judge CLARK. South Carolina; and Massachusetts came second (Farwell v. R. R., 4 —, 49).

Commissioner GARRETSON. Did I gather from the statement that you made earlier, after you came into the chair, that you held your view upon which your decision of child age limit was based that on certain fundamentals that the court is justified in taking into consideration pure equity in reaching a conclusion, provided it is not forbidden by statute law?

Judge CLARK. That is my opinion exactly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you hold, bear in mind that is rather a different idea from what I have heard many men of judicial positions express, do you hold that that power is based on exactly the same principle that gives the judge the power to issue injunctions, or do you base it differently?

Judge CLARK. Upon a different basis, for this reason, an injunction, as you know, is derived from the old Roman civil common law. But this other doctrine you speak of is not. Some old judge about 300 or 400 or 500 years ago, when society was crude, and they had different ideas of labor than now, laid down laws against labor, and very much on the side that the judges came from. We have been following in his footsteps like sheep jumping over fences, and I say the same idea that that judge had to lay down that law is adhered to to-day. That law is nothing more than judge-made law, if he laid down law that was not right or just or fair between man and man, the judge of to-day should not be bound by it. If it is the statute, we must follow it, but we are not bound to take the views of a man 300 years ago about whose ability and integrity we know nothing, simply because he has written a decision.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And still to-day, although not as prevalent as a few years ago, by every case that is brought to an American court in which there is not an existing statute, it is decided on the European common law, which is nothing in the world but a consensus of decisions covering the decisions that you have referred to?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; and my opinion has been antagonistic to that principle. I don't recognize the right of some unknown man, who lived in different surroundings and in a different state of society, to tell me what I shall say as to what is just between "A" and "B" to-day.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And would you take cognizance of the conditions under which you are forced to decide?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; and if he had the same surroundings that we have to-day, he might have done better.

Commissioner GARRETSON. On another phase, as to the public inspection of tracks on the part of railroads. You hold that such public inspection—you referred to the fact that it was all only as good as the weakest tie. That undoubtedly would be on what is known as the branch territory?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; I am not a railroad man, I am telling you what men in that line told me. They said in some places, I don't say it is general, but the track is often bad. In making a chain, a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and the railroad is no stronger than its weakest section.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You hold that such public inspection would act as a protection to the public against the economic greed of the corporation?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Because the only reason that could be justly put forward for that condition would be that the company could not afford it and pay dividends?

Judge CLARK. I would not say "economic greed," but they are like other men, they don't always do their duty; they are sometimes negligent, and it may be the foreman or the superintendent that is not competent, and they may have a bad piece of track, just through incompetency.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It is to guard against that very feature that you believe that public inspection would be desirable?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. After the decision that was rendered in your court in the case of the Atlantic Coast Line Relief, that worked an absolute revelation with the method of administering that relief fund, did it not? In other words, the company threw it wholly into the hands of the employee, and it did not act as a bar to recovery from them on either?

Judge CLARK. No, it did not; but since that the United States Congress has passed a law on that, and we have had two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; one was the McGuire case (219 U. S., 548), and R. R. v. Schonbert (224 U. S., 605), and since then they have abolished the compulsory feature.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask, Judge, what effect public opinion and public sentiment have on court decisions?

Judge CLARK. What effect?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes, sir.

Judge CLARK. Well, it is a hard question to answer; but judges are like other men; they live in a community, and to some extent they are bound to take, to some extent, their impressions from the people. They do not do so enough, in my opinion. I think the decisions of the courts of the twentieth century ought to be delivered in accordance with justice, and we ought not to hark back to old opinions rendered three or four hundred years ago.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The point has been made, Judge, that without any change in the fundamental laws of the Nation the Supreme Court of the United States, for example, in these matters, and that are affecting the economic condition of the country, have materially changed. For example, it was pointed out by a legal man to me personally that such a decision as has been rendered in more recent years by the United States Supreme Court upholding the constitutionality of the 10-hour law for women in the Oregon Laundry case, and the 8-hour law for underground miners, and the maximum-wage law, that it would have been impracticable one or two decades ago when the courts were not ripe for it. I would like to know your view.

Judge CLARK. In the Lochner case in New York some years ago the State passed a law that men in the bake oven rooms, with a certain degree of temperature, ought not to be employed over 10 hours a day. Their court of appeals sustained the case, and it came to our Supreme Court at Washington, and they turned it down on the ground that it was interfering with the right to contract. But if a man was forced to work in an oven for 12 hours a day, he would be in no condition to contract. That decision has been very much criticized throughout the country.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is the status of the child-labor law in your State, Judge, as compared with other Southern States?

Judge CLARK. I can not say about that, because I have not read the statutes in other States. I don't think the age of labor laws, child-labor laws, is high enough in our State.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is it?

Judge CLARK. Thirteen for some and 12 for others; but I think it ought to be higher. Still the legislature passes on that, and the courts have to take it as they lay it down.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. North Carolina, I take it, is largely an agricultural State, and only incidentally an industrial State?

Judge CLARK. Outside of the great corporations that run our transportation service and our cotton mills we have scarcely any other industry except agriculture.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are the workers in the cotton mills organized?

Judge CLARK. Very few of them are. A very large proportion in the cotton mills are women and children, and therefore we don't have the labor unions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Discussing the Sherman Act in connection with industrial decisions, Judge, I think that a decision was rendered recently by the Supreme Court claiming that employers have the same right as workers in the matter of hiring and discharging.

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There were also decisions rendered and convictions made in favor of employers against the organized class for the upholding of prices, which was declared illegal, and if I remember rightly more recently some other manufacturing employers or manufacturing plumbers or distributing plumbers were taken into court for having entered into what I think was called conspiracy, to maintain certain prices, and to boycott certain dealers by refusing to sell them their wares?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The fact of boycotting a dealer and refusing to sell him wares then became an illegal action, punishable under the law. Now, if the same law is applied to workers as applied to employers, there has to be a difference between the two, both ought to be treated alike under the law, and might it not be said that if labor has a right to boycott an employer, a merchant for handling certain products, that that is likewise illegal. What is your point of view on that?

Judge CLARK. My point of view on that, that laborers, who have wives and children depending upon their daily earnings, are not in the same position as a Rockefeller or a Carnegie. They are not on a thorough equality.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you would differentiate on that point between the worker and the employer?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; because they are not on a parity.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If a group of merchants would come in and boycott some dealer because he cut prices, or some other reason, you would regard that as a crime?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But if a group of workers come in and boycott another worker because he cuts prices of labor, or would boycott a merchant because he handled merchandise that was produced by cut-price labor, you would not consider that a crime?

Judge CLARK. As long as there is no physical violence, and no interference with the property rights of the employer, it is not illegal.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you go so far as to maintain that what is known as the secondary boycott shall not be punished? That is, let us assume that a labor union, printers, boycott a newspaper because the newspaper hires underprice men, and were unable to bring it to terms, and it goes to the advertisers of the newspaper and demands that they withdraw their advertising from that paper on the peril of being boycotted?

Judge CLARK. If no personal violence to person or property, and no intimidation, I think they have the right to protect themselves.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that from your point of view what has become known as the secondary boycott likewise ought not to be punishable?

Judge CLARK. There are some features that would go to the extreme that should be illegal, but simply where they use their influence I don't think they ought to be punished for that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Has the question of injunctions in labor disputes arisen in your State?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; we have not had any acute form of disputes between labor and capital in our State.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Undoubtedly you have given that problem thought. What is your opinion on the matter of granting injunctions?

Judge CLARK. I think they ought to be like any other matter; I don't think one man should be allowed to sit there and decide for a corporation when a man is working for his wife and children, and they are depending upon him. He does not have a say at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you have in North Carolina a workmen's compensation act?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; we have not, and for this reason: The system of workmen's compensation act, I take it all you gentlemen agree with me, most men do, that it is a proper system. Now, you take it that an employer is injured, or killed, and leaves the widow and little children with no means to prosecute a lawsuit on the one side, and on the other is a corporation with a million dollars, with counsel retained by the year, and on this side there is nothing in the world that the widow has to do but to go to some young lawyer and have him take her case on a contingent fee. It is an unequal position. There ought to be some system by which there is a certain fixed amount so that the widow will have the implements of war when she needs it the most, immediately after her husband's death. The objection in our State has been that as soon as an act of that kind is introduced in our legislatures the gentlemen of our profession, who happen to be lawyers and legislators, start in to cut down the amount of compensation so low that the workingman will not accept it. In case where the ordinary jury might give a verdict of ten to twenty thousand dollars they put it at two or three or four thousand dollars. Of course the workingmen are not for that act, and that is where the trouble is in our State. We have had a compensation act introduced in two or three different sessions of the legislature. The principle is all right. There ought to be some compensation paid speedily, at the time of the family need (or at the time of the injured's need when he is injured); but when they cut down the allowance so low, of course the men are against it in North Carolina.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, when the employer or representatives of the employers in your State favor the act, making the issue, only the question is how much compensation shall be allowed, and do you think that the employers are acting in good faith when they favor it or pretend to favor it, and still make it so unreasonable that the workers are against it?

Judge CLARK. I would not like to attack the employers in the matter, but the fact is that proposed bill makes the rates so low that the men will not accept it, and the employer knows that is the reason.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you happen to know what is the maximum of weekly compensation that the latest bill provided?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; I have it at home, but I know it was so low that the men would not accept it. It was a flank movement, and the amount was so small that the men would not accept it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You probably are aware of the fact that at the present there are either 24 or 25 States in the Union that come under workmen's compensation?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it is only a matter of time that the public sentiment will be so pronounced that other States will come under workmen's compensation?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; nobody opposes the act, but it is the flank movement that cuts it out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It is simply a way of defeating it?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You probably also know that there is a Federal compensation act applying to Federal employees? There are one group of workers that were overlooked in the shuffle, and that is those engaged in interstate commerce, and do not come under the State act or the Federal act. What would be your attitude toward a Federal compensation act that would deal with those engaged in interstate commerce?

Judge CLARK. I think there ought to be an act of that kind with adequate compensation for men engaged in interstate commerce. I would not like to infringe upon the prerogatives of the States.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to ask one question before Mr. O'Connell starts. I have heard a great deal of criticism regarding the phraseology of laws, that they are purposely——

Judge CLARK. Pardon me a moment?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; we will take a recess for a few moments.

(A recess was here taken for two or three minutes.)

Commissioner LENNON. I was just calling your attention to the fact that we have heard much criticism, and I have heard a great deal outside of what has been presented to the commission during their investigation as to the obscure phraseology of the laws; that lawyers predominate in the lawmaking bodies, and that laws are so worded that the laymen don't, in some instances, know whether it means yes or not. Is there justification for such complaint?

Judge CLARK. To some extent that is due to limitation in language. It is very hard to write matters so clear that no man can fail to understand.. No matter what language you use there is always some ambiguity about it. Of course lawyers are very astute, lawyers can read things into the statute; they are paid to be astute, it is their business to be astute, and it is the business of judges not to let them be too astute.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, I have in my own experience sat in a body of 10 or 12 men, all laymen, none of us lawyers, and everyone of us reached a different conclusion as to what a certain section meant.

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is that good for the citizenship of the country to have laws of that character?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; it is not good; sometimes it is undoubtedly due to want of clearness in the mind of the man who drafted the act, and sometimes it is due to the fact that the man was so certain what he meant that he didn't put down what he meant, and sometimes due to limitation in language, and sometimes due to purpose.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You spoke of the policy of people before the court in the treatment of the law.

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that the possible difference was the fact that the one side was in a position to employ better talent or more talent than the other?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do the laws themselves in some instances discriminate in the classes, as for instance in the Sherman antitrust law, it provides that damages can be collected in threefold, and in the case of the Danbury hatters they were assessed threefold by the hat manufacturers at Danville, Conn., and that was opposed by the workingmen. For instance, if blacklisting, for instance, was an opposite effect, and the employers banded themselves together, and if a man lost his position or quit his position or was discharged by an employer he could not find employment again, and was perhaps forbidden from seeking employment, there is no provision in the law for triple damages in his case, and I want to ask your opinion as to the quality of the law itself, if there is not at times discrimination. Take the Sherman antitrust law.

Judge CLARK. You mean in the statute itself?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Yes, sir.

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; it is very frequently so; and it is put there purposely, too.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is the point I wanted to bring out, if there was not a malicious intent on the framer of the law to apply it that way?

Judge CLARK. How could it be otherwise? A very distinguished American citizen said "we are all practical men"; we are practical men, and we know how legislation is passed. Ordinarily the gentlemen that occupy seats in Congress or other legislatures have campaign expenses, and those campaign expenses are contributed to by the personal friends of the candidate who have means. Can a man sit there and pass an act in opposition to the men that furnished the money to elect him and in favor of the man that did nothing but sell his vote, as some of the voters do? Those are things that are beyond the power even of this honorable body, that are almost even beyond imagination, to determine how we can correct it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I suppose you have given thought to the question as to whether labor in its organized form is a trust or not?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you have also given thought to the question as to the origin of the Sherman antitrust law, its intent and purposes? In your opinion, was the Sherman antitrust law ever intended to apply to organized labor as such?

Judge CLARK. You ask my opinion; I say, in general, no; there was no such idea. I don't believe it was so intended. It was a construction that was put upon it by lawyers in the one instance, and by judges in others, who honestly expressed their views on the bench.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. As you studied the formation of labor, you don't look upon it as a trust on which the Sherman antitrust law was compiled?

Judge CLARK. No, sir; not at all, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is an expressed fear on the part of some of our citizenship that the legislator might go too far in enacting legislation on the interference of the rights of citizens, and I have sometimes, assuming the rights of individuals, rights that when applied do not appear to be only right to us individuals—for instance, a great proportion of our citizenship believe that there should be one day in seven to rest, and that day the general opinion is ought to be Sunday. Yet, if we attempt to enact legislation that would prohibit Sunday employment, there would be a great number of our citizenship that would hold that we were interfering with individual rights. What is your opinion on that?

Judge CLARK. If you will allow me to express myself in a personal manner, that matter came before the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and my opinion is written on that subject in the case of Ordmann versus Robinson, in the 134 North Carolina, in which I decided that a man is entitled to one day's rest, and one day out of seven was about right, and there were a large proportion of our people that did keep Sunday, and that Sunday was probably the day that should be kept, although the Jews keep Friday, no, Saturday, and the Mohammedans keep Friday, and if they are Mohammedans they ought to have Friday, and if they are Jews they should have Saturday, but the point is that they ought to keep one day in seven to rest. It is not because it is Sunday, but because most of the people are entitled to one day out of seven for rest.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You believe, then, that the people, the majority of the people, and their representatives whom they select to represent them in the halls of legislatures, would be justified if the habit of prohibiting one day's rest in seven became prevalent, and it became extremely dangerous to the health and the morals of the people of our country, that the legislators would be justified in enacting legislation that would prohibit, regardless of the rights of the citizens, the continual employment of workers regardless of the day of rest?

Commissioner LENNON. Did I ask you, Judge—I am rather uncertain as to whether you have given any address or written anything upon the subject of the assumption by the court of the power to declare laws unconstitutional?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Oh, yes; that is the subject of the addresses you have spoken of——

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; they are Senate documents.

Chairman WALSH. Did you write anything on the subject prior——

Judge CLARK. Yes; I have written some opinions along that line before. But those were the first two speeches I delivered on the subject. I delivered a speech on labor at Wilmington in August, 1914, on the general subject of these questions you have been just asking me.

Chairman WALSH. Yes. Well, did you write—outside of these two speeches have you written on the subject of the power of the courts to declare laws unconstitutional?

Judge CLARK. Yes, sir; I have written in one of the law magazines and published some other speeches.

Chairman WALSH. As Commissioner Lennon suggests, can you give us a reference to those?

Judge CLARK. I can probably send it to your clerk.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would, please, then, giving us anything that you have.

Judge CLARK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Now, unless there is something to say yourself, Judge, you will be excused.

Judge CLARK. Nothing more; I thank you for your courtesies, gentlemen.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you, very much.

Judge Edgar M. Cullen.

TESTIMONY OF JUDGE EDGAR M. CULLEN.

Chairman WALSH. Will you please state your name?

Judge CULLEN. Edgar M. Cullen.

Chairman WALSH. And your profession?

Judge CULLEN. Attorney at law.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Judge CULLEN. Brooklyn, N. Y.

Chairman WALSH. What official positions have you held, Judge?

Judge CULLEN. I have been judge of the Supreme Court for the State of New York and then associate judge of the court of appeals of that State; and then chief judge of that court until a year ago, the first of January, on having reached the age of 70. The Constitution provides, not unwisely, I think, that after 70 a man shall retire from judicial service.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered the development in the United States of the declaration of martial law and industrial disputes, Judge?

Judge CULLEN. Not so much the question of martial law as some doctrines that have been held by one court particularly, the court of West Virginia, as to the right of military commissions under the declaration of martial law.

Chairman WALSH. Well, it was that particular subject to which we were going to invite your attention. If you will be kind enough, Judge, we will be glad to have your opinion upon that subject as a lawyer.

Judge CULLEN. Well, my opinion was simply this, as I expressed in a pamphlet, in an address that I delivered, that if the doctrine of West Virginia was true or was to be followed, it would be subversive of all such things as liberty in this country. The doctrine of that court was that not only during actual insurrection and the clash of arms, soldiers might arrest and detain those who were seeking to resist legal mandates, but the person that was offending against the law might be tried by a military commission and might be punished by that commission, although the civil courts might be open in the State.

Chairman WALSH. Would you please outline, just in ordinary terms, Judge, the situation as you understood it, in West Virginia, and the application of this somewhat new doctrine to that situation?

Judge CULLEN. As I understood it—but now, I wish—I can not be sure that my understanding of it is absolutely accurate, because I considered the question entirely from a legal point of view, and took the recital of the facts from the opinions of the court as its basis for that.

The miners had gone on a strike. There had been violence to such an extent that the governor called out the militia. I have forgotten whether he declared a state of insurrection in that locality or not, but at any rate he did call out the militia. The militia made arrests, and he assumed, or it was assumed—who was responsible for it I don't remember—to try some of the alleged rioters by military commission, convicted, and sentenced them; and the question came up on a habeas corpus before the civil courts for their release. At that time—I am depending upon my recollection, but I am very certain I am right—the courts in this county where this military commission sat were open—in the county seat. I think it was Kanawha County, but I am not absolutely certain. But it is immaterial for the point, and the courts of West Virginia held that that punishment by the military court was legal and effective, and refused to discharge the prisoner. Now, you will observe that is another and different question there from the right of suspension of the habeas corpus temporarily, or the right to use force against force, of course, possessed by every officer of the law. If a policeman seizes a burglar and the burglar resists him, he has a right to shoot him. That is an entirely different thing. But they held the law to be that the military commission in such a matter could try, convict, and punish for an offense. That is the whole of it.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what is the fundamental wrong of that view, from your standpoint as a lawyer?

Judge CULLEN. Well, the fundamental wrong is that when the militia is called out they are like other officers of the law—like the constable, like the police officer; they have the right to arrest; they have the right to resist force by force, even if it goes to the extent of taking life; but they have no right to punish, because otherwise while the statutes of the State define crimes and their punishments, a man might be sentenced entirely regardless of the law that had prescribed the offense and the punishment for the offense. Now, frankly and with all due deference to that court—that learned court of West Virginia—it must be said that the military commission did not condemn the man to death, but if they had the power to condemn him to imprisonment, I think they would have equal power to condemn him to death. And with my view of the law I think it is absolutely inconsistent with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the famous Milligan case, where a military commission in Indiana—as I recollect it, in the time of the Civil War, when there was a great deal of excitement—had assumed to try a man for an offense committed in that State and sentenced him to death, and the case came up to the Supreme Court of the United States and they discharged him on habeas corpus. The radical difference between the two is just this: One rule simply attempts to enforce the law either by preventing the offense or arresting the offender; but giving a military commission power to punish for the offense subverts all authority of the civil courts and renders the civil power subordinate to the military.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Judge, a great deal of criticism has been leveled at that general situation, and a great deal of interest has been expressed by the workers throughout the country where we have held our hearings, growing out of the use of the military power. Now, from your standpoint—from the legal standpoint—what recommendations could this commission make, or what could be done in the way of suggestions, perhaps, to legislatures, or to Congress to remedy that situation?

Judge CULLEN. I don't think that situation can be remedied until you remedy the situation that causes that situation; that is, the use of violence by strikers.

Chairman WALSH. Well——

Judge CULLEN (interrupting). To a certain extent; if the strikers are only few in number the ordinary police force may be sufficient, but especially in the rural communities or where there are no great cities the local police force may be so small that it can not resist them. In New York City, of course, there has been no such trouble. The militia has not been called out over in old New York—not since 1871. There are—I don't remember the exact number—about 10,000 or 12,000 policemen, and whatever their faults, they are perfectly fearless and courageous, whether it be to stop a mob or whatever the emergency may be; and they never have called on the militia forces.

Chairman WALSH. Now, do I take it, Judge, then, that if violence is widespread enough on the other side, it would be justifiable to allow the military to supersede the civil power for the time?

Judge CULLEN. It does not supersede the civil power, in my conception, but simply goes there to enforce order and to enforce the civil law.

Chairman WALSH. Well, in this West Virginia case, Judge, had the violence reached that stage that the civil law, the civil authorities, were unable to cope with it?

Judge CULLEN. I must assume so, though, as I told you, I am not familiar with the facts. I looked at it altogether from the legal point of view and took the facts as stated in the opinion of the court. There was a minority opinion delivered there, too, denying the power of the military that was asserted by the majority, but the judges who dissented did not assume to state that the facts were different from those as stated by the majority.

Chairman WALSH. Is there any middle ground that the law might take, Judge, for instance, to see that the military forces keep the courts open and keep them free for the trial of cases, so that the military authority would not have to take over the question of innocence or guilt of the individual, no matter how great the violence was?

Judge CULLEN. I am afraid that I have not been clear in my expression of my views to you, Mr. Chairman. I have said that I condemned the assumption by the military of the power to determine whether the man was guilty or innocent, or to inflict punishment where the courts were open. They have a right to arrest those who are resisting the mandates of the civil authorities and of the Government, and who are invading the rights or the property of others; and if they had done that and had brought them up to the civil courts, there could not have been any question about their proceeding being within the law.

Chairman WALSH. Well, what I was asking awhile ago—may be I did not make myself clear, Judge——

Judge CULLEN (interrupting). No; I fear the fault is mine, sir.

Chairman WALSH (continuing). Is whether or not any recommendations could be made covering the whole situation from a legal standpoint?

Judge CULLEN. No. I dislike to see the militia use it because, naturally with my training, I like the policeman as the emblem of civil authority much better than the man in uniform. Then the police, where they are in sufficient numbers, are generally more efficient. And then the policeman's club makes no mistakes. If he hits a person in case of riot and outbreak, the man is either an actual offender or it is largely due to his own folly that he is in the riot. While with arms, with the militia, it is generally the innocent person, maybe a half mile or a mile away, that gets shot.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered, Judge, the authorities governing the use of military power in the State of Colorado?

Judge CULLEN. No; I don't know anything about that. There is no decision—I have only looked at the decisions, as I told you. It is entirely a legal matter with me. There is no decision in Colorado that I have been able to find that upholds the power of a military commission to try and to punish offenders.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever given any thought to the question of the trial of military offenders in these fields while the trouble is in progress; that is, a member of the militia. We have a case of this sort where a lieutenant was charged with wantonly killing a man—that is, an unarmed prisoner—and he was tried by military court-martial, or a commission of the officers of the military, and acquitted of the charge; and it was claimed that that was a bar to any prosecution by the civil courts. Did your investigation or your thought touch that subject?

Judge CULLEN. Of course, I believe in no such law. If I am right in my other view, he was responsible if he has violated the law, and the civil court must determine that. I had always supposed it elementary law in this country that the command of a superior, unless it was lawful, gave no immunity to his subordinates who obeyed it.

Chairman WALSH. Did you read the Linderfelt case—what is known as the Linderfelt case, Judge? It has been written about much.

Judge CULLEN. No.

Chairman WALSH. That is, a lieutenant had charge of a prisoner and struck him over the head or some part of his body—he claims he struck him on the arm—and broke the stock of his rifle and knocked the man down. Either while he was upon the ground or getting up and attempting to escape he was fired upon and killed. Now, of course, it created a great deal of feeling. This was one of a group of striking miners and one of the leaders of them—a man named Tikas—and with that feeling, why, the military forces undertook to try Lieut. Linderfelt and did try him and acquitted him, and it was claimed, as I say, that that was a bar to any future prosecution in the civil courts.

Judge CULLEN. I should say to the contrary if I had the power to decide the law.

Chairman WALSH. What, in your opinion, is the practical effect, socially or upon the State rights, of agreeing to that power being in the military rather than in the civil law?

Judge CULLEN. As I said to you, such a doctrine, it seems to me, is a subversion of our individual liberty and of our form of government.

I wish to say, and I am volunteering this remark, that very recently that question has come up in Montana, where, I believe, they had some very serious strike of miners. The supreme court of that State held, contrary to the courts of West Virginia, that while the military had the right to arrest a man, they had no right to try him.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed whether these questions have arisen principally in cases where there were industrial disputes?

Judge CULLEN. I think those are the only cases.

Chairman WALSH. You think those are the only cases?

Judge CULLEN. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson would like to ask some questions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Your attitude, as I understand it, is that the military can only be properly used under the conditions that existed in West Virginia as an enforcement of the police power?

Judge CULLEN. Yes; that is right; that they shall attempt the enforcement of the law and bring the alleged violators of the law before the tribunals properly constituted to determine their guilt and assess their punishment.

Yes; but I wanted to make one qualification, of course, in most constitutions—but not in the constitution of West Virginia—in most constitutions there is a provision that authorizes suspension of habeas corpus, but the suspension of habeas corpus only authorizes detention, not punishment, when if the writ of habeas corpus were not suspended it would be necessary to bring the offenders immediately before a civil magistrate.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The only effect the suspension of the habeas corpus is to deprive a man of liberty pending adjudication?

Judge CULLEN. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Judge.

Mr. Roe.

TESTIMONY OF MR. GILBERT E. ROE.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. ROE. Gilbert E. Roe.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you reside?

Mr. ROE. New York City.

Chairman WALSH. What is your business?

Mr. ROE. Lawyer.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you practiced your profession?

Mr. ROE. Nearly 25 years.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you practiced your profession in New York City?

Mr. ROE. About 14 years.

Chairman WALSH. Have you given any particular attention or made any special study of the attitude of the courts in labor cases?

Mr. ROE. I have had the experience and of observation that comes to a lawyer in active practice, and I have also made some special study of it for the purpose of information in my practice and for the purpose of certain writings on the subject.

Chairman WALSH. What have you written upon the subject, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. I wrote a series of articles a couple of years ago covering the subject in a general and brief way, which appeared in a magazine and was afterwards compiled in book form. That is the principal thing I have done upon that; and I have digested the opinions of two of the former chief justices of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, where I formerly practiced, and annotated them with reference to labor decisions.

Chairman WALSH. There has been a general statement made to this commission, during the progress of this hearing, and to its investigators, by workers, to the effect that they feel they do not have a fair chance in the courts, or, plainly expressed, that a poor man has no chance so far as the law is concerned. We have also had complaints from employers to the effect that they had no chance before the courts on account of what might be called the political influence of workers and of labor unions, and that this was especially true, it was declared, so far as the inferior magistrates were concerned, and with administrative officers. I wish you would make your comment upon that topic, Mr. Roe.

Mr. ROE. I think that it is true that the poor man is not on an equality with the rich man in litigation. That is almost inevitably true; as it has been suggested on the stand this morning by the eminent jurists who have testified here, the rich man can always hire better lawyers or at least more of them than the poor man; he can bring witnesses from a distance; marshal the evidence. He can endure the law's delays, and perhaps even promote them; and in those respects naturally has, and, as far as I can see, is bound to have an advantage over the poor man in matters of litigation. Those are what I would call the legitimate advantages that wealth has in the courts. It is unfortunate, but unavoidable, I am not speaking now of any improper use of wealth being made in the court.

Then, I think that in labor cases particularly, you have to deal with another factor. It is true, as has been suggested here, that our law is founded upon the English common law, and wherever to-day we have not a statute that controls the decision of a case, we go back to the common law to find out what the decision shall be.

Now, the common law, as we all know, was developed—what we call the common law of England—was developed at a time when England, as compared with the present time, was a semibarbarous country, and at that time labor had no rights that the upper or ruling classes were bound to respect. The common law was not developed in the interest of what we call the laboring classes. So far as it was a contest with authority, it was a contest between the King and the upper classes; they ignored, all of them, the laborer.

In England, as late as 1800, they had a statute, and even after that time and during the nineteenth century, they had a statute which absolutely forbade all combinations on the part of laborers. I think they had the law still in existence at that time which penalized a man for refusing to work for an employer if he was offered the few pence a day that the law required.

Well, now, the trouble is, as I view it, that we all of us, as lawyers, you gentlemen of the commission who are lawyers and myself and lawyers generally, have been educated in the idea that the common law was the height of legal wisdom even if it was not something almost divine. We were taught to accept it the same as the theological student is taught to accept the creed of his church. And we find it very hard to get away from, and most judges have found it impossible to get away from it, and the result is that when a question comes up in which labor is involved and we find no statute controlling it, we go back to the common law, and find, if not a precedent, at least a principle, that is supposed to apply. And even in the case of statutes, so thoroughly saturated is the legal profession with the common-law idea that they interpret statutes in the light of the common law, and if a statute seems to be too revolutionary, as they term it; that is, departs too far from the common law, they find out some way to twist that statute to make it come more nearly in harmony with the common law.

Now, that, in a rough way, is my notion of why it is that labor distrusts the courts as it does to-day. Of course you can take that up in specific ways, if you desire to have that done. I do not want to make a speech, but only to answer your questions.

Chairman WALSH. You are going along an illuminating line, and at this point you may comment on the equipment of judges generally with economic information, their familiarity with the question of economics and the distribution of wealth, etc., that seems at the present time to be entering into all these questions—that is, of the nature of hours of work and minimum wage laws, and the like of that. Do I give you my idea?

Mr. ROE. I think so. Of course judges generally do not come from the laboring class. They almost always undergo a certain course of study which I have attempted to describe, and it has the influence upon them that I have suggested. No part of the preparation for the practice of the law, or for being a judge, as far as I ever heard, was a study of economics or laboring conditions, except what a man gets in his college training generally. So that the judge comes to the bench with the equipment of learning of 500 years ago, but not necessarily with any learning concerning the economic questions of the day beyond that which goes with the ordinary legal education.

Chairman WALSH. Do you believe it necessary that economic and social issues should be considered by judges in rendering their decisions?

Mr. ROE. I believe it inevitable; they do consider them now.

Chairman WALSH. Where do they get their information?

Mr. ROE. Well, at the time the Supreme Court, as Judge Harlan said, reversed itself in the tobacco and Standard Oil decisions, Judge Grosscup, the Federal circuit judge, in commenting on that change of decision, said that while he was in perfect harmony with it, that the court rooms had windows through which the judges acquired information and could see what was going on in the outside world; and I don't know but that is as good a description of the way the judges get their information as you can put it. They have no systematic way of getting it. They can, and it has been done by the Supreme Court of the United States in one recent case that I know of—can take what they call "judicial notice" of facts of common knowledge. I refer to that Oregon case relating to the hours of work of women. And in that case, as I recall, the court said it could take judicial notice of the fact that the long hours of work under certain conditions had an injurious effect on the health of women. In that case there was presented to the court, rather than precedents, certain reports from different societies that had made special studies of this question. I know some of the people in New York that compiled the facts that were presented to the court, and the court took it in that case, and that undoubtedly influenced its decision. But, so far as I know, at the present time all that a court can do in taking into consideration its economic and social facts in its decision is to say that the court will take judicial notice of matters of common knowledge. Of course the court interprets that for itself, and it may mean little or much.

Chairman WALSH. That being the case, it is very important where the knowledge should come from and the character of the knowledge.

Mr. ROE. It would seem so to me.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered any means by which expressed economic advice could be made available for judges who have to pass on these questions? You say that in one particular instance pamphlets or findings were given to the judges; following out that line of thought, perhaps, is there any way by which machinery could be provided which would give them such advice upon these subjects?

Mr. ROE. I have not given that any particular thought, but I do not know any reason why that could not be accomplished by statute. The thing that prevents it now is the rules of evidence, and those are subject to change by statute.

Chairman WALSH. Have you any further suggestions that might show what you conceive to be the basis of the reluctance of labor organizations and individual workingmen to present their cases for judicial determination?

Mr. ROE. I can—I do not know whether this will be in answer to your question or not. I can give many instances where the application of the law has worked very unfairly it seems to me, and as it certainly seems to laboring men and labor organizations, if that is what you mean. I think those cases are the basis for the condition of which you speak.

Chairman WALSH. Very good; you can give those cases and your comment on them.

Mr. ROE. I do not mean to take up the specific cases, for I think that is not what you desire, but I can give you the line of decisions I have in mind.

Chairman WALSH. Very good.

Mr. ROE. And I might say, if I may be pardoned a personal word, that in my practice it has been my fortune or misfortune, as the case may be, in personal-injury cases, to usually represent the defendant, so that I naturally have not any bias, I believe, in the other way.

I think that one great reason that labor is loathe to go into the courts is because of what has occurred in what we call personal-injury cases—cases where an employee has been injured and brought his action at the common law to recover damages from his employer. We have developed, or rather we have brought over to this country from England—from the English common law—certain principles that we have applied to those cases, which have been most unjust and unfair in their result.

Ten years ago it would have been heresy to have said that, but to-day everyone admits it, and our compensation laws is the answer that is being made to that admitted unfairness.

Now, for example, in England, nearly 100 years ago, in a very simple case, an employer's two hired men were driving along the street in one of his wagons or vans, which broke down and one of the men was injured, and the court, in order to prevent recovery against the employer—the man who was injured sued the employer—and the court, in order to prevent the recovery devised two doctrines; one was that the servant that was injured assumed the risk of his employment. Of course his employment was the highly dangerous employment of driving along a country road with a very steady team of horses in an ordinary vehicle.

The other proposition of law the court devised was that anyway if the man was injured, if it was through any defect in the wagon, as alleged, it was caused by the negligence of his fellow servant in not keeping the wagon in repair.

Now, you have born into our law from that simple case this whole doctrine of "fellow servant," and an "assumption of risk," that was brought over to this country and early got into the southern reports that have been spoken of, and in the Massachusetts, and spread over the entire country, and is applied, of course, to cases that have absolutely no relation to the simple situation in which the doctrine originated.

I have compiled lists of those cases. I thought probably you would not care to burden your record with them, but we are all familiar with the one in which employees are held to be fellow servants. You may have a switchman up in a tower a thousand miles away from an engineer who is back on the road, and the engineer is injured as a result of the negligence of the man a thousand miles away in that tower, and they are held to be fellow servants, so that the railroad would not be required to respond in damages.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In the original Massachusetts decision was it not a fact that the two men that were held to be fellow servants were at least 2,000 miles apart?

Mr. ROE. I think that is the case, but I have not looked at the case.

Then, of course, akin to that is the doctrine of contributory negligence, and I was favored just day before yesterday with a brief for the Payne Lumber Co. in an action which they are bringing under the Clayton law—the Clayton law which was passed to correct injustices with regard to labor of the Sherman antitrust law, you know. The attorneys for the Payne Lumber Co. have recited this law gave that company certain rights with regard to injunctions that they did not have under the Sherman antitrust law, so they brought their action under that; but in this they get a list of cases in which contributory negligence has been held by the courts to be a defense. I am not able to turn to it this moment.

Commissioner LENNON. Is that the brief filed in the Supreme Court?

Mr. ROE. Yes. I have compiled a long list of those cases, and I would be glad to file it with the commission, with the headings under which they can be grouped.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would do so.

Chairman WALSH. Have you studied any question of the method for securing the enforcement of the constitutional guaranty of rights, so far as the person is concerned, as distinguished from property rights?

Mr. ROE. You mean the right of free speech and of free assemblage?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; the right of free speech and the right of free assemblage, and everything of that sort, Mr. Roe.

Mr. ROE. It is my notion that if the courts would adhere to the Constitution in those matters they would get along pretty well with them.

Chairman WALSH. Have the courts been adhering to the Constitution, in your view?

Mr. ROE. I do not think they have in the matter of free speech and free assemblage. Of course we have many foolish statutes passed upon those subjects; I think the legislature is responsible, that Congress is responsible; but I think the courts could pretty well have taken care of it if they had done in those cases what they have in others, declared the statute unconstitutional.

Chairman WALSH. Is it your idea that if there has been any breaking done of the law with respect to conserving the personal rights of individuals that it has merely been because of the attitude of the men behind the administration of the law—the judges declaring the law, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. I think so.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made any study of the law as applied to trade-unions—that is, the legal liability of trade organizations for the acts of its members, such as the Danbury Hatters' case and others, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. I have read the cases upon that; I have made such study as a lawyer would who has come in contact with those subjects in the practice of his profession.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would make your comments on it, especially so far as the social aspect of those cases is concerned.

Mr. ROE. There again it is my belief that the law discriminates against labor as between labor and property. Now, whether a blacklist is right or whether a boycott is right—whether either one or both ought to be prohibited—I do not know, but it seems perfectly clear that if you are going to allow a blacklist on the part of the employer, that you must allow, or ought fairly to allow, the boycott on the part of the employee. Now, in this connection permit me to call your attention to the very recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case with which I have no doubt you are all familiar, coming up from Kansas, in which the court holds that a law passed by the State of Kansas forbidding the discharge of an employee because he was a member of any union was unconstitutional. The court held in that case that that law was unconstitutional, and held it, I think, by a majority of one.

In that case, as I recall, there was a switchman or a fireman who was a member of his union. He had paid large sums of money into the union, in which he was entitled to sick benefits and other benefits. He was given notice by his employing company that he must either resign from his organization or he would be discharged. That notice was given in the very teeth of and was a clear violation of the statute. The man refused to withdraw from his organization and was discharged. The Kansas courts all upheld the statute and affirmed the conviction of the employer. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, reversed all that and held that the State had no authority to pass a statute of that kind. Now, that, coupled with the Adair case, looks to me as though it did not leave very much of labor's rights to organize.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is the Adair case one brought under the Erdman Act whereby one section of the Erdman Act was declared unconstitutional by Judge Evans?

Mr. ROE. Yes. Now, if one employer can do that, all employers can do that, and they can either compel the employee to withdraw from his labor union and forfeit his benefits in it or forfeit his job.

Now, then, labor has no such retaliatory right as that against capital. If he wants to boycott himself—I mean personally—if he says, "I will withdraw my patronage" from his employer, the law says he can do it, but when he gets enough people to do it so that it amounts to something, that is called a secondary boycott, and he can not do it. So that it seems to me that in that respect also labor has very much to complain of, and unless there is something done to correct the decisions of the Supreme Court in the two cases that I have mentioned, they may become the Dred Scott decisions of the labor movement.

Chairman WALSH. Well, under the present form of our law and the constitution of our courts, what can be done, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. Of course they can do the same thing that they did in the Legal Tender cases, change the personnel of the courts and change the decisions; the same things that they did in the Income Tax cases; and which occurred, according to my opinion, in the cases of the Standard Oil and the Tobacco cases. If that can not be done, they can pass a constitutional amendment.

Chairman WALSH. Of what character?

Mr. ROE. Which would meet the situation.

Chairman WALSH. Of what character?

Mr. ROE. Well, I have not given the form that that would take any consideration, but clearly giving to a State the right to pass such a statute as this statute of Kansas was.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Prohibiting the blacklisting of union men?

Mr. ROE. Yes; and prohibiting their discharge because they did belong to a union.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Would you consider, as a remote possibility, that in the event there were no remedial methods introduced, the same spirit might grow up that grew up after the decision that you just referred to—the Dred Scott decision?

Mr. ROE. It does not seem to me improbable that that is likely to follow. I say that very reluctantly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I would naturally suppose that any man who felt the gravity of the situation would say it reluctantly.

Mr. ROE. In answer to the original question in regard to equality of men before the law under certain conditions you rather divided your answer into two: One in regard to general litigation, and the other was in regard to labor questions.

Mr. ROE. Yes; I intended to, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes; your attitude is that in labor cases, if resort is had to the English common law for a decision, that from the very fact that the English common law—the decisions which constitute it—were evolved at a time when the rights of laboring men were—I won't say ignored—but simply considered as not existing—would that in itself prejudice his case?

Mr. ROE. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROE. And it would not make any difference in that respect if the laboring man who brought his action for damages was worth a million dollars or ten millions, if he was injured in his employment and sued his employer for it, so long as he was subject to the fellow servant and assumed risk and contributory negligence propositions of the law, he would be unfairly dealt with just the same.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That would be a foregone conclusion because the decisions or the processes under which the adjudications would be arrived at were originally framed when the man whose property rights might be assailed was absolutely in control of all the means of adjudication?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. Well, while you are on that topic, Mr. Roe, if a constitutional provision such as that in West Virginia protecting the right of habeas corpus can be abrogated by the executive and military authorities, what would be the weight of such a constitutional provision protecting the men in their right to organize?

Mr. ROE. No one can say what its weight would be, of course. It is fair to say that in the West Virginia case there was a very strong dissenting opinion, and it was the law of that opinion that Judge Cullen concurred in in his expressions to-day. It is also fair to say that there have been strong dissents from the Supreme Court of the United States in these various cases where statutes have been destroyed that it seems to me ought not to have been destroyed.

Now, if the minority of the court in West Virginia—if their opinion had been the opinion that made the law of the case, it would have been all right. If the minority in many of the decisions which our courts have rendered had happened to be in the majority—in other words, if the personnel of the court had happened to be different, we would not find ourselves in the unfortunate position that we are in. Now, that, it seems to me, points one way out. There ought to be some changes in the personnel of the judges; and without those changes I think that public sentiment can exercise a powerful influence. For instance, about 15 years the Court of Appeals of the State of New York held that a law limiting the hours of night work for women in factories was unconstitutional in that it invaded the woman's divine right to work all night. Within the past year that court has rendered a decision which virtually overturns that former decision. If public sentiment has not changed, the court at least has found out more about what public sentiment is and is trying in some measure to follow it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Was that decision along the line that the right of the community was paramount to the right of the individual?

10474 . REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; it contains that line of reasoning.

Chairman WALSH. At this point, Mr. Roe, we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock. Would you kindly resume the stand at 2 o'clock? There are some further questions to put to you.

(Whereupon, at 12.25 p. m. Monday, May 10, 1915, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Roe, there were some questions submitted to you to which I understand you have made some answers in your own way. Would you like me to read them to you again, or can you present them your categorical answers?

Mr. ROE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have covered the main points of what I have prepared perhaps in briefer form than I have prepared it. There is one or two things that have occurred to me during the intermission which I might add in way of amplification of answers to questions that have already been asked me.

Chairman WALSH. We would be glad to have it.

Mr. ROE. Something has been said about the cost and delay in litigation. Now, I don't wish anything that I say about that to be taken or understood as a defense of the delay in litigation or the cost in litigation. I think there are grave abuses, but I think they are abuses that can be corrected. I think it is not safe to put too much emphasis upon that feature. Bar associations, lawyers, and courts are very ready to discuss and emphasize the delay in litigation and the cost of litigation. Codes are constantly being put forth and promulgated that have for their purposes the correction of these abuses, and they can be corrected, and in a number of States they have been corrected. In New York, which was formerly one of the worst States in that respect, there has been a great advance in the way of bringing cases to a more speedy termination and of cheapening litigation, and I think it is a mistake to put too much emphasis upon that feature of it. That is the obvious feature. I think the complaint lies deeper than that, than the mere form of procedure. It is substantive law itself of which I think labor justly complains. No amount of tinkering with the codes is going to correct that real evil.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Can not the rule of practice in the Federal courts—is that not a discretionary power of all the supreme court justices without legislation, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. Very largely. On the law side of the Federal courts it follows the State practices of the State in which the Federal court happens to be held.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Is that law or custom?

Mr. ROE. Really, sir, that is simply a thing I have always learned was so; I think it is statutory.

Chairman WALSH. There is a statute on the subject that has been analyzed and defined and interpreted that says—I think that the language is that they shall follow the practice and procedure in the State as nearly as may be, or something like that. That has been passed on many times.

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir. I think the statute was probably declaratory of a custom. Of course, on the equity side they don't follow the State practice, and the court is free to make its own rules.

You asked me this morning with regard to the manner in which the courts were derelict in their protection of the fundamental personal rights of free speech, free assemblage, and free press. I answered that, I think, only briefly. If I am to amplify upon any statement, I would say there are three particulars in which I think courts have failed of their duties in respect to those fundamental rights. In the first place, so far as I am aware, the courts have upheld and enforced every statute that has been passed on the abridgment of those rights. Now, whether the courts are going into the business of passing upon the validity of statutes at all or not is another question; but if they are going to declare statutes unconstitutional that relate to property when they are in conflict with the Constitution, it would seem that they ought to apply the same principle to statutes which invade personal rights; and, so far as I am aware, no statute limiting freedom of speech, freedom of assemblage, free press, or the right to bear arms has ever been declared unconstitutional by the courts as an invasion of a personal right. I call attention in this connection to a statute which I am familiar with, because I lately, and unsuccessfully, argued the case in the Supreme Court here. The State of Washington, which, by the way, is a progressive State in a good many matters, passed this statute:

"Every person who shall willfully publish written or printed matter having a tendency to encourage or incite the commission of any crime, breach of the peace, or act of violence, or which shall tend to encourage or advocate disrespect for law or of any court, shall be guilty of a gross misdemeanor."

A man named Fox was convicted in the State of Washington for a very mild publication, in which he criticized the conduct of some people who had made complaint to the court on account of certain petty offenses, and was convicted, and he criticized that conduct as being hostile to the best interests of the neighborhood. The article was a very innocuous article, but he was convicted of the charge of publishing matter tending to create disrespect for the law, and the case was carried through all of the courts of the State of Washington and finally was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion handed down only a few weeks ago upheld the constitutionality of that statute. Now, we argued that the statute was so indefinite that it did not constitute due process of law. No one could tell what might be said to advocate disrespect for law, and we pointed out that again and again where statutes had been less open to the vice of indefiniteness than this one had been set aside by the courts because they did not afford due process of law, and yet the court held that for the purpose of depriving a man of the right to express his conviction the statute was sufficiently definite. For instance, it has been held that a statute which says that unjust and unreasonable compensation shall not be required or exacted is so indefinite that the courts won't enforce it.

A State statute which had relation to railroads provided that they should not be guilty of unjust and unreasonable discrimination, was set aside on the ground that it did not constitute due process of law.

And there are many decisions along that line. There are a great many State statutes, of which the one I have just quoted is a type. The thought is and a study of the cases shows very clearly, I think, that the courts are not applying the same rule when they deal with statutes of that kind as they apply to statutes that deal with property.

Another class of cases with which the public is very familiar are those where injunctions are issued to prevent gatherings that are supposed to have unlawful purposes as their object. There is a recent case of that kind which illustrates the principle which arose from the State of Pennsylvania, in the State court there. In that case it was advertised that a meeting would be held at which Emma Goldman was to speak. The police, without knowing anything about what was to be said, locked the doors and dispersed the crowd that was to attend the meeting, and she applied to the court for relief, and here is the rule that the court lays down in denying her relief:

"If such public officers (that means policemen) should attempt to interfere in such case—that is, where they believe that the sentiments which are to be expressed might create disorder—their interference would be justified by the knowledge that dangerous and disturbing sentiments tending to disturb the peace would be uttered. That the utterance of such views in the community would be likely to incite such feelings as would result in a breach of the peace is by no means unlikely. (Referring to the views which the court knew nothing about, except as a mind reader.) It is not unreasonable to hold that such speech is an abuse of the liberty to speak freely on any subject. It is a familiar principle of equity that plaintiffs can not ask relief if they do not come into court with hands that are clean. We can not avoid reaching the conclusion that one who openly and in advance announces the purpose of advocating such doctrines and sentiments as the plaintiff avows is not within the class that can claim protection and relief from a court of equity."

The effect of that decision and decisions of that kind is to make the police department the censor in advance of what is to be said, and whether what is to be said is the proper thing to be said in the community, and, of course, it is utterly subversive of free assemblage and free speech.

It has always been supposed, until very recent years, that it was sufficient, at least, to decide as unlawful whatever was said that was unlawful after it was said, but in this line of cases they justify the police in going farther than that, and virtually saying whether a lecturer, whose sentiments they understand are such as may create disorder, shall be heard or not.

Now, then, a still further and perhaps a more common class of cases is illustrated by what occurred in New Jersey at the time of the Paterson strike. I speak of these particular illustrations because I was connected in some capacity with them and know the facts at first hand. During the strike there were over 300 strikers arrested and put in jail, and they were held in prison for periods varying from a few days to several months, and part of them were convicted, and no offense at all had been committed. Now, the reason I am able to say that is, that in two of the cases where the defendants happened to have a little money and were able to get their cases into the higher courts, writs of habeas corpus were sued out and the cases were taken to the Supreme Court, and in both instances the court held that there had been no violation of the law at all, and the defendants were discharged; yet, on precisely that state of facts, hundreds of men had been deprived of their liberty for days and weeks and months until the backbone of the strike was pretty effectively broken.

Now, I think an incident of that kind does incalculable harm. Nothing can ever convince those people in there that they can trust the courts.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There is ground for the statement freely made in such cases that the court itself is used as a strike-breaking agency.

Mr. ROE. Yes; that is just what it does. And no one can estimate the harm that that does.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The decision that has just been cited before that, Mr. Roe, the Pennsylvania case, of Emma Goldman—

Mr. ROE (interrupting). Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON (continuing). Were not all the elements present in that case of the invasion of the right of the individual and an arrogation to himself to decide what would be seditious language that were present in the proceedings in the old Star Chamber?

Mr. ROE. Yes; I don't think there is any practical difference.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There the Crown arrogated to itself the right to pass upon the guilt, under any statute it might find, of any individual whom it might desire to suppress.

Mr. ROE. Yes. Here the police—the chief of police—does it instead of the Crown.

A good illustration—I don't want to weary the commission, but a good illustration of what I said this morning about our harking back to the old law is found in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Robinson case—the case of Robinson against Baldwin, decided in 1896 and referred to only last year again as being good law. That rose in connection with the seaman's case. You know our courts have always held that a seaman is not protected by the constitutional guaranties against slavery; that he could be held in slavery; and the history of how that came about is set out in this case. The common practice, if a seaman escapes from his vessel—indeed, the practice provided by statute—was to have him arrested by a justice of the peace or any other officer, and hold him until the time the ship sailed, and he was put back on board, and he went on the voyage. He had no right to a writ of habeas corpus or any other means to test the validity of his detention. And that continued true until the passage of the seaman's bill this last winter. And here is the way the court arrives at that conclusion. This is the case of Robinson against Baldwin, which the Supreme Court decided in 1896. It says [reading]:

“Returning now to the country from which we have almost immediately inherited our maritime laws and customs, we find Malynes, the earliest English writer upon the law merchant, who wrote in 1622, says that ‘Marines in a strange port should not leave the ship without the master's license, or without fastening her with four ropes.’”

You can see how really applicable these ideas are to the present steamship.

“Or else the loss falls upon them. In a strange country the one-half of the company, at least, ought to remain on shipboard; the rest, who go on land, should keep sobriety and abstain from suspected places, or else should be punished in body and purse, like as he who absents himself when the ship is ready to sail. Yea, if he give out himself worthier than his calling he shall lose his hire, half to the admiral, the other half to the master.”

Then the opinion says:

“Molloy, one of the most satisfactory of early English writers upon the subject, states that if seamen depart from a ship without leave or license from the master, and any disaster arise, they must answer,” quoting the opinion again. “There appears to have been no legislation directly upon the subject until 1729, when act 2, George III, was enacted for the better regulation and government of seamen in the merchant service. This act not only provided for forfeiture of wages in case of desertion but for the apprehension of the seamen deserting or absenting themselves, upon warrants to be issued by a justice of the peace.”

So we go back to 1622 to get our law upon that subject, and we do precisely the same thing and go back to about the same period to get our law upon the subject of labor generally.

Chairman WALSH. A great deal of the trouble, so far as the law is concerned, seems to come from the exercise of alleged rights of picketing, as they call it; that is, the employees on a strike soliciting others not to take their places or attempting to argue others who have taken their places into joining the union. Have you given some attention to that, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. Why, I have had something to do with those cases; yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Just address yourself, if you will, to the legal aspects of picketing and the legal methods, if any, you would suggest for the regulation thereof.

Mr. ROE. Of course, ordinarily a strike will amount to nothing unless the strikers can picket. There is no use of quitting their jobs and walking out if somebody else can be immediately put in their places. Now, I think that courts pretty generally say that peaceful picketing is lawful. Some courts say it is not, but the New York court holds, for instance, that peaceful picketing is lawful. But, of course, as a matter of fact, there can not be any such thing as peaceful picketing if the employer against whom the strike is directed does not desire that it shall be peaceful. Any detective or any employee can immediately start trouble and somebody strikes a blow, and forthwith the police are on hand and the strikers are carted off. They have very good illustrations of that in New York in some of the garment strikes there, where the girls went on strike and some of the wealthy women of New York took part in picketing and were arrested for disorderly conduct and for obstructing the officers in the discharge of their duties, resulting in a good deal of confusion for the officers and some for the court when the identity of the parties was disclosed in court. Now, I don't know what you can do about that except to try and be fair in the efforts to preserve order. But I think the complaint of labor, so far as manifested in the New York cases I speak of, has been fully justified; that the police force was so manipulated that it became an instrument in the hands of the employers and a means of breaking the strikes. For instance, they testified again and again, as I heard the testimony—pickets testified that they were simply trying to talk to the strike breakers and telling them there was a strike on and what the circumstances were, and that they would be assaulted, and immediately a policeman would come in and they would be carted off to the police station and the other side not disturbed. That is a social and economic condition that really is not primarily the concern of the courts. All that an ideal court could do when the parties were brought before it would be to try to find out what the truth was and act accordingly.

Chairman WALSH. Hasn't that been a leading subject of injunctive oppression?

Mr. ROE. Yes. That has been one of the injunctive powers I think of which complaint has been made.

Chairman WALSH. Does it or does it not involve ordinarily in practice the right of free speech and public assemblage?

Mr. ROE. The issuing of injunctions in those cases; yes.

Chairman WALSH. No; the picketing itself. Does it not involve the right of free speech? Don't those questions present themselves in practically every case where the right is claimed to speak to their fellow men on any subject they please and present persuasive arguments to them, if possible, and the contrary?

Mr. ROE. Yes; that phase of the question is always involved, or usually involved. I distinguish in the free-speech contest between the right to go out and use the street for a public meeting and the right you have when you hire a hall and say what you please in it. Of course, the street is primarily for the purposes of travel and not for the purpose of speaking; but when you go into a hall, however, and people go there for the purpose of listening, I can not conceive of any limits upon the right of free speech.

So that in cases of picketing, where they desire to use the streets or public places for the purposes of public addresses, I have always been very careful, where I have had occasion to advise strikers, to advise them to comply with all the local regulations with regard to permit, if a permit is required for a public meeting, and to meet in the place designated for that purpose, so as not to confuse the issue of free speech with these other side issues.

Chairman WALSH. I call your attention to the subject of boycotts. Have you given some thought to that or had to do with it in a professional way?

Mr. ROE. I have given some thought to it and had a little to do with it.

Chairman WALSH. Generally and broadly speaking, to what extent are boycotts legal in the United States to-day? Or is that too broad a question?

Mr. ROE. There are several large volumes written upon that subject, you know, in which the authors attempt to answer that question and set forth to state what the law is.

Chairman WALSH. That is the reason I am asking you for the practical knowledge of the legal profession.

Mr. ROE. I would distinguish between boycotts and some other forms of combination. Now, boycotts, strictly and properly speaking, relate to labor disputes. It is the effort, generally speaking, of the laborer to get the public, or to get some portion of the public, to refuse their patronage to someone with whom the labor dispute exists. Now, secondary boycott, what are called secondary boycotts, I think, are almost universally declared unlawful. By a boycott I mean the efforts on the part of the laborer to get a large portion of the public to refuse its patronage or refuse to trade with some firm or particular concern. The courts, of course, say that the laborer himself need not trade, if he does not want to, with a particular person, but when it goes beyond that the court uniformly says when you go outside of that and try to get someone else to refuse to trade with a person being boycotted, that is a secondary boycott and is illegal.

Chairman WALSH. In what respect do you think that the law governing boycotts should be modified, if you have any suggestion upon that subject?

Mr. ROE. It seems to me that there are two possible courses to pursue. At the present time the law is not taking either one of them. One is to prohibit boycotting and blacklisting and enforce the statute laws, such as the Kansas statutes that I spoke of this forenoon, and whenever new devices are devised to accomplish the same result and follow them up and destroy them. Be absolutely impartial in the application of those laws, no matter whether it involves capital or labor. I would not want to be the person to frame the law to accomplish that, but I think they have done that pretty well in England, and I think that possibly it could be done here. Now, that is one course. The other course to take is to repeal the laws or change the laws relating to a boycott and blacklist, put labor and capital on equal terms, let capital blacklist and labor boycott and fight it out.

Chairman WALSH. Which of the two, in your opinion, would be the most desirable socially?

Mr. ROE. I would try to do the former first.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What is that?

Mr. ROE. Put capital and labor on an equality before the law and limit the right or destroy the right to boycott as well as blacklist.

Chairman WALSH. You heard the discussion here this morning by Judge Cullen?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Just a moment before you enter that. What would be the equal opportunity of the two cases? That is, a boycott is publicly and a blacklist you do not do it publicly? It is almost impossible to detect the second with equal opportunity.

Mr. ROE. That is very true. It would be much more easy to convict labor than capital.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You would still be in the same position of inequality before the law, speaking as labor?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; that is true.

And you would have to have means of discovering the violation on the part of capital. You would have to have arbitrary rights to examine books and records. Of course, blacklist is now carried on publicly, for that matter. The courts hold that an employer has a right to discharge a man for any reason or no reason, and if he is discharged for any reason he can publish the reason why he is discharged. If that was rendered unlawful then it would result in secret methods to accomplish the same purpose, but it would be a test of whether the law was capable of ferreting out their methods and gaining convictions. I would have trial by jury. I would not have this injunction business whereby it would put somebody in contempt and then have the question of the guilt or innocence passed upon by the judge instead of a jury. The question is still one of criminal law to be settled by a jury.

Chairman WALSH. We have found a great deal of criticism of the methods of obtaining juries as we go about through the country. For instance, in one of the jurisdictions you would find that there is a property qualification against each and every request produced, and is being made by some people, practically those that have been in industrial disputes, on the worker's side. We have found communities in which they had an apparently impartial manner of selecting juries—that is, by putting a certain number in the wheel or box—and in some communities we found that the number is quite limited, so that it becomes a jury list which is composed of those persons in the community that are personally known to the jury commissioner or to the judge that selects them. What do you say as to the right of trial by jury in this modern day, meaning the right of trial by jurors drawn from a list of all qualified jurors, simply so far as citizenship and intelligence is concerned? I mean by that, ability to read and write and understand proceedings ordinarily had in courts of justice?

Mr. ROE. I would say that it clearly ought to mean that. I never have given that subject any particular study. Of course, the question of drawing is a question—a local question.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a local question?

Mr. ROE. For each State, I mean. I never have heard any particular complaint about juries in New York State. Indeed, I think the jurors are very fair there. You speak of property qualifications. We have this archaic condition of the law, which is more humorous than anything else: A juror must still, in New York, be a property owner, at least in a small amount, one hundred or two hundred dollars, or else he must be the husband of a woman who has property, which is a matter that has occasioned some amusement in the suffrage campaign which they are conducting at the present time there.

Chairman WALSH. Have you ever considered what might be called the fundamental nature of the question of a jury—whether justice can be democratically administered and men can obtain a fair trial by juries composed of their peers unless all persons are put in the jury wheel?

Mr. ROE. I can not conceive of any other way of doing it and avoiding great abuse. If the power rests anywhere to leave out certain names or certain elements of the population, I can not see how you can hope to escape very great abuse in the selection of your juries.

Chairman WALSH. Have you observed the report in Colorado where those criminal trials grew out of the industrial dispute, where the sheriff selected an open jury—that is, picked them up on the street—composed of citizens that he selected himself? Would you call that the right of trial by jury?

Mr. ROE. Oh, yes.

Chairman WALSH. That is, to be tried by a jury so selected?

Mr. ROE. Oh, no; it is a farce.

Chairman WALSH. It means that the jury shall be impartially and democratically selected in the community?

Mr. ROE. Of people that are qualified to serve upon a jury.

Chairman WALSH. We have found a great deal of unrest caused by the importation of armed men into the various States—guards and the like of that—into industrial disputes. Have you given any thought as to the question of placing the sole power of policing into the hands of the State?

Mr. ROE. I have not given any special consideration to that. I have read the reports of what have occurred in West Virginia and examined some of the original sources of information there, but I don't feel that I am qualified to express an opinion that is sufficiently matured to be of any practical value to the commission.

Chairman WALSH. Have you considered in any way the topic discussed by Judge Cullen this morning; that is, the declaration of military law or the putting in force of what might be called military law and the subordination of the civil by the military power in times of industrial disturbance?

Mr. ROE. I gave some time to it in West Virginia, because I had some litigation that involved that, and I concur with what Judge Cullen said, as I understood him. It seems to me that the doctrine announced by the majority of the courts in West Virginia, and I have examined them—and I think it is the doctrine in Colorado, but I am not sure of that—disregard the old law that all of us learned as lawyers, that martial law did not create a condition, it recognized a condition as existing; that when the courts had broken down or had fled the country, or were inaccessible, as a matter of fact, and when the civil process, as a matter of fact, no longer existed, then the governor or the executive authority, in recognition of the existence of those facts, would declare a state of martial law. And then the militia, or the soldiers, would preserve order and make arrests as far as may be and use such force as was necessary, and when the civil authority was restored would bring before it for trial the persons arrested. Now, in West Virginia they seemed to go on the theory down there that the governor by an edict, by a piece of paper, declared that a state of martial law existed, and then, while the criminal courts of the county were open, ready to transact business, men were taken before the military commission and sentenced to years of imprisonment for offenses that in the civil courts would only mean imprisonment for a few days. They went further than that. There were three stages there of the trouble. Three times martial law was declared and revoked and the troops withdrawn, and they held that for offenses committed between those times the military commission, when it was reconvened, would obtain jurisdiction and go on and mete out punishment for those offenses. That condition wholly destroyed the idea of constitutional liberty; and if that is to be recognized as the law in other States, they are bound to become despotisms.

Chairman WALSH. What would be your remedy for conditions of that sort?

Mr. ROE. My remedy for conditions of that sort, like all other conditions, I would say would be an appeal to the people. I don't believe very much in the made-to-order remedies in the form of law. We can do something in that way, but that sort of a condition ought to have aroused a sentiment in that State that would have been revolutionary in its character, and unless that sort of sentiment can be aroused there or in any State, I don't know that there is any protection you can give the people.

Chairman WALSH. Ought the Federal Government to take any cognizance of it? You say it is an invasion of the constitutional rights of the individual should the Federal Government take any action in such cases.

Mr. ROE. The West Virginia cases did not get into the Supreme Court of the United States. I think they pardoned the men, or did something, so that the cases never got up there, and if that action involves violations of the provisions of the Federal Constitution, I would say that it was a case where the Federal court should intervene. I am not anxious, though, to extend the authority of the Federal courts in State matters more than it is necessary to do.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson has some questions on a point he desires to ask you.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Roe, the legal adviser of the adjutant general of Colorado testified before this commission that martial law was never proclaimed in Colorado; that under a decision of the Supreme Court of Colorado it was claimed that the mere presence of the troops in itself superseded the civil process. He referred to this as modified martial law. Mr. Chairman, I am using the phrase that was used in that instance, am I not?

Chairman WALSH. I think that is what they called it.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Have you any decided view on the creation of such a condition—the legal condition?

Mr. ROE. I have a very decided view, which I think, perhaps, would not be fit for the record. Of course, it is absurd as a proposition of law. It does not make any difference who testified to it or what court decided it; it is contrary to the fundamental and most elementary principles of law in this country.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I will say that that legal adviser was also in command of the militia in the field.

Mr. ROE. Yes; perhaps he was testifying in his capacity as commander of the militia and not as an officer of the court.

Commissioner GARRETSON. He testified in many capacities; he investigated himself as a militia officer, also.

It was testified before this commission by a man who is presumably a reputable citizen, bearing in mind having no connection with labor, but as a professional man, that during the time the militia was in the field, and when it was assumed that martial law of a modified form was created by their presence, that in, I think, three of the southern counties, that the adjutant general himself threatened arrest in the city of Denver for remonstrating against certain things under his police power. Could you hold that such a thing was compatible with the existence of civil government?

Mr. ROE. No, sir; not at all; it is not.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock wishes to ask some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you connected with the Free Speech League?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In what capacity?

Mr. ROE. I am just a member.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you been employed in labor troubles professionally?

Mr. ROE. Very little; I have contributed my services sometimes in a small way as a matter of citizenship rather than as a matter of attorney and client.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. By whom have you been employed?

Mr. ROE. I have been employed by the strikers in some matters in New York, and I have had connection with the litigation that has grown out of the strikes in New Jersey.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you been employed at times by the employers involved in strikes, also?

Mr. ROE. I think not; my recollection is that some of the employers who have been involved in strikes have been my clients, but that I did not represent them in any strike litigation, as it comes to my mind now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You said a little while ago in regard to labor troubles in West Virginia that troubles of that character and the attitude of the courts in cases of that kind ought to bring a revolution on the part of the people—that is, they should change their system somewhat.

Mr. ROE. No; I said it ought to create a revolutionary sentiment on the part of the people.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let us assume it did create a revolutionary sentiment on the part of the people, and the people felt dissatisfied with the existing system, and they wanted to remedy it; if their dissatisfaction was justified what remedy would you suggest?

Mr. ROE. At the first opportunity I would turn out of office all of the public officers who have been guilty of the conduct I have described and elect successors who I believed were in sympathy with correct principles.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What legislation would you enact to prevent their successors from repeating the same methods?

Mr. ROE. Well, in the case of West Virginia, I am frank to say that, having read the constitution of the State and the decision of the court in that case, that I can not frame—I doubt if I could frame a clearer expression than you will find in the constitution of that State forbidding just what the authorities did there.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In your opinion the authorities defied the constitution?

Mr. ROE. It seems that way very clearly to me; and I am reinforced in that conviction because of the dissenting opinion of the court in that case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Can you, for the information of this commission, Mr. Roe, briefly point out how in accordance with your point of view the constitution was ignored or defied in that case by the court?

Mr. ROE. In the first place, I have the decisions in that case with me, and I will file those with your honors, if you desire.

I can say briefly, as I remember the case—I have not read it to refresh my memory for this testimony, because I did not know this was coming up in my examination, but, I think, in the first place they have a provision in the West Virginia constitution that the right of the writs of habeas corpus shall not be suspended. In a good many constitutions the provision is that it shall not be suspended except in case of public necessity, but there is some qualification about it. My recollection is very clear that the constitution of West Virginia went further than most constitutions in that respect; it also declared that the civil authorities should always be superior to any military authority, and there was a third provision along the same line which I would not like to attempt to give even the substance of from memory, as it is a matter of record in those cases; but the impression that you get from reading those cases, coupled with your other knowledge of the law, is that the constitution of West Virginia went further than that of most States in forbidding the very acts of which the public officers proved themselves guilty.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As a citizen of West Virginia, if you had been a victim of that maladministration of justice, would you have no redress or recourse?

Mr. ROE. I do not know what redress you would have. Now, the majority opinion, as I recall, raised and discussed, sir, that very question, and said, as it seemed to me at the time in a rather hollow way, that they were not passing on the right of the person who is the victim of the military process to get redress subsequently but all they were passing upon was the right of the military commission to proceed. But I do not know what redress a citizen of West Virginia could have. They were taken before a military commission; they were tried without regard to any rules of evidence; they were then taken to the prison and confined there, all as a matter of force, and the writ of habeas corpus was denied them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Would you have no redress, as a citizen of West Virginia, under those circumstances to the Federal authorities?

Mr. ROE. Now, I should think you would, but, as I say, I do not know of any case; no case came up from West Virginia in which that was involved. I think the Milligan case which Judge Cullen spoke of here this morning was a case that rose, I think, from the State of Indiana, and in that case the Supreme Court did grant relief.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is the Federal Supreme Court?

Mr. ROE. Yes. So I should think that would be a precedent probably for the Federal Supreme Court.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. A little while ago we were discussing the matter of free speech. May I ask at what point, in your opinion, does public speech cease to be lawful and begin to be seditious and lawbreaking in character? Where would you draw the line?

Mr. ROE. Personally I would not draw a line short of the point where some overt act results from the abuse of free speech.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean, if a man got up in a public place and denounced the Government and the authorities and charged them with all sorts of crimes and misdemeanors you would treat it with contempt unless some unlawful act followed, in which event you would hold them responsible?

Mr. ROE. Yes; I would ignore it. I think that is the right way, in principle; and I think that in practice it is the best way to get along. It is substantially what I understand the English system is—that you can go out in Hyde Park and talk your head off, if you choose, and nothing comes of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I thought so, too, Mr. Roe, until not long ago I was in London, in Hyde Park, on a Sunday afternoon, and there were groups of Socialists and suffragettes and others that were holding meetings, and I found myself in conversation that a policeman standing near by, and I said to him, "I heard an Englishman state in my State of California publicly that he was in Hyde Park and he heard some of the socialistic, and perhaps anarchistic, speakers denouncing Queen Victoria in most shameful terms, and that a policeman stood near by and did not pay any attention to it." I said, "Is that so?" And he said, "The next time you see that man present him with my compliments and tell him that he is an infernal liar; and if any of those people around here resort to that sort of thing they would immediately be put under arrest. I am here for that very purpose, and draw the line and enforce it and keep them within reasonable bounds." And I am frank to confess that that statement on the part of that policeman corrected an erroneous notion of mine.

Mr. ROE. I have told you my position theoretically and as a matter of principle, and the question will probably have to be settled that way before it is finally settled; but there is a very big practical question here, and that is the question that it seems to me we are all of us interested in, and that is this utterly arbitrary and unwarranted, inexcusable interference with free speech by the police and by the courts by their injunctive processes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think there are two possible evils, I take it, Mr. Roe; one evil is to have men get up and make reckless statements that incite others to action in violation of law, on the one hand, and the other evil is the authorities becoming despotic and preventing free speech where free speech ought to be allowed; and I take it, further, that of the two evils you would regard the one of permitting men absolute free speech and holding them responsible for the result of such speech is the lesser of the two evils?

Mr. ROE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And the wiser one for the authorities to follow?

Mr. ROE. I think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were present this morning, were you not, when Judge Clark gave his testimony, Mr. Roe?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You probably recall that he expressed the opinion as near as I can phrase it briefly, that if a group of manufacturers or employers or merchants were to boycott a dealer, for example, by refusing to sell him goods because he had cut prices that he would regard that as a violation of the Sherman law and an unlawful act that ought to be punished; but that if a group of laboring men—a laboring union, for example—boycotted a fellow worker because he had cut the price of labor that that, in his judgment, would not be in violation of the Sherman antitrust law and ought not to be regarded as unlawful. In how far do you concur with the judge in his views on that point?—that is, he made the clear distinction between wares on the one hand and labor on the other.

Mr. ROE. I think his distinction is well taken. I am not sure that the first point that you describe there is properly a boycott at all; it is a business combination.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In restraint of trade?

Mr. ROE. Yes; in restraint of trade—dealing with trade and commodities—and I should hardly refer to that as a boycott.

Now, the matter of laborers boycotting a fellow laborer is not a matter of very vital—that is not a thing that occurs very often.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why, yes; it occurs very often in the matter of the closed shop; I am a carpenter, for example, and am willing to work for $3.50 a day; whereas the union wage may be $4 or $5 a day. Now, because I am not willing to join the union and demand $4 or $5 a day the union does all it can to prevent me from getting work.

Mr. ROE. You and I are using the term "boycott" in a little different sense, Mr. Weinstock. I used the term "boycott" perhaps in the restricted and perhaps a technical sense, to mean simply trying to get some one else to withdraw their patronage or to cease to have trade relations with the person against whom the boycott is directed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, isn't it as clear a case of boycott as you can possibly think of? Here, for example, are the building trades of a community. They establish certain wages, certain hours, and certain conditions; and you and I may be outside of the union—may, for some reason best known to ourselves, decline to join the union. They substantially give notice—may not do it in so many words, using my name or yours, but substantially gives notice to every contractor, "You must not employ Roe or you must not employ Weinstock, because they do not belong to our union. They are scabs; nonunion men. And if you do employ them you must take the consequences, and they will be the worst consequences we can inflict upon you." Then, are not you and I being boycotted by our fellow workmen because we do not think and do as they do?

Mr. ROE. Well, you can characterize that as a boycott, but—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). We are blacklisted, aren't we?

Mr. ROE. I don't see the situation gains anything in clearness by calling it any particular name. It is not strictly a blacklist, as that term is used, or strictly a boycott, as that term has grown up and has been used in the law, and as those terms are used in the law. It is a situation as you have described it. Now, I should say that labor is justified in taking that position, and it is necessary, it seems to me, for labor to have that power, to notify the employer that, for instance, if nonunion men are employed, the union men will not work. That is what it comes to.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think I understood you to say a while ago, Mr. Roe, that you believed in equality before the law of both capital and labor; that one ought not to be given any advantage in law over the other; that both be treated exactly alike?

Mr. ROE. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, wherein lies the difference between a group of laboring men trying to prevent a fellow laborer from getting employment because he cuts the price of labor and is willing to work for less than they are willing to work for—wherein lies the difference between that circumstance and the circumstance of a group of merchants or a group of manufacturers preventing a fellow merchant or a fellow dealer from earning a living through his business because he wants to cut the price of his wares? The principle involved in both is precisely the same; the objective is the same; the only difference is in one case you are dealing with wares and in the other case you are dealing with labor. The end is just the same.

Mr. ROE. But does not the difference in what you are dealing in make all the difference in the world as to the principle that should be applied? Have you not answered the question, Mr. Weinstock, by saying that in one case you are dealing in wares, dealing with merchandise, dealing with trade, while in the other case you are dealing with the human equation?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if you make that distinction, if you say that when it comes to labor there shall be no equality; that what labor has to sell shall be put upon a different basis from a man's wares, why, then, there is no longer an equality. You make a distinction there. You differentiate it.

Mr. ROE. Well, no; you only do it to this extent, as I see it, that you say that the same rule that applies to the inanimate things called property shall not apply to the thing—flesh and blood—called labor; and because you say that the same rules shall not apply, I don't see that there is any discrimination there. I don't see that they can be compared.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, you do believe that anything that is in restraint of trade is unlawful under the law—the Sherman Antitrust Act punishes those who do things in restraint of trade?

Mr. ROE. I think the latest pronouncement on that is anything that is in unreasonable restraint of trade.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Very well, let us qualify it and call it unreasonable restraint. Now, if I am a leader of a labor organization, and having the power to do so, go to contractors and say, "You can employ only the kind of men that meet with our approval. If you employ nonunion men we will tie up all your works," and the employer knows I can do it and have the power to do it, and I finally do do it, am I not doing things in restraint of trade? I tie up his business and the business of all his fellow contractors.

Mr. ROE. I don't think you are doing what was intended to be "in restraint of trade" under the Sherman antitrust law. Whether you are doing a thing that should be forbidden or not, of course, is another thing.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, let me substitute sailors for builders, and by virtue of the power invested in me by my fellow sailors I tie up all the vessels in a certain port or community, and they can not carry their cargoes, to certain destinations, am I not acting in restraint of trade?

Mr. ROE. Well, again I doubt if you are acting in restraint of trade within the sense of that law; but you are, of course, impeding commerce.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, that certainly is in restraint of trade, as I understand restraint of trade.

Mr. ROE. You are preventing the vessel from sailing; you are preventing the things that would result if the vessel did sail. But, of course, the Sherman antitrust law—"restraint of trade" there used was supposed to be used in certain definite senses; but I don't think we get anywhere by merely discussing terms here. I don't get the fundamental question of the difference between right and wrong, I think, that you are suggesting exists in this contest between labor and capital; and if you will put your question so that I see exactly what you mean, I will try to answer it for you.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, there is no issue, Mr. Roe, as I see it, if, as you believe, the law plainly differentiates between wares on the one hand and labor on the other. If the law makes it plain that men can organize for the purpose of punishing the price cutters of labor and do it legally, then there is no issue. What I want to get clear in my mind and for our record is your opinion as to whether a man can do that under the law, legally, whether men can boycott—practically boycott—or whether men can prevent other men from working at a cut price and do it legally or not. If, in your opinion, they can do it legally, why, of course, there is no further discussion.

Mr. ROE. I don't think they can do it legally.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You think not?

Mr. ROE. I don't think that a strike that has for its object the prevention of the employment of nonunion men, in most of the jurisdictions, is held to be legal. It is held to be unlawful.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, what do you understand the Federal law to be?

Mr. ROE. Well, I think it is unlawful under the Federal law. I think it is unlawful under the Federal decisions. I don't think it is right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You don't think that the law is right?

Mr. ROE. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Well, that is a new point of view to me. I was under the impression that a strike was not illegal anywhere; that what became illegal was an attempt to keep other men from taking the strikers' places; and that every man either individually or collectively has a right to quit work either collectively or individually, but has no right to prevent other men from taking the jobs if other men wanted to take their places.

Mr. ROE. No; a strike—the courts declare that strikes may be unlawful for two reasons. One is the object sought to be accomplished, and the other is the method. Now, let me give you, if you please, a list of the instances in which strikes have been held to be unlawful. I will not burden you with the cases, but there are scores of cases on each of these propositions.

A strike to injure an employer is illegal——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, speaking about the Federal law, now, are you, or the State laws?

Mr. ROE. Both. That proposition is supported by a number of Federal cases and State court cases.

A sympathetic strike where the strikers do not seek direct benefits for themselves is illegal. That is the doctrine applicable particularly to Massachusetts.

A strike to interrupt interstate commerce is illegal.

A combination of railway employees to tie up interstate commerce by a strike offended the Sherman antitrust law.

A strike to compel an employer to operate a closed shop is illegal.

A strike to prevent the employment of certain workmen is illegal. That is the very point you mention.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Just read that, will you?

Mr. ROE. A strike to prevent the employment of certain workmen is illegal.

A strike to bring about the employment of union men exclusively throughout any considerable industry in any community is illegal.

A strike to prevent a railway from hauling Pullman cars is illegal.

A strike to prevent a railway from handling the cars of a connecting railroad is illegal.

A strike against a manufacturer because he does work for a fellow manufacturer who is tied up with a strike is illegal.

A strike to extort money is illegal.

Where a strike is illegal the payment of strike benefits may be enjoined.

Of course in case of an injunction issued against a strike to prevent the hauling of cars striking is illegal.

Strikes to compel an employer to give up his business relations with another employer or to cease patronizing another employer are illegal.

Now, these are specific instances in which the courts have held that strikes are illegal.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, are there not other, perhaps more numerous, instances in which the courts have held strikes were not illegal?

Mr. ROE. Well, there are many instances in which the courts have held that a strike was not illegal.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In what respect does the recently passed Clayton law affect these decisions? And is the Clayton law likely to affect future decisions along these lines?

Mr. ROE. I have not made sufficient study of that so that I want to express an opinion that I would ask you to attach great importance to. But I am afraid that the Clayton law is not going to accomplish what is expected of it. I do not want to be a prophet of ill omen. But I know the attorneys in the Payne Lumber Co. case, the attorneys for the company, felt they had discovered some things in the law in their favor which gave them rights to injunctive relief that they did not have under the Sherman antitrust law originally. But I have not studied the Clayton law sufficiently so that I care to go on record with a positive opinion about it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, briefly, your position, I take it, is that while your opinion is that a strike is illegal it ought not to be illegal?

Mr. ROE. Well, I would not quite make that general statement, sir. As I have said, some strikes are illegal and some are not. The illegal strikes are declared to be illegal, some of them, for the methods they use and some for the motives of the strike. Now, so far as the methods are concerned, I think there are doubtless methods used in strikes which ought to be condemned. So far as the motive with which the strike is declared is concerned I would not like to say that there are no instances in which a strike might not be declared illegal because of its motive, but there do not any occur to me at this time where I think it should be so declared illegal. But with all I say in regard to strikes, and all that I say in regard to this question, bear in mind I am simply speaking for equality between the two contending forces here. Now, the courts, when they talk about sympathetic strikes, it is like the secondary boycott, you know. It seems to be the reason it is condemned is because it is likely to accomplish something, whereas the direct strike, if some one is prepared immediately to take the places, or the direct boycott may not accomplish anything.

Now, then, if capital is to have the power to discharge men for any reason that it chooses, to discharge them for belonging to a labor union, to publish them to all the rest of the world and to all other employers, and to prevent that man from getting employment in his occupation anywhere else in the country, why, it seems to me, in order to meet that situation, which seems to be the right of capital to-day, you have got to untie laborers' hands and give them greater freedom than they have.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the matter of the antiinjunction movement, I want to make sure that your idea of what the antiinjunction movement means and mine concur before I put my question. As I understand it, organized labor takes the ground that the good will of a business is not property and, therefore, when organized labor, in its efforts to win out, destroys what is commonly known as good will, it is not destroying property, and that therefore, as a matter of self-protection, it asks that no injunction be granted which, if granted, would protect good will. Now, may I ask what is your professional opinion as to what constitutes property? Does good will, in your opinion, constitute property; and if you destroy the good will of my business or I destroy the good will of your business, are we destroying property?

Mr. ROE. I should say that the good will of a business was property.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It has a commercial value?

Mr. ROE. It has commercial value, undoubtedly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, if the good will of a business is property, and if the spirit of the law is that your property or mine can not be taken from us without due process of law, then what justification is there on the part of organized labor in demanding that good will shall be treated as not being property? That injunctions in labor troubles shall not be granted to disturb the good will of the business?

Mr. ROE. Do you see any objection to the saying that the good will is a species of property, but nevertheless the right to it, or the impairment, some impairment of it, may be required to give way before the greater necessity of the right of labor to organize? In other words, I don't see how we get any further by calling them by particular names. Now, ordinarily in law, we speak of the good will of a business as property, if the business is to be sold. We, as lawyers, know that sometimes good will has, and generally has a value in the sale of a business.

Commissioner LENNON. Can its transfer be guaranteed?

Mr. ROE. Of course no; oh, no. But call it what you will, if the right to it must be yielded in the face of some superior necessity, I don't see that it makes any difference whether you call it property or not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I can not reconcile your two answers. A while ago you said you regarded good will as property. If it is property, it ought to be protected. Your property or mine can not be legally taken away from us, it could not be without due process of law. Such methods of destroying the good will of a business are not in accordance with due process of law, are they, the methods employed by unions?

Mr. ROE. I don't follow your reasoning, because that would prevent strikes altogether, because any strike may injure the business or good will of the business.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There is a great big difference as I see it between my simply withdrawing my services from your employment, for example, or a group of us withdrawing our services from your employment and leaving you free to employ others in your place.

Mr. ROE. But pardon me right there, you should get my thought on the good will of the business. Do you contend that there is any constitutional provision that comes in there to protect it?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I don't see how my withdrawal from your business destroys its good will, unless I go out and prevent others from trading with you.

Mr. ROE. The principle is just the same, the strike may be under such circumstances that the strikers' places can not be taken, because of the peculiar nature of the business, and the business is destroyed or greatly impaired. The principle that you are contending for would prevent strikes in that case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then under these circumstances you would hardly say that good will was property?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; good will was property, I would say, just the same. If business was sold the day before the strike occurred it may be that the good will would bring something.

Commissioner GARRETSON. It may be property, but not marketable?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Your point is then that the kind of property that good will is, is not a kind that can not be taken away without due process of law?

Mr. ROE. No; I don't put it that way at all. But I simply say that the good will of a business, call it what you will, that is what all of us admit is held, under the Constitution and the laws, subject to the right of it being impaired or destroyed by strike. Now, that is all there is to it, and we don't get any further by calling it any particular name.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am afraid that we have gotten rather confused on the situation. On the one hand I think I understood quite clearly your statement that in your opinion good will is property?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. We start out with that as our basis, but I gathered from your later explanation that it was a different kind of property than this table or this house?

Mr. ROE. Oh, certainly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That while I could not take this kind of property away from you legally without due process of law, that according to your point of view I can not take the good will of your business away without due process of law and do it legally?

Mr. ROE. No, sir; that is not what I am saying at all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then I have not caught on.

Mr. ROE. You may hold this table, if you are a manufacturer, you may hold a piece of machinery, it is property, but you hold it subject to the right of the laborer to strike. We all of us agree on that. Now, the nature of the machinery may be such that idleness for 24 hours will greatly impair its value. Now, would you say that we are taking property without due process of law? It doesn't seem to me that due process-of-law clause in the Constitution has anything to do with that. The fact is we hold that property subject to the right of labor to strike in some cases and thereby impair or destroy its value. Call it good will or machinery or anything else.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Put it in a practical form. A certain railway company, is not the value of good will exactly like the stock of the company, subject to depreciation on account of a strike ensuing?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; both, I would say, are subject to depreciation.

Commissioner GARRETSON. For instance, take a railroad that I know, which was worth 245, after the men had been on strike for eight weeks it was only worth 187, both good will and capital stock are impaired?

Mr. ROE. You simply mean quoted at 245 in the first place?

Commissioner GARRETSON. I did use an undesirable phrase. Its market value, not intrinsic value, changed in that degree, but the intrinsic value might have gone along the circumstances you quote, where disuse would deteriorate it.

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; both might deteriorate by the strike.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are you in favor of wiping out the so-called anti-injunction labor law?

Mr. ROE. I would not take the anti-injunction law or any other one thing in the labor situation by itself and just stand it up and say I was in favor of destroying that. If I were charged with the duty of passing upon the question as to whether we would continue the injunction or modify it, I would want to have the whole situation before me, and, in other words, make the laws match up. If you are going to destroy one, then you may need to destroy another, so while I believe that the injunction has worked very badly in labor cases, and it has done very great harm, and, as far as I can see now, it would be helpful to repeal it, yet I would not single out any one particular law in the labor situation and go after that. I would try to remake the laws for the whole situation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You know, of course, that organized labor is honestly endeavoring in very many States, especially my own State, California, is endeavoring, to wipe out the anti-injunction law; it is centered on that one thing, especially on the theory that the injunction law is a great injustice to labor.

Mr. ROE. You don't mean wipe out the anti-injunction law?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; I mean the injunction law, and—

Mr. ROE (interrupting). They want to deprive the courts of the power of issuing injunctions in a labor case.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Where there is a labor dispute on. Do you think these injunction laws ought to be wiped out? Are you in sympathy with organized labor as against the injunction laws?

Mr. ROE. In a general way I am. I think the laws are very wrong and work badly, but I don't mean to say I would just wipe out those laws and do nothing else about it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What would you put in the place of the injunction law to protect the employer?

Mr. ROE. That I have not worked out. I don't know that you would need anything, and I don't know but what you would need something.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have no constructive suggestion to make as a substitute for the present injunction law?

Mr. ROE. No. And, as I say, I think you get back to one of the two courses, either to withdraw all laws that are restrictive about both, and let them fight it out, or else to see where the evil results, apply the law at that point, but as far as I have observed the operation of the injunction in labor cases, I think that the results have been bad.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Roe, I might preface by saying that some of the statements advanced by Commissioner Weinstock do not appear to me to actually express the attitude of labor in some of these instances. It is alleged by labor that in the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes that personal rights are invaded, which is never the case where injunctions are issued as between corporations, for instance, against trespasses and things of that kind. I never have seen an injunction issued as between two corporations where the corporation was restrained from holding a meeting of their executive committee, where they were restrained from publishing the facts that had to do with this alleged trespass that was about to take place; where they were restrained from hiring of halls and holdings of meetings. Now, these are trespasses, in views of labor, on the personal rights of the men. I may say this, labor does not object to the right of injunction being used to protect purely property rights if it does not invade individual personal rights. Is that statement from your experience true, that injunctions in labor disputes invade personal rights and they do not in other injunctions?

Mr. ROE. I think very fundamentally that is true. The very familiar instance of it, of course, is the destruction of the right of trial by jury. I think that is one thing that creates great dissatisfaction on the part of labor. If an injunction is issued, and the man is arrested, he is charged with violating the injunction. Now, it may be, and generally is, that the act with which he is charged is a violation of statute; he may be guilty of disorder, or assembling a crowd, or any of those things, and instead of being tried for a violation of the law he is tried for contempt or violating the injunction. It substitutes the rules of the court for the statutes of the State.

Commissioner LENNON. This matter of good will, have you ever known of a transfer of good will as property, in the ordinary sense, by deeds or otherwise?

Mr. ROE. Oh, it is a common expression in making a bill of sale, of a business, to include the term "good will."

Commissioner LENNON. And suppose a man sells a grocery store that he has had on a corner and establishes a fine business and gets $10,000 for the supposed good will, and when he gets the money in his pocket he goes out and establishes a grocery on the opposite corner, is there any redress because he carried the business with him and the man on the opposite corner has not anything?

Mr. ROE. It was a pretty poor lawyer that drew the paper for the purchase that did not provide that he should not go into business in a given locality in a given time. Now, whether the mere expression in a bill of sale that he conveys the good will for a valuable consideration would operate to give him redress against the seller who sets up in business on the other corner, I don't know. It would depend upon all the facts.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to state a case that I know of personally. A hotel sold in a city with which I am familiar, and $65,000 was added to the sale price for good will. Quite a considerable sum of money. A corporation was immediately formed and a new hotel was built, and still better, and the first one has gone out of business within two years. Is there any way of securing redress by the man that bought out the first hotel and put in $65,000 into the so-called good will?

Mr. ROE. I suspect that there is not, but I would not like to pass judgment on it without going into all of the facts. Of course, this question of good will, you understand, I accepted Mr. Weinstock's proposition squarely, because I thought I knew what he meant, and did not attempt—

Commissioner LENNON. So do I, in a general way.

Mr. ROE. And did not attempt to distinguish this question of good will from other property. I don't think the principle applies, whether you call it good will or not.

Commissioner LENNON. But it is one of those peculiar things in practice that each case depends upon its own peculiar circumstances?

Mr. ROE. That is it exactly.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you given any consideration to the matter that was asked Judge Clark this morning regarding the assumption of power by the courts to pass upon the constitutionality of laws, or whether they have such power because of legislation?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; I have given that some attention.

Commissioner LENNON. Give us your idea of that matter, please.

Mr. ROE. My idea of that is this: That the Constitutional Convention which framed the Constitution was divided, the members were, upon that question. It was known to the members of the Constitutional Convention that to put a clause into the Constitution giving the courts that specific power would have led to the defeat of the Constitution. I think that it is a matter of history which we will all agree upon, when we recall the difficulty of getting the Constitution ratified by the people, anyway. The question in a modified form was up several times in the Constitutional Convention, and the idea of giving the courts the power to pass finally upon the constitutionality of all laws, even in a modified form, when it came up in the Constitutional Convention, was rejected, and the Constitution went through silent upon that subject. Now, logically, by all interpretations of the Constitution with which I am familiar, the fact that there was nothing in the Constitution about it ought to have settled the question that the courts did not have that power, because the Federal Government and the departments of the Federal Government have such power, and such power only, as is specifically delegated to them—delegated either to the Government or the department. The branches of the Federal Government can do only that which they are specifically authorized to do, and in that respect the Federal Government differs from the State government, so when you turn to the document and fail to find in there any word giving the courts power to nullify laws, or set them aside as unconstitutional, it would seem from that final canon of interpretation that the courts did not have that power, and in Marbury versus Madison, where Chief Justice Marshall first asserted that power, it was not necessary to a determination of the case. I think he felt out public sentiment and it seemed as though it might go, and some time later that doctrine was applied.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Has there been any instance where the legislative branch has asserted preeminent right that the legislative act is not subject to a decision of the courts as to the constitutionality of it?

Mr. ROE. Have you something specific in mind?

Commissioner GARRETSON. The reconstruction period, was it ever asserted?

Mr. ROE. If you mean that there has been a contest over that question through many years, I think it is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is foregone.

Mr. ROE. Jefferson denied the power, and it was a subject of debate for many years, and it was not until the Dred Scott case—

Commissioner GARRETSON. There never was an assertion of that power prior to the days of John Marshall; that is, that was carried through successfully.

Mr. ROE. No, sir; that power was asserted. The right of the courts to exercise that power was asserted by some of the State courts, and the people resented it. In some of the States they defeated the judges who asserted it and in some they had investigations with regard to their judicial acts.

Chairman WALSH. Was there not one case in which they passed a law that expressly prohibited the Supreme Court of the United States from declaring it unconstitutional?

Commissioner GARRETSON. That was at the time of the reconstruction period.

Chairman WALSH. And the Supreme Court yielded to the demand?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir. I can not give you the details of that at this time.

Commissioner LENNON. You believe that the exercise of that power by the courts, whether State or Federal, gives justifiable cause for criticism of the courts in some instances?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir; I think it has furnished a just cause for criticizing the courts.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I want to discuss this matter of the property ownership, or right. I think I understood you to say, Mr. Roe, that you were not sure that the Clayton law was going to be as effective as its sponsors expected of it. One of the principal enunciations of the Clayton law is that a human being, not an article of commerce, or not a commodity of commerce, I don't know the exact wording, carrying out the idea that you were discussing with Commissioner Weinstock, the difference between articles of products and human bodies. Has that not been one of the principal things that they have tried to inject into this question of injunctions—that the employer had a property right in the human being, and he sought to extend not only his ownership of the property but also in as far as his ownership in the human being; that is, his employee? In some instances I think the courts have, for instance, prohibited the men from striking?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They have in injunction and other cases. Now, in the New Orleans case, where the men were punished for violation of certain laws, and it being inferred that proprietors of the establishment had, or the inference to be drawn, at least, was that he had a proprietary right in the physical make-up of the human employee. What is your idea or thought along that question? Doesn't the Clayton Act clear that up?

Mr. ROE. The language to which you refer in that act seemed to do that, and seems to have had that for its object. My suggestion with regard to the Clayton Act, as I have said before, is not based upon such careful study of the act that I would care to go on record with very positive opinions about it, but it is based in part upon the fact that I found the Payne Lumber Co. asserting injunctive rights under it that it could not claim under the original antitrust law, and also as I read the Clayton Act, in a general way, it did not seem to me that its language had the clear definiteness of thought in it that there is, for instance, in the English Trade Dispute Act. Now, for instance, the act, which you know was passed after the Taft-Vale case, section 5, subdivision 3 of it, reads as follows:

"An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment, or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person, or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labor as he wills."

There, you see, it cuts out the old notion, root and branch.

Then they go on and define trade disputes. They say:

"The expression 'trade dispute' means any dispute between employers and workmen or between workmen and workmen which is connected with the employment or nonemployment or terms of employment, or with the conditions of labor of any person; and the expression 'workmen' means all persons employed in trade or industry, whether or not in the employment of the employer with whom a trade dispute arises."

Now, as a remedial act it does not seem to me, as I have read the Clayton law, that it was as clear and positive in its terms as the English act.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Have you given thought to the question as to whether or not the employer has a property right in the human being? Whether that is part of his good will?

Mr. ROE. I never have given very much thought to that question. I should not think it would take very much thought to answer that in the negative.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But there are some that hold he has that right—some employers, for instance, that hold that they have that right. If the workman quits him, or quite a number quit him jointly, he says his business is interfered with, and that the property right he has in their productiveness has disappeared.

Mr. ROE. You mean they asserted that right in the absence of a contract?

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But, no—he would hold, and has held, and it is claimed that he has a property right in labor's power.

Mr. ROE. I would not for a minute admit a suggestion of that kind could be supported either on authority or by reasoning. I don't think you can find any support in the law books at this time for a proposition of that kind.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. It seems to be the opinion of those that were associated in the drafting of that portion of the Clayton amendment to the Sherman antitrust law. There were a great number of legal minds taken in as advisors in the amendment; and the seaman bill also.

Mr. ROE. In the seaman bill you have a different situation.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But particularly in the Clayton bill a number of supposedly best legal minds in the country were brought together, and they feel that that right of the laborer is protected. That is, labor power is not a commodity to be dealt with the same as a table or a ton of coal or a roll of butter. That it can not be put on the market and pushed around and up and down; that he himself is the sole owner of his power of production.

Mr. ROE. I had supposed that that language in there was to distinguish or to differentiate the commodity of labor from an article of commerce. We had not thought of it having been put in there because it was necessary to negative the idea that an employer had some personal right of property in the labor of his employee, in the sense that he had any right to demand that he should continue with this labor.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Well, this question of equality before the law, the impression seems to prevail that the wage earner—that applying, of course, to men, women, and children—is equally protected; he has the opportunity of quitting his work, taking his chances of securing a position elsewhere, and in doing so he is affecting not himself alone but his family. Do you think as a general proposition the question of law as an equality before the court, as an equality toward opportunity, as an equality toward defending himself against the thing Commissioner Weinstock spoke about, the man offering to take his position for 50 cents or a dollar a day less, the impossibility of successfully carrying on what is commonly known as a boycott without having the things necessary to go with it? There is no use giving a man a boycott unless he can boycott. There is no use saying to the employer you can blacklist unless he can blacklist. He is in a position to do that. The employee is not in a position to boycott unless he boycotts. If it is legal for him individually to boycott and say I want to patronize the hats of John Smith, and if it immediately becomes unlawful for him to say to his neighbor, "You must not patronize John Smith," he is making unlawful what the law says he can do. In other words, two men make unlawful what one man is lawfully entitled to do. In all these ramifications of things, where is the general equality of the wage earner compared to the men of wealth or the employer.

Mr. ROE. There is no equality, he is not on an equal footing in any respect.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Then what must the result of all that be, his opportunity, what must he do?

Mr. ROE. Of course, that is a question if I could answer——

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is nothing, there is but one thing left to do, and that is to organize.

Mr. ROE. That is the first thing he must do is to organize, but that won't fully answer the question. After he is organized there must be the question still remaining, what he is going to do with the organization, and in this question of equality before the law—this is true also—you may have the same law applying to two men in different situations and yet they may not be on an equality. For instance, suppose that you fined a man worth $1,000,000 a hundred dollars, or so many days in jail, it means nothing to him. He pays his fine and walks out. You apply exactly the same law to the workman to whom it means a term in jail probably, and out of the same law you have entirely different results. The punishment is not the same if the offense is the same. You must keep in mind the consideration in saying that the men should be on an equality before the law, not only the fact of the law but the situation of the men to whom it is applied.

Commissioner GARRETSON. For the same offense, if the laborer only possessed $10 in wealth and the employer possessed a million dollars, if they constituted the same offense relatively, would the fine of the one man of a million dollars be any greater than to fine the other man $10, provided it took all they had?

Mr. ROE. Well, it would take all that either had.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That would be equality before the law in one sense.

Mr. ROE. It would leave them naked, as far as property was concerned.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Outside of your general thought, fences ought to be taken down, and let's go at it, as it were, and out of this chaotic condition might come some thought, have you given thought to what really is underlying all this unrest and dissatisfaction, is one side dislikes the courts, badly expressed and sometimes expressed not forcibly because the person wants to use friendly language, but it is the language he is acquainted with at the time, and uses language that very probably he should not use, but he believes that he is not getting proper protection or proper treatment, if he goes to the court with a damage suit, he is tossed from court to court until he is broke, and the lawyers say they can not go on further, why they can not carry his case on and pay court fees and transcription of records and all those things, and the man feels he is outlawed. He is not only outlawed because of his case, but feels he is an outlaw; it has a tendency to make a bad man of him, and he dislikes courts, he dislikes lawyers and everybody, and he becomes a regular man hater, because he feels he is not getting justice and has not had a fair opportunity. Now, have you given thought to that as to what you might suggest to this commission as a remedy for all of this? Congress asked us when they created this commission to seek the cause of all of these things and to come back and tell them how to correct them.

Mr. ROE. Congress certainly gave you a big commission. I think that one way to cure it is just the way the commission—this commission—is doing, and that is, going about over the country and taking this testimony and giving everybody a chance to express their opinions, and permitting and requiring the two sides to get acquainted with each other and get the other's point of view. I think that is the first step toward any solution of it, and the important thing for us who are not in the labor movement to appreciate and to learn, and the thing that the work of this commission had taught us very largely is that this is not labor's question any more than it is a question for all of the rest of us; the very conditions that you have so well described in your question to me of this unrest and hatred that is being bred in a very large class of our people, puts it up to all of the rest of the people to help find a remedy and to make some concessions here in order to correct these wrongs, and I think that teaching the public is one of the most important steps you can take toward a solution.

Now, when you come to a legislative program, I am afraid I can not help you very much. I would suggest this, however, I think I suggested it this forenoon, if the dissenting opinions in labor cases which I have referred to here this afternoon, and some of the ablest opinions that have ever been written have been the dissenting opinions of the judges, and in many instances Federal judges, from the propositions that the courts have laid down denying to labor the rights which it claims. Now, I say, if those dissenting opinions had been the majority opinions the law would have been very different, and the feeling of labor would have been very different to-day, and you would have a very different question to deal with.

Now, you can change the personnel of the courts.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is simply "The King is dead, God save the King"; that is the impression the laboring man has gotten as to the general condition; his treatment of the court indicates that the judge dies—"The King is dead, God save the King."

Mr. ROE. That is not quite true; the laboring man has got to learn to be patient here as well as the rest of us. I say that with some hesitation, because labor has been patient; but I am pointing out that if we had had a different personnel on the bench we would have different laws, so far as the judicial decisions make the law; and it is not impossible to change a law which has been made.

Then, of course, in taking up a program of constructive legislation, that is a great question which I feel I am not capable of advising upon. I think the English Trade Disputes Act, which I have referred to here, may make a model in some respects, and, of course, has received, or will receive a great deal of study from your commission.

Then, of course, in recommending legislation you are confronted with this situation, that you must recommend legislation that you can get through Congress, and you can not get legislation through Congress unless you create a sentiment such as you are doing now, which will compel that legislation.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I want to ask one question.

Chairman WALSH. Very well.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Mr. Roe, under the questions asked you some little time back by another commissioner in regard to the Sherman Act, and in regard to its application to the laborer and to the manufacturer, would you not get an exact parallel between the manufacturer and the attitude of labor under that act. If you would go back to the condition that existed prior to 1860, and a man dominated the labor market in his city, through actual ownership of labor of a certain class, as he could have done then, would that not be an exact parallel? Then he could restrain trade on the labor side because he owned the labor; it was a ware then, for the man owned, say, a thousand slaves, and he could then commit an act in restraint of trade by withholding them in conjunction with others; is that not correct?

Mr. ROE. Yes; I think that is true.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There you would have an exact parallel, but the moment you ceased to consider the man as property, in that sense the parallel ceases, does it not?

Mr. ROE. Yes; I think it does.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Dred Scott was returned because he was the ware of his owner, the property of his owner. The fugitive-slave law was passed on the idea that either the slave himself or other had abstracted the property of his owner; is that not correct?

Mr. ROE. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And did not the seamen's law that has been just repealed—that is, the one that has been in existence for centuries in one country or another—was not that law and the fugitive-slave law founded on exactly the English condition which made the masterless man an outlaw and authorized him to be driven from the public highways and put in the pillory?

Mr. ROE. Yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And even made it no crime to kill him?

Mr. ROE. Yes; that is the truth. The fugitive-slave law and the seamen's law are the same in principle.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And both founded on the property idea in the man?

Mr. ROE. Yes; I think I have heard it said or read that the fugitive-slave law, as we knew it in this country, was taken from the seamen's law.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And the law is undoubtedly founded on the old act binding the man to the soil?

Mr. ROE. Yes; that reaches back centuries?

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That will be all; thank you, Mr. Roe.

At this point the commission will stand adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock.

(Whereupon the commission adjourned Monday, May 10, 1915, at 4.30 o'clock p. m., until Tuesday, May 11, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, May 11, 1915—10 a. m.

Present, Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Garretson, Weinstock, Lennon, and O'Connell.

Chairman WALSH. We will please be in order.

Now, Doctor, if you will take the stand, please.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. J. McKELWAY.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name.

Mr. McKELWAY. A. J. McKelway.

Chairman WALSH. And your residence?

Mr. McKELWAY. Washington.

Chairman WALSH. And your business, please?

Mr. McKELWAY. I am secretary for the Southern States of the National Child Labor Committee.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you occupied that position?

Mr. McKELWAY. I have been with the committee since its organization, in the fall of 1904.

Chairman WALSH. Will you be kind enough to sketch your professional career—what work you have done, what your work has been up to this time?

Mr. McKELWAY. Before being with this committee?

Chairman WALSH. Before being with this committee.

Mr. McKELWAY. I was a minister and pastor of a church in North Carolina for seven years, from 1892 to 1898—six years. I was editor of a religious paper in Charlotte, N. C., for seven years and editor of a daily paper for a year. During my life in Charlotte I took charge of a mill school at Charlotte, N. C., for a year. Since the fall of 1904 I have been secretary of the National Child Labor Committee.

Chairman WALSH. Now, as secretary of that committee of child labor, Doctor, have you made an investigation of certain industrial centers, particularly in the South?

Mr. McKELWAY. Oh, yes, yes; I have investigated a good many mills myself, and I have had agents under my immediate direction who have investigated every State in the South.

Chairman WALSH. Now, following the suggested line given you by Mr. Manley, Doctor, I wish you would go ahead and state in your own way the results of your investigation, if you will be good enough to present it to this commission. I will let you do it in your own way, following our conversation.

Mr. McKELWAY. Soon after the committee was organized, in 1904, with Mr. Lovejoy, who is now the general secretary, and then the assistant, we took a trip through New England, and went through the mills at Lowell and New Bedford and Valley Fall River; that was in the fall of 1904. I wished to look at the States that had pretty good child-labor laws and where they were well enforced by way of comparison. I had done some work in the South in my editorial work in carrying out those principles, and I had something to do with the first child-labor law in North Carolina, in 1903. By the way, Judge Clark was on the stand yesterday, and his decision in regard to a child that was hurt, that the company could not plead contributory negligence for a child under 14 years, helped to pass the first law in North Carolina, they feeling the necessity of an age limit, and they fixed it at 12.

Chairman WALSH. Is that still the law, 12?

Mr. McKELWAY. They fixed it once at 13, that they could not be employed under 13 in an apprentice capacity, but that was interpreted to mean that if the child went to work under 13 it was an apprentice.

Chairman WALSH. Did the statutes in that particular abolish the common-law rule laid down by Judge Clark that a child under 14 could not be guilty of contributory negligence?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And they passed a statute that reduced it to 13?

Mr. McKELWAY. Twelve in reality.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. McKELWAY. I found in Massachusetts at that time that the 14-year age limit was pretty rigidly observed; there were few violations that we saw, but some abuses of the law. I remember an interview with an agent of a Massachusetts mill in Lowell, in which he threw open his mills to us, and they did not employ children that seemed to be under 14; we found none that seemed to be, and I expressed my gratification at the position, and remarked to him at the time that his company owned a large mill in Lindale, Ga., where there was no such law, and I hoped the influence of his mills would be directed toward getting the same law that we had in Massachusetts. He said at once that they had a gentleman's agreement in Georgia and that worked better than the law in Massachusetts, and that he was not in favor of the same law in Georgia that they had in Massachusetts.

I investigated a good many mills in North Carolina at that time. I was by myself—we had no agents—and I remember a little mill in Charlotte, just near my home. I found only 8 per cent of the children of school age attending school, and there were several children under the legal age employed in the mills. But North Carolina is still the only State that has no factory inspection. The commissioner of labor has no authority to enter a cotton factory, and the law has been almost universally violated. There has never been any enforcement, only probably one or two prosecutions. In the first campaign that I conducted as an agent of the National Child Labor Committee in 1905 we went to the legislature. There is rather a peculiar situation in the Senate of North Carolina. As a matter of fact, I have found a great deal more difficulty in getting a bill through the senate than through the house. It is a smaller body, more easily controlled, and I think our opponents have controlled the nominations in advance, and there is no possibility of getting a majority. They have the senate committee on manufacturing, to which every manufacturer is supposed to belong and gets on that committee, and to that committee all child-labor bills are always referred. It is rather a hostile committee, made up in advance—and I mention North Carolina particularly because we have made less progress in that State than any in the South. We still have the 13 age limit, and no factory inspection and practically no enforcement of the law. The Federal Bureau of Labor that made this investigation in 1908 asserted that 75 per cent of the factories investigated in North Carolina were violating the law.

Another great abuse of children in North Carolina has been night work. There has been more night work in the mills of North Carolina than any other State. But the legislature preceding this last passed a bill making a 16-year age limit for night work, which has been the standard, to which we assented.

I have here a stenographic report of the hearing before that first committee, but I do not suppose it is worth while cumbering the record with the statement of the manufacturers' committee.

Chairman WALSH. If you could epitomize that and give a typical statement of the manufacturers—just give us what the manufacturers said.

Mr. McKELWAY. They took the general attitude that this was an unwarranted interference with their business; that nobody outside of the mills themselves had a right to interfere between a man and his help—his force; that any legislation of this sort was the beginning of labor legislation, and no end of troubles and strikes, and so forth. They always spoke about the betterment work that a few of the mills were doing, the schools they had built and the teachers employed, and the churches erected. Sometimes there would be a hospital and gymnasiums, and so forth, and those things were always put forward as showing the efforts which the mills were putting forth.

There are some 20 or more cotton mills, through which a visitor going south to investigate the cotton-mill industry is nearly always conducted, and I have become familiar enough with the situation to tell what mills they have been to by reading the reports by the way in which they are described. The custom is for the best mills to put themselves forward in a way to protect the others. They show what they are doing and make an impression on the legislature by the treatment of their employees and say that they are the best ones to trust with the welfare of the employees—men, women, and children.

The poor-widow argument is always put forward. I see it appearing time and again in these hearings, "What are you going to do with the poor widow? Here she is at the factory with a number of children, and it is necessary for those children under 14 to work in order to make support for the family," and, unfortunately for us, there was a persistent accusation against us that we were being financed by the New England mills—our National Child Labor Committee. I do not think we ever received a dollar from any textile manufacturer in New England; but it is possible that one or two contributed, perhaps gave a small sum for literature or something of that sort; but that idea was very industriously fostered, and something of that sort was said at this hearing—but I do not know anything about it—that evidently the New England mills were behind this movement to cripple their southern competitors, and some sectional feeling was aroused.

We did not do anything in the campaign of 1905. The committee on labor in the house seemed to be rather favorable to us. Just before the committee met for hearing the speaker of the house added five or six members hastily to the committee, and the report was unfavorable, and the campaign of 1905 ended there.

I suppose it is generally understood that the cotton-mill business has been the chief opponent of child-labor reform in the Southern States, and wherever there are cotton mills in any number at all they have stood as practically the only opponents to any child-labor reform. There are other industries affected, but they have let the cotton mills stand for them, and they have kept in the background.

North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama are the four chief cotton-mill States in the country, and the cotton mills are generally confined to a section called the Piedmont section and immediately below the Piedmont section in those States. North Carolina has more cotton mills than any other State in the Union, but they are generally small mills; and South Carolina has more spindles than any Southern State, and ranks next to Massachusetts.

We have been back to the Legislature of North Carolina every two years since 1905. We have attempted cooperation with the manufacturers. In 1907 we got together with them and they agreed to a nominal raise of the age limit from 12 to 13 years. Their first proposal was that children should not be employed under 13, except in an apprenticeship capacity, which would have lowered the whole age limit. I insisted it should be applied to children only between 12 and 13.

In regard to the apprenticeship business, in the last two or three years, our agent in North Carolina, who is a lawyer himself, has attempted to have manufacturers convicted of employing child labor under 13 not originally apprentices, through the regular forms of law, and in each case the manufacturers have pleaded guilty. We have never been able to have a court decision on the question, because they have invariably thrown up their hands and pleaded guilty to employing children under 13 in violation of the law.

Chairman WALSH. Can you approximate how many of those cases there have been?

Mr. McKELWAY. I think only three or four. I remember one in North Carolina.

That was agreed to then, and everything else was voted down, and there was no reduction of the hours. The hours in North Carolina at that time were 66 a week, which makes 12 hours a day, because under the system in the cotton mills there is a half holiday on Saturday, so that with 6 hours on Saturday, that makes 12 hours for the other five week days.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you please enumerate the hours of starting and closing for the day's work?

Mr. McKELWAY. There was no limit to that, gentlemen, they began at 6 o'clock in the morning, with half an hour for lunch on average, sometimes less and sometimes a little more, and they closed at half past 6 in the evening. Now, it is almost universally an 11-hour day, 60 hours a week, in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Louisiana. There has been a progressive reduction of the hours in Tennessee.

In the campaign of 1909 we had a distressing example of the treachery of our manufacturing friends who had agreed to what is known as the Hinsdale bill. The Hinsdale bill was favorably reported by the committee on labor in the house. Hinsdale was a young man in Raleigh, and he made such a good speech that the legislature overturned the report of the committee—that is, the house did—and adopted his bill. Then the employers agreed to compromise, and said they would use their influence to have it passed. That is all a matter of record; but the very same men who had made this same agreement, the officers of the North Carolina Manufacturers' Association, when the bill came to the senate, telegraphed opposition to the bill, and those telegrams were shown on the floor of the senate by our friends, but the bill was defeated in the senate. In spite of that, we have had to educate nearly all of our agents in the South, and our local State child-labor committees, to steer clear of that sort of cooperation.

The theory is a wrong one; it is supposed that the legislature is a court, and there are two parties to a contest, so that if they agree upon a measure, the court will do what the two parties say, but the legislature, of course, has a will of its own, and no agreement can bind the legislature, and while we were compelled to keep our agreement, there was no association of manufacturers strong enough to hold all of their members, and the individual members of the association would go back on the word of the officials. We have tried that in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, and we have had universally that experience, that an agreement to pass a certain kind of legislation was not worth the paper it was written upon. I remember a member of the Georgia Senate, who was a member of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association, that agreed with us three or four years ago on the terms of a bill, and who used all his influence in the senate against it.

And, then, this happens generally: We get the public sentiment aroused, and make our investigation and publish our figures, and appeal to the members and the people to get behind our movement, and they say, "This bill must be passed." Then our friends agree with the manufacturers to have a certain kind of legislation passed, and then instantly the public loses interest. They say, "That is settled now; that is going through the legislature; it is agreed to," and then the public interest wanes, and then when the legislature meets we have not that sentiment behind us aroused. We have had that experience over and over again, and now the only thing is to fight and fight to get the laws passed.

I got a letter from the chairman of our child-labor committee in Alabama, following this campaign in 1915, and in which she expressed her appreciation to me for not having written her, "I told you so." Mrs. W. L. Murdock tried the same plan and had to fight her way all through the legislature in spite of a six months' period of arbitration and compromise, and attempt to harmonize these conflicting interests.

I think one of the most unfortunate things about the child-labor situation in the South is that the operatives are such a helpless class. The illiteracy of the factory employees is an appalling thing. In spite of what we have heard and read in the papers about the schools the mill managements have built and the teachers which they employ there is a constant demand for the labor of the children and there is a contest between the mill and the school for the possession of the children, and the mill wins. I have not seen operative figures for 1910, and they are reduced some on both sides, but in 1900 the illiteracy of the white children in North Carolina from 10 to 14 years of age was 16 per cent, but in the cotton factories it was 50 per cent. In South Carolina for the same period the illiteracy of the white children from 10 to 14 years of age was 14 per cent, and in the cotton mills it was 48½ per cent. In Georgia the corresponding figures were 12 per cent and 44 per cent. The Federal Bureau of Labor, in its investigation in 1908, found practically the same state of facts—great illiteracy among the children of the cotton mill operatives.

Now, when we think that this industry in the South is already more than a generation old, and that the present factory employees, who have become adults, are male citizens and entitled to a vote, and have passed through that experience with no education, and brought up in the mill with long 12 or 11 hour days, you can understand that they are perfectly helpless to protect their own interests; and we have in our cotton-mill villages in the South a sort of feudal-ism, sometimes a sort of benevolent feudalism, I suppose, but the manufacturer owns the town, owns the streets, the schools, and the churches. I remember our agent in North Carolina, Mr. W. H. Swift, who is a very intelligent man, telling me more than once that he has heard the mill people say this, "We work in his mill and we live in his house and we send our children to his school and on Sunday we go to hear his preacher." I remember too—

Commissioner LENNON (interrupting). And do they bury them, too, when death comes?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir. I know they own a very large graveyard there that is distinguished by the large number of children buried there—owned by the mill property.

Commissioner GARRETSON. I suppose a good many of them think they worship his God also?

Mr. McKELWAY. I presume so.

I have here a report of one of our agents on this subject. I will take one mill as a typical mill in North Carolina. The president of the mill is now dead, so I suppose there is no use to bring his name in the matter. The mill is at High Shoals. We sent our agent there—our photographic agent, we call him—Mr. Hine, in November, 1908, and he wrote a little account of his experiences there. The superintendent of the mill, Mr. Kale, was also magistrate for the town; and the first thing that he found when he went there was the statement that everything here belongs to the company. A young man friend said, "If you want to take any photographs, you will have to see Supt. Kale." So he went to Mr. Kale—he was sometimes called King Kale—and he objected to his taking any photographs, and asked him a good many questions, and would not give him permission, or postponed giving him permission, and when he suggested perhaps he had better take them anyhow, his friend said, "You had better wait until you get permission." But he went to the school and took some photographs there and was very sharply called up by the superintendent for having taken any photographs there, and was reminded that the whole mill belonged to the company and that he was really a trespasser on the premises.

There was a welfare worker at High Shoals, Miss Lila Charles, employed there, and she got very much distressed over the child-labor situation at High Shoals, and began to write me; and I wrote to her at once that it was rather dangerous for her if she wished to keep her job to be writing to me; and my replies were on plain letter head and envelope so it would not be known that she was writing to the National Child Labor Committee. But it was found out, and I think—well, here is her first letter, in which she says [reading]:

"I have been in the work here for six months as a teacher in the school and trying to do betterment work. I have had a golden opportunity for studying the conditions here. There is little or no obedience to the child-labor law and no enforcement in this mill village in regard to the age limit."

Then she went on to tell how one of the investigators—when he came there the mill was warned by telephone message from Charlotte and the children were hidden and taken out of the mill—most of them. Then follows a second letter, in which she tells of her discharge from the mill, and she said (reading):

"I was put here by the company to do betterment work and help with the school work, and it was necessary frequently to interfere with the High Shoals money-making scheme. Just as soon as they realized the fact that I had common sense enough to know they were violating the law I was asked to withdraw from my work."

And she went on to say—I find I haven't that correspondence with me, but it was made known to the Post Office Department that she was in correspondence with me and that was the cause for her discharge. She sent also a letter from one of her friends testifying to the same effect.

We had an agent in Georgia, a minister of the Christian Church, the Rev. Mr. Seddon. He was a very accomplished man, a scholar, and a gentleman, and he went to a mill in search of a boy that we were looking for in Georgia—perhaps I might stop to tell you that story.

There was a woman in New York whose husband had gone to Colorado to try to get cured of tuberculosis, whose name was Knapp, and she had a brother living in Georgia, and she sent her three children, the oldest of whom, Charley, was 9 years of age, to her brother, who was working a little farm then, or owned a little farm, and had promised to send these children to school. And soon after that Charley's uncle married a widow with several children, and he concluded to sell his farm and move to the mill and put his sister's children and his wife's children to work for him. The two younger children, however, he sent back to their mother, and Charley had not forgotten how to read and write. He wrote a little note to his mother and hid it in the pocket of one of the younger children. She was thus informed that he was not going to school in the country, but was at work in the mill; and she went to our New York office—I was living at Atlanta at the time—and they instructed me to try to find Charley Knapp; and the report of this agent—I went out to look for him at the last mill I had heard of his working at. Charley worked in five Georgia mills from the time he was 9 years old until he was 11, in violation of law, because the Georgia age limit then was 12; and in two mills he worked at night in violation of the Georgia law, which then forbade children under 14 working at night. He was hurt twice; once when he was drawing up an old-fashioned bucket—old-fashioned system of drawing water with a windlass—and the windlass slipped and struck him in the head; and a little later they sent him up on a ladder to clean some shaftings in the mill and he got caught in the wheels and his side crushed so that he will be crippled for life; and he was kept at the hospital for a month or two by the mill authorities, but no suit was ever brought for damages. I finally found Charley in a little mill at Juliette, Ga., and the people got very much interested in the story of Charley Knapp; and as soon as they found out he was not the son of this man, his uncle, the mill almost stopped running—it was a small mill—and the people got very much interested, superintendent and all. And I went to the uncle and interviewed Charley's uncle, and after a stormy interview I said, law or no law, I was going to send the boy back to his mother, which I did.

Chairman WALSH. How old was he then?

Mr. McKELWAY. He was then 11 years of age, and had worked two years in Georgia and in two mills at night.

Chairman WALSH. And he was crippled for life?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; one leg was shorter than the other. He will be crippled for life to that extent. I was trying to find Mr. Seddon's report about this mill, at or near Covington, Ga. I do not seem to be able to lay my hands on it now. I will probably be able to put that in the record later.

(See McKelway Exhibit No. 1 at the end of this subject.)

Mr. McKELWAY. But Mr. Seddon found a mill near Covington, Ga., and went out there to investigate it. It was 2 or 3 miles from the railroad station. He put up at a hotel, and then the superintendent or the president of the mill came along and found out he was there and told him he was a trespasser; that he had no business visiting the school without his permission; that the school belonged to the company and the streets and the whole town belonged to the company; and when he got back to the hotel he found the order for his room had been canceled and he had no place to stay, and he walked back to the railroad station.

Chairman WALSH. How do you mean the order for his room had been canceled? You mean he was denied admission in the hotel?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; he went to the hotel and made a reservation for a room, and after his interview with the president of the company he was very violent about his being an agent of the National Child Labor Committee, and he went back to the hotel to spend the night, and he was told that he could not stay there, that the hotel belonged to the company just as much as anything else. Now, that is rather an extreme case, of course. Our agents generally have not had troubles of that sort, and I never have had any trouble of that sort. But I remember in Atlanta the Exposition Mills, one of the largest mills there—I had been doing some investigating there and made it rather troublesome for them; and they put up signs on the streets of the mill, which were a continuation of the streets of Atlanta, that anybody going through those streets was a trespasser; and even the market wagons were held up a while and could not deliver their goods. And the newspapers made such a stir about it that the signs were taken down. But the mills were outside of the corporation of Atlanta, and the whole thing belonged to the company just as much as the owner's house did.

Now, I think that is one of the most distressing things we have in the South to-day, and I think some of the southern legislatures are going to wake up to the fact that they need to incorporate these mill villages and give the people the right to elect their officers and conduct their affairs; because the mill absolutely controls that.

Now, I have given one from North Carolina and one from Georgia, and here in one from South Carolina—the mill at Pelzer.

In the mill at Pelzer there was a book written not long ago, some of you might have heard of it, it was called the "Child That Tolleth Not." It was written by Mr. Doyley. I quote from this book—I presume this was pleasing to Mr. Smyth, the manager and president of the Pelzer Mills, because he bought 120 copies of it and presented them to the legislature. Said the author: "I was told a story about these people that not only aptly illustrates their spirit of independence, but also the tyranny of the King of Pelzer." (The King of Pelzer, that was the name by which Mr. Smyth went.) "The labor unions of the North have determined to organize the downtrodden mill operatives of the South, and they sent one of their delegates to Pelzer * * *. But he had scarcely arrived in the place when his plans and movements were reported to the king. The king, seated at his office desk, listened to the report, and then quietly looking up at the clock, said, 'The train leaves at 11; have the constable put him on that train.' And the veracious historian comments with approval: 'The order was obeyed as effectively as though it had been a royal or presidential decree with a Swiss guard or a company of Mexican rurales to enforce it.'"

He treated that incident as a joke, and, I say, I presume the recital of it was pleasing to Mr. Smyth, because he purchased a large number of books to distribute.

Chairman WALSH. What were the circumstances, was it a fact that the constable did put him on the train?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; as a trespasser.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was that book written in a spirit friendly to the manufacturers?

Mr. McKELWAY. Entirely so.

Chairman WALSH. Sketch this little circumstance, the man's name, the circumstances under which he was put on the train, etc.?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the purpose of the book; what aim did it have in view?

Mr. McKELWAY. This is all I know about it, this little extract from the book, although I have condensed it somewhat.

Mr. McKELWAY. Mr. Doyley was an employee of the Federal Bureau of Labor, who they had sent out, being a man of large experience, to investigate the child and women wage earners in the United States. Their report is published in 19 volumes. He was sent into the mountains of North Carolina to investigate this particular question, which I think was a false issue, but nevertheless he was asked to do this work—whether the people of the mills are better off in their mill environments than in the mountains from which they came. In the first place, only a small per cent of the operatives come from the mountains. I think the files of the Labor Bureau will estimate from 20 to 25 per cent come from the mountains. The real question was not whether they were better off in the mountains or in the mills, but whether they were as well off in the mills as they had a right to be. Still, this is a mooted question, and his report, condensed, is reported in one of these volumes. He had a controversy with Mr. Neill, of the Bureau of Labor, and was separated from the service, and he wrote this book to give his impression of child labor in the mills and in the mountains. The book has been rather a boomerang to the cause, and we find it helps us more than the other side, because the statement as to rural life in the South was so extreme that the rural legislators resented it. The whole argument was to make it appear that the people on the farms or in the mountain coves were in such desperate condition that it was a mercy to move them to the mills if children of tender age were put in the mills.

Commissioner LENNON. Some one furnished the commission with copies of that book, at least I have one, and my wife got hold of it and put it in the stove.

Mr. McKELWAY. I found this report I was looking for from Mr. Seddon [reading]:

"Learning that there was a hotel in Porterdale——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). Who wrote that letter?

Mr. McKELWAY. Rev. A. E. Seddon, one of our agents in Georgia at the time.

"When I reached the hotel I was told I could not be shown to my room until the proprietor, Mr. Brannen, came. After a short while he arrived, and with evident embarrassment informed me that the mill superintendent, Mr. Powers, had intimated to him that I was not to be accommodated at the hotel. He however informed me that Mr. Bowden would take me, and indicated the house. Bowden was out in the front yard, a big, heavily built, ill-looking man, the whole front of his shirt copiously stained with tobacco juice. He was not, in appearance at least, the kind of man I would like to have for my host. It was not, therefore, a very great disappointment when he growled, 'I don't keep no boarding house.' A little later on I had occasion to view his refusal to take me in with great satisfaction, when I learned that some one, who under similar circumstances had been sent to be that man's guest, had been badly beaten during the night. I was about to return to the hotel to give instructions about my valise when I was called on one side by an elderly man whom I must not name, as he especially requested that I would treat as confidential what he said. He had been an observer of the whole incident and begged me not to return to the hotel, as he had reason to believe that I would be safer in Covington than in Porterdale that night. * * *

"The following day I was returning to Porterdale on foot, not knowing what kind of a reception awaited me. When half way there I was overtaken by an elderly gentleman who offered me the vacant seat in his buggy. I suspected from the first that my fellow traveler was Mr. Porter, the head of the Porterdale Mills. With a view to ascertaining whether my surmise was right, I at once told him I was a stranger and gave him my name. He told me his name was Porter. I inquired whether he was the Mr. Porter of the Porterdale Mills. He answered, 'Yes.' I told him I was glad of the opportunity to make the acquaintance as I was going to Porterdale to see him. I told him I was a representative of the National Child Labor Committee, and that I hoped to gain his permission to visit the mills. At this he began to get wrathful. He wanted to know what authority I had to visit the mill. I told him I was authorized to do so by the National Child Labor Committee. His vigorous reply was, 'That authority is not worth a damn, and you know it.' The only authority he was prepared to acknowledge was legal authority of the county or State. Of course he refused to allow me to go into the mill, and he and his sons were with me the whole four hours before my train left for Covington. They sent to the hotel for my valise, and Mr. John Porter saw me get aboard the train.

"During the four hours I was in the mill office with them we talked on a variety of subjects, but I constantly sought to bring the conversation back to mill conditions."

Chairman WALSH. Did he gain access to the mills?

Mr. McKELWAY. No, sir; I think he took some photographs on the outside of the mill and at the school. He was detained in the office of the mill, but was not allowed to go through the mill itself. We have had practically the same history of our work in other States. We have always had in Virginia the opposition of the cotton manufacturers until the last session of the legislature; the bill did not affect them especially, and they agreed to let it pass. At the session of the Virginia Legislature preceding the last—that was in 1912—they opposed the bill that we presented at that time, and it was defeated in the senate. The chairman of the committee came from the Danville district, where the largest cotton mills are located, and I remember Mr. Fitzgerald talking to him for hours before the committee—

Chairman WALSH. Who was Mr. Fitzgerald?

Mr. McKELWAY. Superintendent of the Danville Cotton Mills; and I had in my hands a letter from Danville, which I tried to find but could not bring it with me, in which there were the names of at least 12, and possibly 15, girls who had been discharged from the mills because they were talking about organizing labor unions. There are about 800 cotton mills in the South, and I don't know of but one—at Knoxville—that is organized or tolerates a labor union.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you know whether the conditions there are any better or worse than the other mills?

Mr. McKELWAY. I have not visited that mill myself, but I had a long talk with the superintendent, and he believes it is a good thing and that they get a better class of operators. We have had the same experience in South Carolina—the resistance of the manufacturers to any child-labor legislation. They have coupled together in South Carolina the idea of passing a compulsory-education bill with the child-labor bill, and the result of that has been to postpone child-labor legislation. The people of South Carolina had to pass some sort of compulsory-legislation bill at the last session, but the manufacturers very adroitly coupled the two things together, and they were defeated both through a term of years. We finally got through with it.

Chairman WALSH. What is the present condition of the law; have they no compulsory-education law?

Mr. McKELWAY. They did at the last legislature pass what they call a local-option educational law, in which any district and county can put itself under the law if it wishes.

Chairman WALSH. How is it operated in any mill town?

Mr. McKELWAY. I don't know of any mill in North Carolina—only one; that is Asheville, which includes one or two cotton mills. They have one or two in Virginia, but the constitution of Virginia prohibits them from making such a law for children under 12 years.

Chairman WALSH. How old is that constitutional provision?

Mr. McKELWAY. Not very old; there was a constitutional convention about 10 years ago, perhaps, or a little longer?

Commissioner LENNON. 1902, was it?

Mr. McKELWAY. I have forgotten; but about that time. When I went to Georgia I went to Atlanta to live in 1905 or 1906. We passed a child-labor bill through the house in 1905. They had what this New England mill agent described as a gentleman's agreement in Georgia not to employ children under certain ages; if I remember correctly, one week's work shall not exceed 66 hours; no child less than 12 years shall work at night under any circumstances; no child less than 12 years old shall be allowed to work there at all unless such child has a physically disabled mother or disabled parents that depend on the labor of the child; unless they can read and write; and attend school for four months during each calendar year. It also provided that no child under 10 years of age could be allowed to work in the factories under any circumstances.

We found that that was universally violated, and the house in 1905 passed a bill which the senate defeated, and there was such an outbreak of indignation in the press that a year ago the same senate came back and introduced a bill, signed by a majority of the members, which passed, virtually putting into effect this gentleman's agreement. There was a 10-year age limit and the 12-year exception for children of widows or orphans or children unable to support themselves in some way. Of course, you have all heard of the Frank case. One of the largest stockholders of that pencil factory in Atlanta in which Mary Phagan, the 14-year-old factory girl, was murdered, was an opponent of our child-labor law in 1908.¹ I have a letter from him here which I think I will put into the record, with my reply to it.

(Witness here submitted two clippings from the Atlanta Constitution of Dec. 31, 1908, and Jan. 10, 1909, respectively. They are entitled "On child-labor question S. F. Parrott writes letter," and "McKelway makes reply to Parrott on child labor.")

I don't know anything that has caused the governor more trouble than the Frank trial; not only the expense of the court services, all the way to the Supreme Court, but the man was—I don't mean to say whether Mr. Frank was guilty of that murder or not—but I want to make this point: If that law was passed, Mary Phagan would not have been allowed to enter that factory to work. She would not have been allowed entrance until a month after the time she was murdered. She went to work at 12 and was killed a little after she was 13 years of age. We had the cooperation of the labor unions everywhere, in my experience, in the South.

Chairman WALSH. One minute; I see this letter is signed by a man by the name of S. P. Parrott. He is president of the Atlanta Compress Co.—

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; and also a stockholder in the pencil factory. Our bill was defeated in the legislature in that year. I might say that last summer the Georgia Legislature reached the 14-year age limit for the employment of children, with the still unfortunate exception of 12 years of age for orphaned children or children of dependent parents. I have contended that that was unethical, or if the legislation was for the benefit of the child that the child of the widowed mother was as much entitled to that as any other children. That it was a matter of relief when the family was too poor to support itself except by immature children.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you make a study of the hours as well as age limitations?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; the wages for children in the cotton mills are comparatively high. I don't know of any work where children, say, of 12 and 14 years of age, can engage in anything like a wholesale way that pays them any better than working in the cotton mills. My contention is that the employment of children lowers the whole wage scale to child labor. I have some figures I got from the Federal Bureau of Labor on the question of wages: "Doffers of 12 years were paid $3.74 per week; doffers of 13 years were paid $3.92 per week; doffers of 14 years were paid $5.04 per week; doffers of 15 years were paid $4.75 per week." It begins to go back at 15 years.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. How do you mean begins to go back; it gets lower as they get older?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; it is rather singular that the doffer, the girls or boys—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What is a doffer?

Mr. McKELWAY. It is a boy operator who takes the empty spool off of the spinning frame and puts on the full spools. Anybody speaking of child labor has certainly mentioned the doffer boy as not having a hard time of it. He can go out and play baseball or marbles between the time that he has to take the empty spool off and put the full one on. His work is intermittent work. The spinners are girls in the South, and they are almost constantly employed. It is not hard work, but it is a strain upon the nerves. They have to watch the spindle frame and as soon as a thread breaks tie the thread.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Is there any differential between the male and female child in wages?

Mr. McKELWAY. The wages for the adult man is a little lower than for the adult woman. I have not made a comparison of the wages of children.

Chairman WALSH. Have you the wages of men and women—the adults?

Mr. McKELWAY. You will find them very accurately stated in 1908 in the first volume of that Federal child-labor report. I have a condensation of some facts here that may be of interest. Two hundred and fifty-one children under 12 years of age earned less than $2 per week and 731 children of 12 and 13 earned less than $2 per week. There were 1,700 workers from 14 to 20 years of age who earned less than $2 per week.

Chairman WALSH. Where is that?

Mr. McKELWAY. This from the study of the wages of 32,400 workers in the cotton mills by the Federal Bureau of Labor. They studied their wages from the actual pay envelopes and made quite an exhaustive treatise on it. There were 1,700 from 14 to 20 years of age who earned less than $2 per week and 1,085 operatives 21 years of age and over who earned less than $2 a week.

Chairman WALSH. What period did they make that study?

Mr. McKELWAY. In 1908.

Chairman WALSH. What period of time, I mean?

Mr. McKELWAY. How long it passed over?

Chairman WALSH. Yes, sir; how many months?

Mr. McKELWAY. I can not tell you that. I can put that in the record.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

(See McKelway Exhibit No. 2.)

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; I will remember to put that in. There were, as I said, 1,085 operatives 21 years of age and over earning less than $2 a week. Bear in mind these all received less than $2 a week.

Chairman WALSH. What are those last figures?

Mr. McKELWAY. Out of 32,409 workers in the cotton mills whose actual wages per week were gotten from the pay roll we find these figures:

Two hundred and fifty-one children under 12 years of age earned less than $2 per week; 731 children of 12 and 13 earned less than $2 per week; 1,700 workers from 14 to 20 years of age who earned less than $2 per week; and 1,085 operatives 21 years of age and over who earned less than $2 per week. There were more girls from 18 to 20 years of age earning less than $2 per week than there were girls from 14 to 15 earning less than $2. There were 1,733 children under 16 who made from two to three dollars a week, and there was almost an equal number—1,712 workers—16 years and over, who earned the same wages. Children under 16 earning from three to four dollars a week numbered 2,426, and those from 16 to 21 and over earning from three to four dollars a week numbered 2,597. We argued from all of that that child labor reduced wages to the child standard.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would interpret that; I am free to say I don't understand that. There is a certain percentage of adults earning less than $2. How do you interpret that?

Mr. McKELWAY. That is out of the whole number—32,000. There is another scale of wages for those earning three to four dollars.

Chairman WALSH. There is such a great number that are earning less than $2?

Mr. McKELWAY. Child wages means family labor, and while one operative could not support himself on the $2, by living together and putting their wages together they do manage to keep body and soul together.

Chairman WALSH. I don't exactly reconcile that with your statement that the wages were comparatively good.

Mr. McKELWAY. I said the wages of children were high for children. In the South I don't know of any occupation in which the child can engage——

Chairman WALSH. That is only confined to the South?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; I am speaking almost entirely of the South, in which children can be employed from 12 to 15 years of age in which they would earn from 50 to 75 cents a day.

Chairman WALSH. What was the daily wage rate, if you have them in those figures, of these people that earn less than $2?

Mr. McKELWAY. Divide that by six.

Chairman WALSH. Could you do that? That surely must be that they did not work full time or included a period in which the mill laid off for weeks.

Mr. McKELWAY. No, sir; they would not have done that; they made a fair study of that.

Commissioner LENNON. Your statement that the comparative wages in the South of children were better in the cotton mills than elsewhere; you refer simply to the South; you don't mean to say that children over 14 employed in some of the industries of the North don't make more than $2?

Mr. McKELWAY. No, sir; I said between 12 and 14. Of course, a boy can get a job that will pay him more than that; but to employ children in any number, the wages of the cotton mill is really a temptation to the parent to put their children to work, and they don't get much more wages after 15 or 17 than before that. The maximum of efficiency is the weaver or spinner. I suppose the maximum of the weaver is at 16 and the spinner from 18 to 21.

Chairman WALSH. How old are these mills in which these conditions exist?

Mr. McKELWAY. There are very few old mills in the South. I used to have those figures on my tongue's end. I think in 1880 there were only 1,667 spindles in the South.

Chairman WALSH. Has it gone on long enough to find out what becomes of these people?

Mr. McKELWAY. Most of them stay at the mills—most of them who went to work as children in the mills—some of them go back to the farm.

Chairman WALSH. Do you find many of them working in the mill that started out at an early day that have reached 50 or 55 or 60 years of age?

Mr. McKELWAY. No, sir; because practically all of the mills that existed were destroyed during the war, and there are very few mills that are more than 30 years of age. The great growth of the mills in the South came between 1880—say, within the last 30 years.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do these investigations show the home life they are living—how they live and what they live upon?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; there has been a very full statement made about that in the Federal Bureau of Labor's report.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Does it show the family earnings?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So many in the family, so many children earning so much?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The number of children all, based upon the family, the father and mother and the children all employed?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Their earnings might be ten or twelve dollars a week, something of that kind?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir. I think the people of the South who know anything about the situation are generally in favor of child-labor reform, but the legislature which is controlled by selfish interests, and especially the smaller house, the senate——

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Do these investigations show the percentage of white and black employed?

Mr. McKELWAY. Nearly altogether white.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Why is that?

Mr. McKELWAY. There have been two or three experiments tried with the employment of negro labor in the mills, and they have been failures. I don't think that the experiments are entirely fair experiments. I think there were other circumstances probably that led to the failure of the mills, by the long work day. They could not employ a negro and white people in the same cotton mills, it would have to be negro labor or white labor, but it is nearly altogether white labor. There are some negro men employed in the heavier work of the mills. I remember a little instance in the history of this legislation in Georgia, there was one negro member of the legislature when our bill in 1906 passed, and he was a very much respected member of the legislature, a good man, and during the roll call he had three minutes, I think, in which to express his views, and he said something like this: "Mr. Speaker: My people are not specially interested in this bill, because our children are not employed in the factories; we are trying to send them to school, but we have been legislating for the birds of the air, the beasts of the field, and the fish of the sea, and I am in favor of doing something for the little white children of Georgia."

There was a negro member pleading for the welfare of the white children.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You said the colored children are sent to school. Is there a comparison made showing the white and colored going to school?

Mr. McKELWAY. There was a larger percentage of white children attending school in the South than negro children. In the State of South Carolina where there are more negroes than white people, there are more negro children going to school than white children, but the percentage is small. But I have seen in the same town a colored school full of children and the streets empty of children, the children all going to school, and take in a cotton-mill village close by, in which the children are in the mills rather than in the school, are a large number of them. Undoubtedly the negro children in general in the South are getting a better opportunity for education than the white children in the cotton-mill villages. Now, speaking generally, we have not been able to enlist the cooperation—

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me for interrupting you. Has that feature been put forth strongly by your committees in these legislatures, the fact that the negro children are getting a better opportunity for education than the white children?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; we have stretched that a good deal.

Chairman WALSH. What has been the response to that?

Mr. McKELWAY. I don't know that it has had very much influence. We have had fairly good success over a period of 10 years in defense of child-labor legislation in the South, and it is hard to say what argument has done the most to help it through.

Chairman WALSH. Have the newspapers in the South discussed it, have the educators, the church people, for instance, those that look toward what might be called the bettermen of people as a whole, discussed it?

Mr. McKELWAY. The educators have discussed it, and some of the papers take it up now and then. We have generally had the following of the press throughout the South. One of our most bitter opponents for a long time was the Manufacturers' Record, published in Baltimore, which was the representative of the manufacturing interests very largely in the South. That is the same paper, by the way, that received a $5,000 contribution, I think, from Mr. Archbold. I have a shrewd suspicion that the reason they stopped the attacks upon us—I was a free-lance editor for an Atlanta paper at the time, and I played that a good deal of the time—and every time he said anything about child labor I had an editorial about Mr. Archbold's contribution, and I have not seen much of it in the last three years. You can take the papers that were influenced very much by the cotton manufacturers, they would be opposed to it, like the Charlotte Journal and News in Charlotte. The Times Union, a Jacksonville paper, owned by the railroad interests there, has been an opponent of the child-labor laws, but generally the press of the South has been with us. A Baltimore paper last year got the age limit of the newsboys reduced by the legislature from 12 to 10, and the governor signed that bill. That brings us to this point, that we have had very few backsets. After we establish a standard it has been very seldom we have lowered it, and the legislatures repealed what they have done.

Commissioner LENNON. They have not repealed it, but has it been improved?

Mr. McKELWAY. We have factory inspection now of some kind or another in every State except North Carolina. In Virginia the work is very well done, in Tennessee it is very well done, and in Kentucky and Louisiana, it is well done in the city of New Orleans where much of the employment of children has been, but the appropriation was not large enough. We are getting a little more, though, every time we try for it.

I would like to except the Tennessee manufacturers from the general rule, all corporations. They had a 14-year age limit in Tennessee pretty early, and we have had one or two contests with them, but out of those contests there arose an organization called the Southern Child Labor Association. It was organized in Nashville, and we got together and gave the manufacturers an equal vote with us, and had one or two meetings in New Orleans, and the Tennessee manufacturers have generally stood for pretty good legislation. We have very good child-labor laws in Tennessee.

Chairman WALSH. Briefly, what are the industries in Tennessee?

Mr. McKELWAY. Cotton factories, a few woolen mills, a good many hosiery factories in Tennessee.

Chairman WALSH. The places where the largest are located?

Mr. McKELWAY. Down on the Southern Railway, from Bristol to Chattanooga, and Knoxville has some very large mills, Chattanooga, and some at Nashville.

Commissioner LENNON. Considerable shoe industry, is there?

Mr. McKELWAY. There is a large industry in Virginia—I don't know about Tennessee—and we have investigated that and found but very few children employed. West of the Mississippi the standard was higher than east. Texas has a 15-year age limit for children working around machinery, and a pretty good enforcement of the law.

Chairman WALSH. Have you made any study of the uses of children on farms?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir; and a very exhaustive study; and we have some pamphlets on that. I might leave one for your files.

Chairman WALSH. At our Dallas hearing it was testified to by a number of witnesses that it was a common practice in certain portions of Texas and Oklahoma to make leases of farms, taking into consideration what they call the "force," which seemed to be the number of children that the person had—the renter had. It was testified there it was common for the children to go to work at the age of 7; that the school hours up to the present time, to the passage of this late law, the school hours and school terms had been fixed with reference to cotton picking and cotton planting, and so on. What has been your observation?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes—it is not so much observation as reports of our agents. In Oklahoma I wrote the first child-labor law and the first compulsory education law. I remember that I learned that there were roaming bands of people, leading almost a gypsy life, who moved from farm to farm picking cotton with all their children; and that is done, too, on a wholesale scale in Texas. Our recent investigations down there show such.

Chairman WALSH. What is the age at which they put children to work in the field?

Mr. McKELWAY. There is no limit to that at all. We have some laws that provide that children under 14 shall not be employed during school hours or during the school term, as some of the laws read; but for vacation work there is no limit to the employment of children on the farm.

The census shows a very large percentage of children employed on farms and not employed on their father's farm—not members of farmers' families—as the census calls it. I think it has been put in the record before, perhaps in New York, about this interstate-commerce children's employment—children being employed in the berry fields and in the canneries of Delaware and Maryland, and then transported to the Gulf coast and employed in oyster picking and shrimp-picking industry there during the winter.

Chairman WALSH. Did we have a report on that in the New York hearing?

Mr. McKELWAY. I think you did; I have not seen it, but I think you did.

Chairman WALSH. And have you any report on the conditions of farm child labor in Texas and Oklahoma?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; we have in Texas. I don't think we have in Oklahoma.

Chairman WALSH. Well, give us a reference to it, so that if we desire we may secure it.

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; I have it at the office.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would submit it.

Mr. McKELWAY. Very well.

(See McKelway Exhibit No. 3.)

I don't want to take up your time, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. We are very much interested; go ahead.

Mr. McKELWAY. Perhaps it would interest you, Mr. Chairman, to know that when I went to Oklahoma I drew the first child-labor law there and compulsory education law, and I put a widow's pension clause into the compulsory education law. I don't say that this is perfect legislation in any way, but I think it was certainly the first thing during the past decade in the way of mothers' law. That section is as follows [reading]:

"If any widowed mother or disabled father shall make affidavit to the effect that the wages of his or her child or children under 16 years of age are necessary to the support of such widowed mother or disabled father, then the county superintendent of public instruction may, after careful investigation, in his discretion furnish such child or children a certificate called a 'scholarship,' stating the amount of the wages such child or children are receiving or so much of such wages as shall be deemed necessary to the support of such widowed mother or disabled father, so long as such child or children shall attend the public school in accordance with the provisions of this statute, which aid shall be allowed and paid upon the certificate of such county superintendent of public instruction to the child or children holding such scholarship by the board of county commissioners of the county in which such child or children reside."

I think I may modestly claim this has something to do with the agitation for widows' pension funds throughout the country, though I think it was rather crude legislation.

(For paper submitted by witness, see McKelway Exhibit No. 4.)

Oklahoma has an excellent child-labor law; Arizona has adopted a uniform child-labor law, with the exception that it went further than that, and included the protection of women, limiting them to an 8-hour day to all women in the industry, instead of women under 18. Uniform child-labor laws were unanimously recommended and adopted by the American Bar Association four years ago after recommendation of the commissioners on interstate laws.

Chairman WALSH. I might ask you, what is the situation in Georgia, North Carolina, and in these large mill communities, with reference to securing compensation for the injuries to these children? How are they treated in the courts?

Mr. McKELWAY. Most of those mills—I don't speak with authority on this, but my impression is that most of them have accident insurance with casualty companies, to protect them; and these companies take up the burden of litigation. The courts have been pretty uniformly though in favor of compensation for injuries, and there have been some pretty good damage suits settled I know of in Georgia and North Carolina in the interests of the children. And I think Judge Clark's dictum there has had its influence throughout the South.

Chairman WALSH. That is, a child of tender years is not chargeable with contributory negligence?

Mr. McKELWAY. Not with contributory negligence; no, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Or the assumption of the risk of the employment?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; that is right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Under which of the two conditions do the injured get the most equitable compensation, under the common law or under the workmen's compensation act?

Mr. McKELWAY. Well, we have very few workmen's compensation acts passed in the South.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why?

Mr. McKELWAY. Well, we have just not reached that subject yet. I think there will be.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is your association working for it?

Mr. McKELWAY. No; no; we confine ourselves pretty strictly to the general question of child labor and compulsory education.

Chairman WALSH. Could you give us briefly the Texas compulsory education law?

Mr. McKELWAY. No; I am not familiar with that, but I can get it for you without any trouble.

Chairman WALSH. Well, if you will get it—the two laws, the old law and the new law, and submit them.

Mr. McKELWAY. Well, they had no compulsory education law in Texas until this last law.

Chairman WALSH. Until lately?

Mr. McKELWAY. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would get it, then, please, Mr. McKelway.

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes, sir.

We had quite an interesting experience in Arkansas two years ago. You know the rules for the legislature are peculiar to itself in Arkansas. It is really and literally more difficult to introduce a bill than it is to pass a bill. They have a roll call of the members of the legislature in each house, and when the roll is called the man who answers to his name has the right to introduce a bill in which he is interested, and then that bill is debated until it is disposed of. That is the way they carry their calendar. And I found great difficulty in getting bills introduced in the Arkansas Legislature, because every man is interested in something else that he considers paramount, and it is difficult to get a bill introduced into the legislature for that reason. At the last session of the legislature, I finally told them that if they did not pass a bill I was going to initiate it and it would cost the State a good deal more expense; but they did not pass it and we did initiate it. They have the right of initiation and referendum in Arkansas. I think, taking Arkansas as a large State with a very large rural population, that it is very interesting to note the result of the vote and the interest that the people felt in that subject. We were required to get about 15,000 signatures, and we got 23,000; and when the vote was had I think the figures were 73,000 for the bill and 25,000 against it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is that the only southern State having the initiative?

Mr. McKELWAY. Well, Oklahoma has it, if you call Oklahoma a southern State, and Arizona has it, but I don't think any other southern State has adopted it. But they will get it in the very near future. It is only a question of time. I know in Florida two years ago it almost passed. It passed the house unanimously and was defeated in the senate by a very small margin. I think the southern legislatures are reasonably responsive to the will of the people, and I have found very little graft or corruption or anything of that sort in the legislatures. I have never had any bribery or anything of that kind to contend with in my contests except perhaps the employment of attorneys—employment of legislators as attorneys for companies, and so forth.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are there many blacks in the southern legislatures?

Mr. McKELWAY. No; I don't suppose there is a single negro a member of any southern legislature now; not that I know of.

The last Arkansas Legislature, even after that tremendous popular vote, attempted to repeal this law passed by the initiative and referendum; but the attempt failed. But we had to have an agent there on watch all the time to keep it from being passed.

Chairman WALSH. What was the law?

Mr. McKELWAY. It was almost a uniform child-labor law, condensed so as not to take up too much space in printing, but with a 14-year age limit for all occupations, including agriculture, during the school term, 16-year age limit for night work and dangerous occupations, and an 8-hour day for children under 16 years of age.

Chairman WALSH. Did it cause much agitation in the State?

Mr. McKELWAY. We sent our agent to make speeches in the State and talk to the women's clubs and the churches and get the newspapers interested, and there was a very considerable agitation; and the vote for and against this bill was higher than any other proposition, and was only 10,000 less than the vote for the governor at the same election, so there was a great deal of interest taken in the legislature for and against, and we carried it by a vote of 3 to 1. We have had as the main opposition to child-labor legislation the influence of the cotton mills and cotton-mill manufacturers.

We had a long contest with one of the oyster packers in Florida, John G. Rood, who lived in Apalachicola. He was extremely adroit, and time after time our legislation was defeated. He had had a contest with labor unions, and was not employing children in his factory, which was shut down at the time, but he hoped to do so in the future, and he was very much averse to this class of legislation. Once we got our bill through both houses, and there was a slight disagreement, and there was a conference report of one house, and it got tabled.

Chairman WALSH. Was he a member?

Mr. McKELWAY. No; he just managed the fight, and he was too much for us. Finally I went to Apalachicola and Key West and made some personal investigation, and got so many facts about what happened in regard to the employment of children that at the next session of the legislature he considerably sailed to Europe and let the bill be passed. We have a pretty fair law in Florida.

We had opposition from the telegraph companies in the protection of messengers. I suppose you want to know something about that?

Chairman WALSH. We are much interested in it.

Mr. McKELWAY. We have had the same contest in the South and find the same conditions in Virginia and Georgia as found in New York, except on a smaller scale, because the cities are smaller.

Chairman WALSH. How about New Orleans?

Mr. McKELWAY. New Orleans is perfectly fearful; I never heard or read anything like the reports of our agents in New Orleans, and that has not been corrected there yet.

Chairman WALSH. Do they use them in sending messages, and so forth, to the red-light district?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; and in sending cocaine and whisky when the saloons are closed, and their association with the denizens of the red-light district are intimate. This is especially so of New Orleans, but the same thing exists in Richmond, Nashville, Baltimore, Savannah, Birmingham, Memphis, Montgomery, and other cities, and in some Texas cities; the same conditions prevail practically everywhere. Here in Washington the conditions are better because we have a 14-year age limit for daywork and a 16-year age limit for night work, and we did not find the same condition here as in Baltimore—that is, before the red-light district was closed in Washington.

Chairman WALSH. What is the age of the boys in the different cities?

Mr. McKELWAY. It depends upon whether there is any law to prevent their employment; we found them from 10 years up.

Chairman WALSH. What are the names of the companies that employ boys?

Mr. McKELWAY. The Western Union, the Postal, and the District Messenger Cos., which go by various local names.

Chairman WALSH. Those are the companies owned by the Western Union Telegraph Co.?

Mr. McKELWAY. No.

Chairman WALSH. Or the stock of which is owned by the Western Union?

Mr. McKELWAY. Not that I know of.

Chairman WALSH. Do you know whether it is or not?

Mr. McKELWAY. I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. It has been testified to that what are called the district companies, named after the States, and with local names, are subsidiary companies of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

Mr. McKELWAY. I might modify my answer. Where those district companies are carrying messages for the telegraph company, I suppose they are closely associated with that company.

Chairman WALSH. The testimony was that these district companies that carry private messages and carried packages for private persons, and the like of that, were subsidiary companies of the Western Union.

Mr. McKELWAY. My impression has been, although I never looked into it carefully, that they were independent district companies.

Chairman WALSH. Publicity has been given to this commission, so far as the employment of messenger boys is concerned, say within the last two or three years.

Mr. McKELWAY. It has been only within the last three or four years that our committee waked up to this question. We published some pamphlet on the night messenger service, and we had the reports of our agents, and sometimes put them in manuscript form before the legislatures. I think Mr. Lovejoy has a pamphlet that can be put in the record.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would please do so.

(Witness submitted printed pamphlet entitled "Child Labor and the Night Messenger Service," by Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary National Child Labor Committee. It is pamphlet No. 141, National Child Labor Committee (Inc.), 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.)

Chairman WALSH. It was testified to by the manager of the Western Union Telegraph Co. that those conditions did not exist anywhere in the United States at all.

Mr. McKELWAY. That is a great mistake.

Chairman WALSH. He testified to it in Chicago, just a few weeks ago.

Mr. McKELWAY. Here is something I might as well put in the record, on the night messenger service in Virginia, by Mr. Lewis W. Hine. Here is the gist of it. This is 1911 [reading]:

"After numerous confidential conversations with messenger boys, in all the large cities of Virginia (as recorded herein), I find that conditions are the same in this State as they are in most of the other States we have investigated. The ready familiarity with the red-light district that these night messengers gain in a few weeks—the fact they are permitted to work at night as young as 14—also that the day messengers in the day and the early evening are thrown into that district more or less; the fluctuating character of the service (the majority of the boys I interviewed having been in the work but a few weeks or months), all these repeat the story of previous investigations of this character in other States, except that limited time did not permit making so searching an investigation as some of the rest have been. The short term of service rendered by many of the boys indicates something radically wrong with the system of employing young, fickle, irresponsible boys; and, moreover, it increases manifold the number of boys who are affected by the contact and acquaintance with this form of vice."

That is the general summary of the situation.

I have had some terrific contests with the telegraph companies in different States. I had one in Florida, in which I got Mr. Belvedere Brooks very closely involved in the matter. He was down there on other business, and I understood he had agreed to a bill, as it was drawn up, but his agent opposed it, and published a pamphlet on the subject, which I have here.

(Document referred to by witness was submitted in printed form. It is entitled "Senate Bill No. 160; House Bill No. 296. If the Child Labor Bill Becomes a Law, How It Will Affect the Telegraph Companies, the Public Service, and Messenger Boys." Democrat Job Print, Tallahassee, Fla.)

Chairman WALSH. What was the bill?

Mr. McKELWAY. He quotes the bill here. It had a 14-year age limit for day-work, and 18 years for night work.

Chairman WALSH. For messenger boys only?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; and they wanted that modified so as to apply to cities of 25,000 population or more, which I think would only have taken in one city, Jacksonville, and perhaps Tampa.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had any contests in any other States in which the company took part?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; in Georgia, just after the New York law was passed, which made 21 years the age limit, and which the presidents of these companies agreed to. I tried to get the same law passed in Georgia, and I have here a stenographic report of the hearing before the committee. I had it taken down because I thought it was of historic interest. They employed an attorney to oppose the bill, and finally forced the age limit down to 16.

Chairman WALSH. Who employed an attorney?

Mr. McKELWAY. The Western Union and the Postal, both; they were both represented, and their managers testified in this; I will put this in the record.

Chairman WALSH. Yes; I wish you would.

(Witness submitted document in printed form, entitled "Arguments Before the Committee on Labor and Labor Statistics of the Georgia House of Representatives on the Night Messenger Bill, in the hall of the House of Representatives, State Capitol, Atlanta, Ga., 5 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, July 27, 1910.")

Chairman WALSH. You said something about Belvedere Brooks being personally present in Florida.

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; he was there, and I met him and talked with him about the situation, and he made this general stipulation, that if we asked simply for an age limit of 18 years for night work, instead of 21, which limit we were insisting on, that he would not have any opposition to the bill; so we fixed the age limit at 18 years in the Florida law, and this agent in Florida—I think his name is Maxwell—did all that he could to oppose the bill and had that pamphlet circulated—and I protested to Mr. Brooks and sent a number of telegrams to him, and I have one addressed to me here, from Mr. Brooks, and this is my reply [reads]:

"Yours received. I presume all the harm that Mr. Maxwell was capable of accomplishing has already been done. Am writing more fully, but meanwhile suggest that as only his opposition is apparent here, best proof of good faith would be passage of bill unamended. Others matters can be settled afterwards. Signed, A. J. McKelway."

I have other correspondence, and if you want to put it in evidence in the record, all right.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would, please.

(See McKelway Exhibit No. 2.)

Chairman WALSH. Can you state the purport of it now?

Mr. McKELWAY. They pretended to object to the machinery we had in the law for the enforcement of it, regarding the requiring of a certificate for the employment of boys under 16, the general certificate plan which is in effect in all the laws. Then they said that it would work a hardship in the smaller towns; that they would have to close up the offices at night in the smaller towns because they only had one messenger and could not employ two,

Chairman WALSH. Why could they not employ two?

Mr. McKELWAY. Because it would cost them more; they could not employ an older boy just to carry messages between 8 and 10 o'clock at night; I don't remember all of the arguments used.

Chairman WALSH. You can submit it then.

(See McKelway Exhibit No. 2.)

Mr. McKELWAY. We had a contest with what is known as the Theater Trust in New Orleans and New Mexico. They defeated our bill in New Mexico, the whole bill, because of the proposition that children under 14 should not be employed on the stage in the daytime, and under 16 at night; the whole fight was on that clause. In New Orleans we succeeded in changing the law, putting it in the discretion of the judge of the juvenile court as to whether children should be employed. Those are about the only backsets we have had.

I have been engaged in some Federal legislation as well as State legislation, living here in Washington.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you about that.

Mr. McKELWAY. Very well.

Chairman WALSH. State what effort has been made, and the logical basis for a Federal act and the necessity for it, if you think there is such.

Mr. McKELWAY. The first legislation which I was engaged on here was the District of Columbia child-labor bill, passed in 1908. Our chief opponent there was a Senator who was a glass manufacturer from West Virginia.

Then, I was interested in getting that appropriation for the Federal investigation into woman and child labor that was passed in 1892, and the children's bureau was established largely through the activity of the child-labor committee, and we had opposition to that of a very peculiar kind. Organs of the cotton manufacturers seemed to think it was an opening wedge for something else, and did not understand it. Most of the votes passed against it were from southern Senators and Representatives; there was considerable opposition to it.

The Beveridge child-labor bill was the first attempt, I think, at Federal child-labor legislation. Senator Beveridge made a great speech on the subject, taking about three days in talking on the bill, which, however, was never reported out of the committee. Mr. Beveridge's child-labor bill put the burden upon the carriers. It said the railroad companies and other transportation companies of any kind should not transport in interstate commerce the products of mines or factories or sweatshops employing children under 14 years of age. The bill, as I said, never got out of the committee. They never even had a hearing on it.

Our own National Child Labor Committee was somewhat divided on the question of Federal legislation for a while, but we have come unanimously to the old conclusion that it is necessary to make a proper standard and enforce the laws; and the Palmer child-labor bill, as originally introduced, put the penalty upon the manufacturer. It said that no manufacturer where children were employed under 14 years of age in the daytime, or under 16 years of age at night, or employed under 16 years of age for more than eight hours a day, should ship their products in interstate commerce; but the Committee on Labor in the House changed that bill, and I think removed some constitutional objections to it by the form in which it is now cast. I will read the first section [reads].

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any producer or manufacturer or dealer to ship or to deliver for shipment in interstate commerce the products of any mine or quarry which have been produced in whole or in part by the labor of children under the age of sixteen years, or the products of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment which have been produced in whole or in part by the labor of children under the age of fourteen years, or by the labor of children between the age of fourteen years and sixteen years who work more than eight hours in any one day or more than six days in any week or after the hour of seven o'clock post meridian or before the hour of seven o'clock antemeridian."

That bill passed the House at the last session by a vote of 232 to 43, and it came over to the Senate pretty late, when it could only be taken up by unanimous consent, and Overman, of South Carolina, objected, and brought along a petition from the manufacturers of South Carolina, who appealed to him to not support it. In the proceedings before the committee, three or four South Carolina manufacturers appeared in opposition to the bill, and that was the whole opposition we had in the hearing; and the Committee on Labor sent broadcast invitations to the manufacturers' associations and individual manufacturers to let them know if there was any opposition to this bill. I think there is a pretty general feeling among employers, most of whom do not employ children at all, that a standard of legislation on this subject would be very desirable, to remove the alleged disadvantage which one State suffers by having a better child-labor law than a bordering State.

Chairman WALSH. Did you make any special study of that matter, in interstate commerce?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. It has been urged very strongly, especially in the textile industries, that the State is put at a very great disadvantage.

Mr. McKELWAY. I can not see how it would be put at a disadvantage by the Federal law. The argument has been persistent and insistent that when we go to one State——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). That is what I mean.

Mr. McKELWAY. I meet that everywhere. In Texas when the—in the last legislature there I got the manufacturers together to agree to a pretty good child-labor bill, which was amended a little in the house, and they opposed it and defeated it. They said they wanted Federal legislation; they wanted a 15-year age limit there, and they were at a disadvantage in competition with other States. The Tennessee manufacturers have said several times that they wanted Federal legislation.

The American Cotton Manufacturers, which is a Southern organization, met at Memphis on the 14th of April of this year, and an indorsement was given the proposition to establish an American merchant marine by the right of subsidy, and a protest was made against the operation of a uniform child-labor law, and the legislation pending in courts to require the branding of goods. I suppose this refers to this provision that the manufacturer must have a certificate accompanying his goods saying they were not made by children under a stipulated age.

Chairman WALSH. Is the Federal law still being pushed by the committee?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; we have hopes of passing it during the next session of Congress; I know a majority of the Senate is in favor of it, and also the Members of the House, and if it goes to a vote I think it will be passed.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. McKelway, what has been the attitude of organized labor in the South toward the efforts to secure child-labor legislation, both as to their work and as to their education?

Mr. McKELWAY. So far as my personal experience goes, they have universally been on the side of better child-labor legislation and better education. I have worked in West Virginia and North Carolina and Georgia, Tennessee, and Texas. Our agent in West Virginia reported at this last session of the legislature that the glass workers' union, if that is the proper name for it, was opposed to the child-labor bill in West Virginia. I have heard from Gene Gordon, our representative in Louisiana, that the New Orleans Federation of Labor had been opposed to a higher standard of legislation, which she insisted on; but with those exceptions they have been universally with us, as far as I know.

Commissioner LENNON. What has been the attitude of the church in the South toward this legislation, as to declarations of synods and conferences? Have they been aggressive for the legislation, or indifferent to it, or what?

Mr. McKELWAY. I should hardly say aggressive. The Presbyterian General Assembly passed a resolution demanding child-labor reform, and some Methodist bodies, and some Episcopalian bodies, and some Catholic bodies, although they are careful about mixing up the church and state, as they say. I have had generally the cooperation and sympathy of ministers in this work. I should think the exception would be where the ministers were really subsidized by the manufacturers, where part of their salaries was paid by the mills, and most of them feel that they have a more important work than that of advocating child-labor reform; and to do that would injure their other work of ministerial guidance, although I have known some earnest advocates of child-labor reform from that source.

Commissioner LENNON. What have you observed as the effect upon the morals of the community of the employment of children—say as to the virtue of women and morality generally?

Mr. McKELWAY. That depends a great deal upon the locality. The ordinary cotton-mill village in the South is a rural community still, in spite of the people living together. They come from the country and the women are pure when they come there, and most of them remain pure. Sometimes in cotton mills located near cities I have heard some very bad things as to the morals of the people, and there has been some testimony to that effect. It depends a little on the tradition of the mills themselves. Some mills have a bad reputation and others have a good reputation. The most of them have good reputations as to the purity of their women.

Commissioner LENNON. What effect does the employment of children have upon the parent as to their being industrious and looking after their own affairs?

Mr. McKELWAY. I am speaking now of the South.

Commissioner LENNON. Yes; and I am also.

Mr. McKELWAY. In the cotton-mill villages when a man moves from the country with his family to the cotton mill, if it is a typical cotton mill, there is very little work that he can do. He can not learn to spin or weave. If there is some rough work about the mill or he can be employed as a watchman, or something of that sort, he can take work with the mill, but the tendency is for him, not finding a job, to be supported by his wife and children.

Commissioner LENNON. Then the support by his children does tend to make him an idler?

Mr. McKELWAY. Yes; or a vagrant; and we have some vagrant laws intended to reach that, in which a vagrant is defined to be where a man lives upon the earnings of his minor children.

Commissioner LENNON. What has been the effect upon the social or industrial unrest? Do you believe the employment of young children has had an effect upon that? You know that is primarily what this commission is appointed to study, the conditions of social unrest. How does this subject affect that?

Mr. McKELWAY. Well, that is a pretty broad question. There is a general popular resentment against the exploitation of children; there is no question about that. I think members of the labor unions feel that there is an economic question involved adverse to the best interests of labor. They are, I think, especially resentful of the employment of children, and they know more about the situation than most people do. I think there is a growing feeling of resentment among the operators themselves at their helplessness and about the employment of children.

They had a strike in Atlanta last year; I have not been to Atlanta since the strike in the Fulton Cotton & Packing Mill; and the reason we got through that legislation in Georgia last summer was the part of the bill against the employment of children under 14 years of age. Some had employed their own children under 14 years, and said they were obliged to do it, but they said they wanted a law to protect them.

Chairman WALSH. If there is any other suggestion, Mr. McKelway, that you want to make, we will be glad to have you do so, as you understand our trend here.

Mr. McKELWAY. I do not know that there is anything.

Chairman WALSH. If there is anything that will throw light on the condition in the South in pamphlet form that you wish to present, please do so.

Mr. McKELWAY. I will get them together for you.

(Mr. McKelway submitted the following pamphlets written by himself and issued by the National Child Labor Committee (Inc.), 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City: "Pamphlet No. 92. Child Labor in the Carolinas"; "Pamphlet No. 138. Child Labor in Georgia"; "Pamphlet No. 150. Child Labor in Tennessee"; "Pamphlet No. 169. Child Labor in Mississippi"; and "Pamphlet No. 171. Child Labor in Virginia." Also two other publications of the National Child Labor Committee, entitled "The Child's Burden in Oyster and Shrimp Canneries" and "The Uniform Child Labor Law. Fourth Edition. Revised February, 1912." Also other printed documents of the following titles: "Children Eligible for Employment in the Mills, Factories, and Manufacturing Establishments in the State of Alabama for the Year 1912. Brown Printing Co., Montgomery, Ala."; "An Argument in Favor of Exempting Cotton Mills and Other Textile Industries from the Proposed 54-Hour Labor Schedule"; "Hearings Before the Committee on Labor, House of Representatives (63d Cong., 2d sess.) on H. R. 12292 [Child-labor bill]. Feb. 27, Mar. 9, and May 22, 1914"; "H. R. Report No. 1400 (63d Cong., 3d sess.)"; and two newspaper clippings, "Merchant Marine by Subsidy Plan Warmly Endorsed—American Cotton Manufacturers at Memphis Endorse This Plan—Protest Against Child-Labor Law," Asheville (N. C.) Citizen, Apr. 15, 1915, and "Some Strong Child-Labor Facts, by J. S. Mills," the Atlanta News, no date.)

Mr. McKELWAY. With regard to the attitude of manufacturers, you will find within this volume of the Federal bureau report of the whole story of child-labor legislation in the South up until 1908 very carefully written.

(See McKelway Exhibit No. 2.)

Chairman WALSH. That is all, thank you, Mr. McKelway. You will be excused.

We will now adjourn until 2 o'clock p. m.

(Thereupon, at 12 o'clock noon, an adjournment was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION—2 P. M.

Chairman WALSH. Is Mr. Joseph Kobylak here?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Just take the chair, please.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOSEPH KOBYLAK.

Chairman WALSH. What is your name, please?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Joseph Kobylak.

Chairman WALSH. What is your occupation?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Coal miner.

Chairman WALSH. What is your nationality?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Bohemian.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you been in this country, Mr. Kobylak?

Mr. KOBYLAK. For the last 12 years.

Chairman WALSH. What has been your business all the time you have been here?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, 10 years—8 years acting in the coal mines, and since that time I helped the coal miners on the coal tipple as checkweighman.

Chairman WALSH. What was your occupation in the old country, Bohemia, before you came here?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Coal miner.

Chairman WALSH. How old a man are you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Thirty-three years old.

Chairman WALSH. Are you a man of family?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Married in this country or the old country?

Mr. KOBYLAK. In this country.

Chairman WALSH. How many languages do you speak?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I speak German, Bohemian, Slavish, Polish, Lithuanian, and a little bit of English.

Chairman WALSH. And where have you worked as miner? Tell us now in what localities.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Gentlemen, I have these statements prepared in writing so I can give you everything exactly, with the dates.

Chairman WALSH. Well, I just want to locate you here first; you are the gentleman that reported to this commission some time ago that you had been arrested for high treason?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Against the State?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And that you like to make a statement?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. In regard to your experiences?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, you say you have that prepared in writing?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Very well. You may go ahead and read it, Mr. Kobylak.

Mr. KOBYLAK (reading):

"GENTLEMEN OF THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS: Having received your call to appear as witness and testify of my own experiences with the courts and with the officers of the law, before I will proceed to tell you, gentlemen of the committee, of my unrightful arrests, charges, and unlawful persecutions, which has greatly injured and damaged my name and my dear family, viz, trespasser, mule killer, speak-easy operator, black hander, rioter, highwaymen like intent to injure, robber, raper, and treason charge. I face last in this present 13-month coal-miner strike in eastern Ohio, compelled to stay in jail under $10,000 bond.

"Kindly note that I am not a salary-paid officer—nor an office keeper—I am only a mine-camp local officer—simply a foreign coal miner.

"Gentlemen of the committee will pardon me for mistakes I make in talking the American language.

"Now, I must go little into my life, to show you the road I have traveled in this time. In 1903 I migrated to America. I was 21 years of age. Located in Jefferson County, Ohio, and began work in the coal mines and joined the union—United Mine Workers of America.

"Now comes the year 1906. I worked in the Bradley mines property of the United States Coal Co. A strike took place in that district. There was no trouble. Everything went along peacefully. The United States Coal Co. condemned our union, U. M. W. of A., and immediately hired a few hundred private guards, generally called gunmen, together with hundreds of scabs and proceeded with their work.

"Striking miners at Plum Run mines, also property of the United States Coal Co., under the threats of brute force by the hirelings of the coal camp, they, the miners, had to surrender—then the camp began to mine coal. The same company attempted to do with Bradley mines—put up reflectors—made trenches for themselves—troubling the strikers, etc. The miners have seen all this—what to do. The strikers at Plum Run received no help, had to surrender. Bradley strikers were in the same position. Surrender? No. So they decided to defend their homes and their families. The hirelings make no progress, so they get ready for wholesale murder.

"July 1, 1906, for more than four hours the gunmen fire continuously into the strikers' homes. Didn't care for women and children. Their motto was to kill whole business—looked to me so. The strikers thank the traitor the hirelings had among themselves. From him the miners received warning in time so they place themselves with their families in safety, and yet the bloodshed took place. Then the Ohio State Militia came. Strikers would not give up the strike. The United States Coal Co. began to realize the strikers would not give up, so the company recognized the union and strikers returned to work.

"The strike lasted four months and contributed lots to my experience.

"In 1907 I changed the work place from Bradley to Plum Run mines. I found there big misunderstandings among the miners, which caused big trouble to themselves and to the union, and the company had always benefited by it. It was and is now the greatest enemy of the organized labor and at present this company hires nonunion labor. The working conditions were bad and the bosses rough to the miners. Local strike was called, miners divided themselves—some struck and some went to work. Little riot took place and the result was strike was lost. Some were arrested and lots discharged.

"Mr. William Green, district president of the Ohio miners, U. M. W. of A., and Mr. Watkins, subdistrict president of the eastern Ohio miners, U. M. W. of A., appeared on the scene at Plum Run to reorganize that place and put it right. A meeting was called of all the miners and I was appointed by the already named officers of U. M. W. of A. for mine committee to represent the coal miners. Appointment was accepted unanimously by the miners, and by the mine management of the United States Coal Co.

"I had a big job on hand. First, I began to organize the miners and had success. The miners, well organized, naturally began to ask for their rights which they were entitled to under the mining law and agreement to which the company had agreed and signed. Many times the company willfully violated the contract and the law, even over my protest they did."

Chairman WALSH. Violated what contract?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Between the miners and the coal companies.

Chairman WALSH. How did they violate the contract?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They have signed a contract that the miners have a right to pick out a checkweighman from among their own ranks, and they have not done that.

Chairman WALSH. They would not do that?

Mr. KOBYLAK. The men elect me in the right way, and they say the mine had asked to remove me.

Commissioner LENNON. They broke the contract by shutting the mines down without regular process under the agreement; wasn't that it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They violated the contract by shutting the mine and asked that I should be removed. When the contract granted the right to the miners and also the mining law.

Chairman WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KOBYLAK (reading):

"In all cases I was the spokesman. It was my duty to be, as member of the mine committee. With a few shutdowns and with help of the mine inspector we compel the company to respect a little the mining law of Ohio.

"Better working conditions we have secured with strikes. We were compelled to take such action because the bosses refused to grant the miners anything they asked for. The bosses were not satisfied with my actions, they looked for chance to get rid of me and began with persecution. Mule killer in the mine was the first charge against me, but their plan was so weak that they give it up. Then they shut down the mine in which I work, refuse to place me in other mine, but the miners all together, including those who were hired in 1906 as strike breakers to break the union by the United States coal Co. were organized also, elected me for their checkweighman to represent them on the coal tippie and see that their coal is weighed correctly, and for secretary and treasurer.

"Immediately the company shut down all of their mines. This happened in September, 1909. The company violated the contract and the mining law. Mr. William Green, president of the Ohio miners, took up the case, and when company refused to comply with the law or contract he ordered a strike. The strike lasted 16 days. The company gave up, and I was reinstated as checkweighman, but the company did not stop working to get me out."

Chairman WALSH. Had you had a checkweighman before you went in at that tippie?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir. [Continues reading:]

"It proceeded with its crooked business in the name of violence, but my fellow mine workers stood with me and prevented all kinds of dirty attacks made by the representatives of the United States Coal Co. against me, which caused about six more strikes, in all of which the company was the loser."

Chairman WALSH. What objections did the operators have to your being checkweighman, Mr. Kobylak, if any?

Mr. KOBYLAK. The miners would appoint me to represent the miners in the mine. I was spokesman, and in determining the rights, you know, under the contract.

Chairman WALSH. Before this time?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Then your idea is that they objected to you because you were the spokesman of the miners?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What did they say? How did they put it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, they simply say, "We don't want him."

Chairman WALSH. Did they say why they did not want you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No.

Chairman WALSH. All right, go ahead.

Mr. KOBYLAK (reading):

"One evening four policemen break into my home, arrested me without warrant, drove me for about 7 miles before squire, and charge that I am speak-easy operator."

Chairman WALSH. You say "speak-easy operator"?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. What is that?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Selling liquor; and they dragged me off 7 miles, and I had to walk back. They did this so I would not appear on the tippie the next day, and so the miners would get excited if you remove me; they will have no miners on the tippie, and this speak-easy business is a serious thing among the miners, because you know it is a very bad kind of business.

Chairman WALSH. Well, was there an information ever filed against you for running the speak-easy?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did they take you before the magistrate?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And did you have a trial?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes. They took me there before the squire and charge that I am a speak-easy operator, and he discharged me.

Chairman WALSH. He discharged you, and you went back home?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you had to walk back?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; after he asked me a few questions.

Chairman WALSH. Right there, did you keep a speak-easy at any time?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Go ahead.

Mr. KOBYLAK (reading):

"The squire turned me loose, and I walked back.

"One day two officers of the U. M. W. of A. come to my home and ask me for all union books, vouchers, receipts, bank book, and cash money. I wonder and ask what go on anyhow. 'Well,' officer answer, 'you are charged with taking the union money. You are charged so by the United States Coal Co.' Both went over the books and the money and found everything correct. They found that the charge was false."

If the gentlemen will excuse me I will read the report of those two men who went over the books at the special convention of the miners, and I will read the findings [referring to a large pamphlet]. This is the proceedings of the special convention of the subdistrict No. 5, of district No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, held in Wheeling, W. Va., in October, 1911. Vice President Rapp (?) said:

"In explanation of Brother Kobylak's book, I will say that I went over them, in company with Brother ———, and he got a detailed report, of which I can say I never saw a more complete set of books kept in a more honest way, everything to show for every cent that has come in and every cent that has went out. I never saw in my life a more complete set of books than I did in Brother Kobylak's books."

That is from one who went over the books. [Reads:]

"In the month of November, 1910, the company offered me monthly job—to quit the union and go on the company side. I ignored the offer."

Chairman WALSH. Who offered it to you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Offered by the superintendent three times, and the fourth time the manager, Mr. Bullitt(?) came from Cleveland.

Chairman WALSH. What job did they offer you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. To be the weigh boss.

Chairman WALSH. For the company?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; for the company. [Continues reading:]

"In a short time, January, 1911, shutdown of all the mines took place again, and the company demanded the removal of myself from all the miners. The company failed to break strike in about five months, so the company, in a conference at Cleveland, Ohio, made a new offer to the officers of the U. M. W. of A.; offered to pay for my lost time on strike, willing to buy my home and pay the expenses to move. I ignored the offer again. The company went on with the fight to get me out, but surrendered after 11 months of strike. During the 11 months' strike I was charged as a blackhand, but charge was dismissed. I was reinstated as checkweighman again, but only for short time."

At that time, gentlemen, we had a wise man in the prosecuting attorney, and he did not send out with guards and rifles after me. He simply sent a letter that he wished to see me. Here is the letter I have received from the prosecuting attorney, and I was charged for blackhanding. [Reading:]

[Office of the prosecuting attorney of Jefferson County, Steubenville, Ohio, Jay S. Paisley, prosecuting attorney.]

MAY 8, 1911.

Mr. JOE KOBYLAK, Rhodesdale, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: If possible, will you kindly call at my office in this city next Thursday morning, as I desire to talk with you about matters which will no doubt be of interest to you and perhaps beneficial.

Very truly, yours,

JAY S. PAISLEY.

"The company, aroused again, hired a practical robber for weigh boss and private guard. Weigh boss began to steal by wholesale the coal, digged and loaded by the miners. Of course, shutdown took place again. On the 10th day of July, 1912, union asked the company to remove the weigh boss. Later on they did and asked for investigation and that during that time I should stay off the tippie scale. That was granted to the company. I have proved the robbery, but the company motto was to keep me off forever for all prices.

"September 10, 1912, an attack was made on me in the company store when I waited for my mail by the new hired company guard and threatened with arrest. I protested because I was in the United States post office, yet I was arrested about half an hour later as a trespasser. The superintendent, acting as judge, turned me loose.

"September 25, 1912, a big meeting was called by Mr. John Moore, district president of the Ohio miners, and C. J. Albasin, subdistrict president of the United Mine Workers of America. In that meeting I was reelected as checkweighman on the coal tippie. A bloody riot took place at that meeting outside the union hall, but the meeting inside the hall went on peacefully. During the fight I was with the officers in the hall. Next morning myself, as per instructions and in the name of our constitution, contract, and the mining law, went on the tippie as miners' checkweighman, with the understanding that if the United States Coal Co. refused to have me there or try to shut down the mines I shall return to my home and the mine committee place other man in my place. Keep on working—it was to my satisfaction. The United States Coal Co. did not notify me or the mine committee or the local union officers at all about what it intended to do—plan was ready. As soon as I came to the tippie attack was made against me by the company guards. I was placed in hand chains and thrown in the jail at Smithfield, Ohio, charged with trespassing. The second day in jail was read to me another charge—inciting riot. The company put their guards in the union hall. The local union officers were suspended and new elected and proceeded with company guards in the union hall with their local business. In the Smithfield city there were enough farmers to buy near the whole city, yet the authorities refused to accept bond until two lawyers came from Steubenville, Ohio, and demanded the right under the law. The bond was then signed, and I was released from jail."

Chairman WALSH. Who went on your bond?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Farmer, for $500.

Chairman WALSH. Did they know you; were they friends of yours?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Simply surrounding farmers there.

Chairman WALSH. Who procured them to go on your bond, if anyone?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Nobody asked them to go; they simply volunteered to do so. [Reads:]

"The United States Coal Co. have gained what they were after for long years—kept the guards for the purpose to keep me off of their mines at Plum Run and Bradley. The guards are there to-day.

"I was trying to get work in the surrounding mines, but could get none—blacklisted. No money for leaving. I left my family—wife and four children—in Ohio and went to West Virginia and then to Pennsylvania. No work for me nowhere. Miners of the Penobscot mine, Pennsylvania, called a meeting and elected me for their checkweighman. I started work there in December, 1912. The working conditions were very bad. The miners asked the Penobscot Coal Co. from time to time to make better, but without result. So the miners all together lay off January 7, 1913; told the superintendent to fix up the mine; buy supplies so they all can work. Yet instead of buying supplies the company condemned the union miners and order the Pennsylvania State police. I was arrested again without warrant, placed in hand chains with eight other fellows, and tried in the company store at Penobscot (Pennsylvania) mine. This happened January 23, 1913; was charged as highwayman like intent to injure.

Chairman WALSH. What was that?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Like highwayman, intend to injure. That means I was on pike and would stop the workers when they go to work and threaten them not to go to work or I would kill them.

Chairman WALSH. What was the fact; had you had any trouble on the highway with any persons?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir; I was not even there. I was in Ohio. When the mines shut down I had nothing to do, so I went to my home. [Continues reading:]

"Two squires present. They had no business there. Penobscot district was outside their jurisdiction, as proved in big court at Washington, Pa., later on, and yet they open the court in said coal company store. Act brutal. I have protested and demanded they place us where we belong if they think we have violated any law. State police loosen my hands."

Chairman WALSH. Loosened your hands?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What were on your hands?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Chains, you know; handcuffs. [Reading:]

"Squire sentenced me to leave the Penobscot district inside of 24 hours. Ohio guard of Plum Run mines helping squire in the State of Pennsylvania after State police left. I could do nothing; had no money to defend myself. I left the State of Pennsylvania. Came back home to Ohio.

"In short time a special committee met me from Rush Run mines; asked me to be their checkweighman. I accept the offer. Meeting was called, and I was elected by secret vote with ballots. The United States Coal Co., with their guards, together with the Glen Run Coal Co., did all they could to prevent me to start work in the Rush Run mines, property of the Glen Run Coal Co., but failed.

"I start work February 3, 1913. Everything went along good, but the coal company didn't like that."

Chairman WALSH. Were you not checkweighman at that time?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How long had you been acting?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I started on February 3, 1913, and was arrested on March 29.

Chairman WALSH. Now, before March 29, had there been any outbreak of any kind?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir; everything went along peaceful.

Chairman WALSH. Had you had any meetings at which things were discussed?

Mr. KOBYLAK. We had meetings every two weeks; yes.

Chairman WALSH. Had there been any discussion with reference to your work as checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you had any disputes with your company with reference to weights of coal?

Mr. KOBYLAK. We had a few times when the scale was wrong; they had made the correction, you know; and that is all. [Reading:]

"March 29, 1913, I was again arrested by the guards on the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad, placed in jail at Smithfield, and tried in that city, where the coal company had control. Charged as trespasser again, found guilty, and fined with the lightest sum of money by mayor to be found in the law book, namely, $5. Even the citizens of that city have protested. No! There was no pardon for Joseph Kobylak. I went to jail, transferred to the Jefferson County jail at Steubenville, Ohio. There I asked through attorney at law for a new trial. The result was, 'No.'

"In a very short time the Glen Run Coal Co. was compelled by the Rush Run miners to deliver powder, according to the mining law, into the mine. The company got mad and raised the price on powder. The miners refused to buy and went on strike August 29, 1913. Big meeting was called September 5, 1913, by the officers of the United Mine Workers of America. The coal company then reduced the price. The miners won the strike, and I was after the meeting again arrested, placed in hand chains, thrown into jail, and later released on $500 bond charged with attempt to rape. Grand jury dismissed the case. I responded and sued the party for injuring my character. At the last moment the party came to my home and plead guilty—told me that he was a victim of one of the private guards of the United States Coal Co. Asked me not to destroy his home and to forgive him, which I did, and the following statement is the result."

I have the statement signed by him and witnesses, which settled that case at that time, because he was poor fellow.

Chairman WALSH. That was the case you brought against him?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What did you sue him for?

Mr. KOBYLAK. $2,500. [Reading:]

"I, James Kolar, hereby admit that on or about the 10th day of August, 1913, and in the month of August, A. D. 1913, at Bradley and Dillonvale, in the county of Jefferson and State of Ohio, I made certain defamatory statements of and concerning the moral character of Joseph Keylask; said statements being contained in the petition of Joseph Kobylak for damages filed in the court of common pleas of Jefferson County;

"Now therefore let it be known that I, James Kolar, hereby retract, withdraw, disavow, and recall said defamatory statements and admit that the same were erroneous and untrue, and that I was persuaded and induced to make said remarks and statements by one Thomas Pyle, a private guard in the employ of the United States Coal Co., at Plum Run, Jefferson County, Ohio.

"In addition to this retraction, I have agreed to pay all the costs in the action commenced against me for damages by Joseph Kobylak, including his attorney's fees, the witnesses, and his individual expenses.

"I make this statement in justice to Joseph Kobylak and for the purpose of righting the wrong I have done him.

" JAMES KOLAR.

" Signed in presence of :

" JAMES PITNY.

" BLANCHE ROSE."

"Then came the year 1914. The contract between the miners and the coal operators expired March 31, 1914. We, the miners, were willing to work until May 20; that day the Green law 'run of mine' took effect. The Ohio coal operators refused to let us work to that date and run the miners out, and shut them down April 1, 1914. Locked out over 40,000 miners. Ignored the new law 'run of mine,' and the fight began. About three months later the operators in the Hocking Valley district and the Cambridge district agreed to abide by the law of State, contract being signed with the miners July last, under which 27,000 miners returned to work.

"The eastern Ohio mine owners began then troubling the peaceful strikers. Through their agents and gunmen they have used all kinds of tricks to break up the ranks of the strikers; begin with open shop, hired nonunion men, evicting the miners' families out of their homes, etc. When Mr. Joe Ettor was invited by 16 local unions to speak to them on the labor question in general last June the coal operators thought that would be a nice chance to make trouble, and then to get the State militia, and then breaking the strike if possible. I honor Gov. Cox for his wise act in keeping the militia home. The company's provokers were on the job with their press, but failed. So the company provokers began to think of other plans, especially the agents and guards of the United States Coal Co. got busy; organized trouble at Bradley, which took place in July. Immediately Mr. Willard, manager of the company, telephoned to the Jefferson County Sheriff and ordered him to go to Bradley and fix up the strikers that Mr. Willard didn't like, and that he, Mr. Willard, would pay the bill (last words I took of testimony given by sheriff in court). Sheriff fulfilled the orders and sent automobile after automobile with deputy sheriffs to Bradley; had security to pay them $5 per day. Wholesale arrests began, the deputy sheriffs acting brutal, walking among the strikers' women, threatening them, laughed at them, saying, 'Are you hungry?' and using profane language; 'We will feed you with this kind of bread,' showing them, the women, gun, bullets, and throwing the bullets from one hand to another.

"I was arrested at Dillonvale July 20, 1914, without warrant again. I demanded it, but I got rough answer back. Drove me to the county seat. There I found out that I was charged with 'treason'; placed me in the county jail at Steubenville and kept me there 43 days under $10,000 bond. I don't know what to say now. I guess the authorities did this for fun. The United States Coal Co. have so demanded and the authorities serve the bosses well. It looks to me so."

Chairman WALSH. Who filed the information against you, charging you with high treason?

Mr. KOBYLAK. One was by the deputy sheriff, and demanded by the United States Coal Co.

Chairman WALSH. What was the specification of treason; what did they say in the information that you did; that you levied war?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I have a copy of the warrants, if the gentlemen will so kindly read them.

Chairman WALSH (reading):

"THE STATE OF OHIO,

"County of Jefferson, ss:

"Before me, Henry F. Lawler, a justice of the peace in and for the said county, personally came Edward D. Lucas, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposeth and saith that on or about the 16th day of July, A. D. 1914, in the county of Jefferson aforesaid, one Joseph Kobylak unlawfully, willfully, and maliciously did unlawfully levy war against this State, and knowingly adhere to the enemies of this State, giving them aid and comfort, in violation of section 12392 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio.

" EDWARD D. LUCAS."

These are copies?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any information filed against individuals at that time charging them with treason?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No.

Chairman WALSH. Was there any such information filed in the State, to your knowledge? I thought I heard there was some kind of information filed against Joseph Ettor?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; later on.

Chairman WALSH. In the same jurisdiction?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; but in another county. This happened in Jefferson County, and the same charge was made against Ettor in another county.

Chairman WALSH. Were you arraigned on this charge of treason?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; they brought me before a justice of the peace.

Chairman WALSH. And the justice of the peace fixed your bail?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; at $10,000.

Chairman WALSH. Did you endeavor to get bail?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I was not in position at that time to get $10,000.

Chairman WALSH. How long did you remain in jail?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Forty-three days.

Chairman WALSH. How did you finally get out?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I had my wife and five children, and they were eight months on strike, and they had nothing at home to eat; and the citizens of the city began to find out what was going on, and they simply found it out—that it was only fixed up in the name of the company—so they reduced the bond from $10,000 to $2,500, and I was released.

Chairman WALSH. Did some one go on your bond?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; farmers went on my bond.

Chairman WALSH. Who was Mr. Lucas, who files this information?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Deputy sheriff of Jefferson County.

Chairman WALSH. I see here is another information that looks like it might be an amended information that Commissioner Weinstock called my attention to, dated July 20, 1914.

Mr. KOBYLAK. That is the date it happened.

Chairman WALSH. It says:

THE STATE OF OHIO, County of Jefferson, ss:

Before me, Henry F. Lawler, a justice of the peace in and for the said county, personally came ———, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposeth and saith that on or about the ——— day of ———, A. D. 191—, in the county of Jefferson aforesaid, one ———, unlawfully, willfully, and maliciously having knowledge that certain persons about to commit treason, unlawfully and willfully omitted and refused to give information thereof to the governor of this State, a judge of this State, or the President of the United States, in violation of section 12393 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio.

EDWARD D. LUCAS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, in the county aforesaid, this 20th day of July, A. D. 1914.

HENRY F. LAWLER,
Justice of the Peace.

I see that is a different section; were two charges presented against you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have information of any person who was going to commit treason?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Or who was going to levy war against the State?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you levy war against the State yourself?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, when your bond was fixed at $2,500 you say you were released on bail?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you ever go back for trial?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I demanded hearing, and it was granted to me by the probate judge, and when the time arrived I had 11 witnesses, and the prosecuting attorney protested against it, and the probate judge accepted his protest and postponed the hearing, and then the grand jury, when they were in session, refused to indict me and postponed it to the next grand jury, and then the next grand jury met, and so they dismissed the case.

Chairman WALSH. You were still under bond all that time?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; still under bond.

Chairman WALSH. How long a time elapsed between the discharge of the first grand jury and the convening of the second grand jury?

Mr. KOBYLAK. About a month.

Chairman WALSH. When you were discharged, did you come into open court?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How did you get information you could go about your way?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I got a telephone from my attorney—from my lawyer.

Chairman WALSH. What year did you come to this country?

Mr. KOBYLAK. 1903.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The allegation of that John Doe information is for acts committed in 1901?

Chairman WALSH. No; this is meant for 1914; the numeral is not carried out.

Go ahead, Mr. Kobylak.

Mr. KOBYLAK (reading):

"They keep on arresting and rearresting me under all kinds of charges. Yet I didn't have no trial, even a heading, this time in Jefferson County seat.

"The trouble with me was that I was active among the strikers not to give up and help strengthen the solidarity of the strikers, to compel the mine owners, the violators of the Ohio law, to respect the State law, namely, 'run of mine.' The coal barons struck against the 'run of mine' State law, starving thousands of miners and their families. They were not charged with 'treason'; they were not enemies to the State. Oh, no; they were safe. But myself, on the other hand, I commit the awful crime of 'treason,' because I am a union man, believer in one industrial union of all the workers. I think I have that right. The capitalists are members of their union; the company are believers in trusts, which they already practice. I believe to defend ourselves when we are faced with threats of brute force, like our brothers were at Colorado, Michigan, and other places.

"I am married in this country, I have now six little children, and am a citizen of the United States. I have no show in the courts of justice at all. I was not prosecuted, but persecuted, by the authorities whenever the bosses have asked it.

"My opinion and conclusions regarding the law and its enforcement in connection with industrial matters generally I have not very much to say. However, I do welcome laws which give protection to the working class.

"I come to the conclusion that the pathway for a better, higher, and nobler life of all lays up to the workers themselves. We, the workers, need education—free press, free speech, and free assemblage is most necessary for our progress and to new life. Keep the stoppers off free press, speech, and assemblage away, together with all kinds of guards from labor meetings, and we will have peace soon."

If the gentlemen will allow me to read a report of Senator Green regarding this United States Coal Co. in open convention——

Chairman WALSH (interrupting). The report of whom?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Of Senator Green; he was president of the Ohio miners five or six years ago, but he is now State senator. [Reads:]

"Senator GREEN. With the permission of the convention I would like to make a few remarks. I may be able to throw a little light on this proposition now pending if there are no objections.

"When I was president of the district organization Brother Joe Kobylak was elected checkweighman at Plum Run, and when he was elected checkweighman the United States Coal Co. refused to allow him to go on the tippie. As a result of that I ordered a strike at the mine, and had a conference with Mr. Willard and the mine committee at Plum Run. At that conference a settlement was reached and we compelled the United States Coal Co. to allow Brother Kobylak to go on the tippie.

"It seems that ever since that time the United States Coal Co. has kept up their opposition to Brother Kobylak acting as checkweighman for the miners at Plum Run."

I have also a letter here, there was a different kind of business, and this boy is clerk of Berry County, Ohio, and this letter is from Shawnee, Ohio, and is as follows [reads]:

"I have made more money than I would make up there, and I did not have to steal to make it, neither. How is the new weighmaster cutting it? Is he honest or not?"

Then he went on with personal matters [reads]:

"Joe, you watch yourself and be on the guard, as they will try to get you, as I told you when I was there; you are too honest for them," and so forth.

This is the letter from the man when the weighmaster asked him to steal the coal that resigned and quit and said he would not steal, and went back home and wrote me this letter, warning me to be on my guard.

Commissioner LENNON. Are you working now, Mr. Kobylak?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir. We were over 13 months on strike.

Commissioner LENNON. The strike was settled a few days ago?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Last Saturday night.

Chairman WALSH. Did you at any time own your own home, Mr. Kobylak?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; I owned two homes; and when I got married my wife had three cows and was selling milk, and she put up a home, and I was working in the mine on the machine and I had a home.

Chairman WALSH. Did you have them paid for?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What was the value of them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. $2,500.

Chairman WALSH. Both of them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Did you save any money as a miner aside from this?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; when we start, you know, and I was working on the machine.

Chairman WALSH. What salary did you receive as checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. $3.44 a day.

Chairman WALSH. Did you retain your property through all this trouble?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir; when they began to persecute me so I had to sell the cows and everything, and then the home, now I have to lose home, it belongs to the lawyer that loaned me money in my troubles. They have taken my home, but they have published I am the property destroyer, and the fact remains that they have destroyed my property.

Chairman WALSH. How much have you had to pay attorneys for defending you in your various cases?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Pretty near $200, between $150 and $200.

Chairman WALSH. How much money do you receive as treasurer of your organization?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I have received $6 when I was working and when idle I received nothing.

Chairman WALSH. Six dollars per month?

Mr. KOBYLAK. For treasurer, and $6 for financial secretary.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did the company take the same attitude toward any other checkweighman as they did against you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir; not in that section; no, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, what is your theory of this record you gave as the record of a great many series of troubles, and from your standpoint a very vindictive pursuit of you personally? What is your idea as to what caused that? What was there about you or your actions that would incite that animosity?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Gentlemen, I would say, not knowing any better, of course, there is a lot of foreigners, and I was the best spokesman in the English language, and they appointed me as mine committee to interpret matters, and they told me to be straight, and I was straight, and when they asked me to do something like maybe this kind I objected.

Chairman WALSH. Who told you to be straight?

Mr. KOBYLAK. The officers, to be straight; and I was working straight and demanding the rights under the law and the contract, and they worked against me.

Chairman WALSH. The officers of what?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Of the local union.

Chairman WALSH. You speak more languages than the average foreigner?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. And you were the medium that they used to present their grievances to their employers?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, was there anyone else there in that district similarly situated that spoke the same number of languages that you did and took the same course that you did, approximately, or about the same course that you did? Do you understand what I mean?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; I do. No; I don't know that there was any other man.

Chairman WALSH. You are the only one that spoke that number of languages and were fit to do that work?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Of course, there was in the other district or other counties, there might be, but in that particular place there was nobody but myself.

Chairman WALSH. I was going to ask you another thing: Now, you called the attention of many persons to this record that had been made against you, or that you claimed was made against you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. What do you mean?

Chairman WALSH. You called attention to the troubles that you had and had somebody communicate with this commission some time ago and asked to be here?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Some months ago, many months ago?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, after a considerable lapse of time a subpoena was served on you to appear before this commission?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, did the newspapers publish anything in regard to your being summoned to appear?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Have you the newspaper clipping?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir. I have one.

Chairman WALSH. Read that to the record, if it is the one I think it is.

Mr. KOBYLAK (reading):

"Kobylak May Be Deported—Rush Run Miner May Face Charge of Treason at Washington—Accused of Being Follower of Ettor in Strike Zone.

"It is entirely probable that Joseph Kobylak, Rush Run (Ohio) miner, will be haled before the officials of the Department of Labor and the Immigration officials in Washington, D. C., in the next few weeks to face a charge of deportation from the country on a charge of treason.

"Kobylak is accused of being one of the followers of Joseph J. Ettor, famous labor leader of the Industrial Workers of the World, who visited Belmont County and the strike zone last fall. He was one of the men indicted by the Jefferson County grand jury"—

Chairman WALSH. Indicted by the grand jury?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Were you indicted?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I was not; Ettor was.

Chairman WALSH. Ettor was indicted?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir. [Continues reading article:] "For being implicated in the riot at Bradley when the I. W. W. movement was at its height, but the case never came to trial.

"It is said that Government officials have taken up the matter and will summon Kobylak before them for an investigation. It is uncertain whether or not Kobylak is a naturalized citizen, but as he has six or seven children born in this country his friends claim that he has an excellent chance of being cleared."

Chairman WALSH. Have you your citizenship papers?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Have you final papers?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Has ever any question been raised about your citizenship?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. What became of the charge of treason that was lodged against Mr. Ettor?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They have charged him with treason, and they asked him if he will leave the county—Belmont County. They will dismiss the case.

Chairman WALSH. They would dismiss the charge of high treason if he would leave the county?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And did he leave the county?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. And then they did not prosecute him any further?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No; let him loose immediately.

Commissioner LENNON. Is the I. W. W. an industrial movement, or is it a political movement?

10524 REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. KOBYLAK. It is an industrial movement.

Chairman WALSH. Now, was there something else you had there?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes. This is a letter, I think—it is one of the causes they got against me [reading]:

RHODESDALE, OHIO, October 3, 1912.

CHIEF INSPECTOR OF MINES, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Some of the miners working for the Glen Run Coal Co., Cleveland, Ohio, in the Edgar mines, Nos. 1 and 2, located 2 miles east of Dillonvale, Ohio, Jefferson County, report to me about tippie of said mine that said tippie there is absolutely rotten, dangerous for the miners to work there on said old, rotten tippie. They further reported that in quitting time come on said tippie about 200 miners to see their weight on the checkweighman sheet. Some of the practical miners working there claim that if nobody will take care of said old rotten tippie and the work will go on continuously some these days will break down and kill and injure lot of the miners. Kindly give careful consideration to this short report and investigate before will be too late.

Yours, very truly,

Jos. KOBYLAK, Secretary.

Chairman WALSH. To whom was that letter sent, Mr. Kobylak?

Mr. KOBYLAK. To the chief mine inspector of the State of Ohio.

This is the reply [reading]:

STATE OF OHIO, STATE MINING DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, Ohio, October 5, 1912.

Mr. JOSEPH KOBYLAK,

Secretary L. U. No. 2735, Rhodesdale, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: We have your letter of 3d instant this morning in regard to condition of tippie at Nos. 1 and 2, Edgar mine of the Glen Run Coal Co., near Dillonvale, in Jefferson County, Ohio.

I expect to be in your vicinity week after next and will make a personal inspection of said tippie sometime after the 14th of this month, as I have engagements every day up to that time.

Hoping this will be satisfactory, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

J. C. DAVIS,
Chief Inspector of Mines.

Chairman WALSH. Did he make an inspection of the tippie?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They did later on, because I have seen them making reparation there.

Chairman WALSH. Did they repair the condition and put it in proper shape?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Not exactly.

Chairman WALSH. What did they do about it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They went up and make it better, you know.

Chairman WALSH. Did the State make an inspection?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Made an inspection and forced the company, you know, to fix up the tippie.

Commissioner LENNON. Did you file that kind of complaints—is that the only one you ever filed or did you file other ones?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, I have filed lots of them—plenty of them.

Commissioner LENNON. Then, probably that may be the reason why the coal company did not like you around there?

Mr. KOBYLAK. It looked to me so, you know.

Chairman WALSH. Mr. Weinstock says he has some questions he would like to ask you.

Commissioner LENNON. Just one question, if you will pardon me.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Commissioner LENNON. Is Secretary Greene familiar with this story pretty well all through?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Mr. Greene, he is partially; yes.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You said, Mr. Kobylak, that the officers of your union told you to be honest?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As a checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And that you were honest as a checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you believe that the fact that you were honest as a checkweighman is one of the reasons, if not the principal reason, why the company treated you as it did?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is that right?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many checkweighmen were there in that territory?

Mr. KOBYLAK. A checkweighman on each mine.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many miners in the district?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, over 15,000 miners, and about 60 or 70 camps.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And each camp had its own checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Elected by the men?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. To represent them and see that they got a square deal?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, in reply to a question put to you by Commissioner Walsh as to whether the company had treated all the other checkweighmen as they did you, you answered that they had not; that you were the only one that had been treated that way?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; in that section.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, were these other checkweighmen, so far as you know, honest?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, I don't know about that, you know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have you any reason to believe that they were dishonest?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I know a few that they simply have to respect the company, you know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How do you mean—respect the company?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, when the coal is run over the screen and went in the pan, it is weighed, but if it is not weighed and is run direct in the railroad car and you don't say nothing, you know, then they like it; but when there was a coal car not weighed, I say, "Boys, we got to get the rest of the coal in the pan, so we can weigh it."

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, are we to understand that some of the checkweighmen were not square to their own fellow workers?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I will say not—some of them.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, would the men stand for that if they knew the man they elected to watch out for their interests was not square with them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. If they were organized well, they would remove him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And if he is allowed to remain at his job, it is fair to assume that they believe he is acting squarely for them? Well, now, if there are 60 or 70 mines there, and each of the mines has its checkweighman and these checkweighmen have held their jobs for some considerable time, it would indicate that the men believed them to be honest?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, yes; and some of them are honest, you know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. All right. Now, if the companies do not persecute them as you say they have persecuted you, the fact of your being honest and watching out for the interests of the men can not be the reason of that persecution, can it? If that were true and were the reasons, they would be persecuting all these other men who were honest as well as persecuting you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; but consider that I had work to do with all the foreigners on my hands, you know; all kinds of nationalities.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Haven't the other checkweighman foreigners?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir; mostly Americans and talk one language.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was yours the only company that employed foreigners?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, no; the foreigners was there, but the checkweighman was not in a position to speak so many different languages as I did, and the foreigners they naturally came to me and asked me to be their interpreter to carry grievances to the company.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were you acquainted with some of those other checkweighmen?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Well, those that you knew, were they Americans or foreigners?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Some were Americans and some were foreigners.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And what proportion of them, so far as you know, were Americans and what proportion were foreigners?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I might say about half and half.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And I suppose they had foreigners in every mine, didn't they?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; nearly every mine. Comparatively few Americans. Well, 20 or 30 or maybe 50 Americans, and the rest foreigners.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if it is true, the fact that you have stated, the fact that you said you were being honest and watching out for the welfare of the workers, as you said, instead of that being the cause of their treating you as they did, what was the cause? What had you done to antagonize them? Do you know what I mean by "antagonize"?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, the best way I can explain to you from my standpoint is that I insisted upon when they have signed a contract to respect it—to respect the contract.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, the men insisted upon it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And it was your duty to see that the contract was lived up to?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Certainly; as the mine committee it was my duty to do so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, whenever you found the company breaking a contract, it was your place to call attention to it and insist upon its being carried out?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And wasn't that the duty of every checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. That was the duty of every checkweighman.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then if there were checkweighmen did as you did, they would be an antagonistic against those—against all these others as against you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; every checkweighman who made an attempt they have removed him.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I understand you to say, Mr. Kobylak, that you are an I. W. W.?

Mr. KOBYLAK. If it is the understanding that the I. W. W. is the Industrial Workers of the World, yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, are the other checkweighmen also members of the I. W. W.?

Mr. KOBYLAK. A few.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Were they treated as you were treated?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then the fact of your being an I. W. W. was not the reason, because if that were the reason they would have treated all I. W. W.'s as they treated you. Therefore, there must be some other reason.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; but the company began the persecution before I became an Industrial Worker of the World. You see I joined that organization in 1912, and I had some cases on hand before that time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What proportion of the workers in your mine were members of the I. W. W.? How many miners employed in the mine you were working in? How many employed altogether?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, in that Plum Run mine, 450; and in the mine where I am working now, 300 or 350.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then out of that number, how many are members of the I. W. W.?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Only a few—10 or 15.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, were you one of the organizers of the I. W. W.?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were not. Did you preach or make speeches in favor of I. W. W.'ism?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I made talks on the streets—not speeches; but I have made talks on industrial unionism.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I see. Now, what doctrines did you preach to the men when you talked to them about I. W. W.'ism? What did you say to them about it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Naturally, I told them the only way is for the workers to be organized on the industrial field and not be divided into locals and districts, and so on; but to have one great union.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did you preach sabotage?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Sabotage?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes. You know what I mean by sabotage.

Mr. KOBYLAK. I know what it means.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Injuring the machinery of your employer when there is any trouble?

Mr. KOBYLAK. By sabotage I understand if the boss paid badly, you know——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. KOBYLAK (continuing). To not work so much. That is my understanding of sabotage.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; the real meaning of sabotage is to put sand in the machinery and to cripple the machinery in any way they can and to injure the employer and destroy as much of the product as they can and to destroy his profits wherever they can. That is the full meaning of sabotage, as I understand, as interpreted by the authorities.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, by sabotage, I mean if the boss refused to grant a living wage to the workers that he shall return bad work, you know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You have been familiar——

Mr. KOBYLAK (continuing). To injure his outcome, so as to compel him to——

Chairman WALSH. Finish; you were going to say something.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Did I cut you short?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No; proceed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, had you advocated that among the men? Had you told them it was their duty, if they did not get fair wages, to practice sabotage against the employers?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I did not have that chance.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You did not have that chance?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Why not?

Mr. KOBYLAK. If we go among the men and tell them use sabotage they are liable to take poison and throw in the water. It is impossible, you know——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). I don't quite understand you. You say you did not have the opportunity. If you talked to them you certainly had plenty of chance to say anything you wanted to say.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; but not in that position in public meeting, I was not in a position to say sabotage when I was not in a position to back up that statement. If somebody ask me a question and I will be taken, I could not get that far to preach sabotage.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, when was sabotage preached to the men, and by whom?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, I——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). You say sabotage is part of the propaganda of the I. W. W.'s?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; it is one.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The I. W. W.'s believe it is right and believe it ought to be done?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And they think they ought not to be punished for it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, if they believe that with a clear conscience, you could preach that to them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, yes; I take the position, if the I. W. W. can go around the country and organize the men, I will not be afraid to tell them, "If you workers, if your bosses treat you bad and threaten you and punish you, simply don't work so much, so you hurt them on the pocketbook." Naturally I think sabotage is used by capital as well in injuring the great numbers of people, and why should the worker not use the sabotage when they are injured if——

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). Well, would you, Mr. Kobylak, as an I. W. W., in preaching sabotage to your fellow workers, would you simply stop at saying to go slow on your work, or would you not go further and preach real sabotage? You know that going slow is not real sabotage? That is simply called soldiering, slowing up. That is a very different thing from sabotage. That is, I may go slow, and yet not practice sabotage. I only practice sabotage when I injure either the product of my employer or his machinery. Now, are we to understand that you would stop at simply saying to the boys, "Go slow," or that you would preach sabotage as the I. W. W. teaches you to preach sabotage?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I wish to make it plain, you know; but I am not in position, as my feeling is to explain to you, but am short of the English language, is the cause that I can not explain so you can understand, as I believe it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Take your own time and explain it in your own way. I think you can make yourself understood.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, gentlemen, I rather, if you desire to put this question, that a higher officer tell you what sabotage is, not a little worker. I ask you to exonerate me from this question.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were selected by your fellow workers as their representative, and they must have had confidence in your intelligence and your ability to present their case; and, surely, you ought to be able to explain to us what you said to your workers when you talked I. W. W.'ism to them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; the I. W. W. meaning is the one industrial union; but it does not say use sabotage in all cases, you know.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You had strikes, of course, and were in strikes?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And talked to the men during the strikes, did you not?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you were present when an agreement was finally entered into, and the men went back to work?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And was the agreement satisfactory to the men, or did they simply have to accept what the employers offered because they were hungry and could not help themselves?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Most instances they have to accept.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And were not satisfied with the conditions, but accepted them because they either had to accept or go hungry?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Isn't that the time for the practice of sabotage?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I know; but listen, gentlemen, I am not in a position to explain to you sabotage, because that was not practiced around there where I came from.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What I want to get at, Mr. Kobylak, I want to find out, if possible, one of the real causes of the employers treating you as they did treat you, you say—evidently it could not have been because you were honest, because if that were the reason, they would have treated every other checkweighman as they treated you—those that were honest; it could not have been because you were an I. W. W., pure and simple, because others were I. W. W.'s, who were not treated as they treated you. Therefore there must have been some other reason, and that is what I am trying to get at, if I can, the reason they did that. Perhaps it was because you had preached sabotage to your fellows—that that may have been the reason. What is your judgment about it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. So far as sabotage is concerned, in our district it was not necessary, because we have plenty to do with our contract, to require the company to respect the contract; it was not necessary to use sabotage.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. But isn't it a fact, Mr. Kobylak, that the I. W. W.'s—that part of their creed is that the worker, no matter how he may sign a contract, is not expected by his union to respect the contract; that if he signs a contract as an I. W. W. he can break it to-morrow; that he has the right to break it to-morrow; that the contract is not to be respected if it stands in the way of the I. W. W.'s getting the result that they have in mind; isn't that so?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, the I. W. W., where we are really, is organized as a propaganda. It is not a business local, but organized a local to educate the workers in the field; and we never had any occasion in the case, because we were working under the system of the United Mine Workers of America, and there is plenty of time to teach the workers and let them know what the meaning of the contract is and get the "goods" from the company what they have already granted and consented to them. It is no use to go and tell them to go and use sabotage when they don't know to protect their own rights.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I was not speaking of sabotage at this moment, I was speaking about the position taken by the I. W. W.'s, that it is perfectly legitimate for them to break a contract whenever it is to their interest to do so. Now, is that so or not so?

Mr. KOBYLAK. To break a contract?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes.

Mr. KOBYLAK. If they will be compelled to break the contract; yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No; that they have the right to break a contract.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, the same right the boss has to break the contract. They did break it several times—lots of times.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, that may be, but if they break it, they break faith, and they could be held liable for it; but, as I understand, the I. W. W.'ism—and I have been so situated that I have had occasion to study that problem of I. W. W.'ism, and I have investigated I. W. W. strikes and riots, and read their literature and letters from representatives of I. W. W.'s, and as I understand it, unless you can show to the contrary, one of the things that the I. W. W.'s believe in is the right to sign a contract to-day and break it to-morrow. I simply want to find out whether you understand it that way also, as an I. W. W. You have been an I. W. W., now, how long?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I joined the Industrial Workers of the World since July 6, 1912.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then you have been an I. W. W. for nearly three years, haven't you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you have talked I. W. W.'ism to your fellow workers, haven't you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Not so much.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You certainly have read the literature, haven't you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; some of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And posted yourself on it, otherwise you wouldn't join them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No; I think not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And you are a pretty intelligent chap, so I take it whatever you do you do as a result of your intelligence?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So you ought to be fairly familiar with the doctrines of I. W. W.'ism.

Mr. KOBYLAK. Well, one reason I joined the Industrial Workers of the World was because I would like to have an industrial form of organization, and it don't exist except this Industrial Workers of the World. That is why I have joined in the ranks of the Industrial Workers of the World.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Yes; I am not taking issue with why you joined it. You had a perfect right to do it, but I am asking you the question as an intelligent member of the I. W. W., and as a member, I assume, who has studied the literature and knows the purposes and the principles of it—at least, I am simply asking you if it is not a fact that the organization consisting of the I. W. W., or the Industrial Workers of the World, considers it perfectly right on their part to break a contract for any reason or for no reason whenever it suits their purpose to withdraw from it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. That is correct; they do not believe in contract.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Exactly. That is all.

Commissioner LENNON. Did you ever advise the miners in your district to break contracts?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I did not.

Commissioner LENNON. You never advised them to break any contracts?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Did these other checkweighmen in the other mines, did they take up with the bosses the same as you did, the settlement of these times when the contracts were broken? Did they meet with the bosses; did you meet with the bosses in the different mines?

Mr. KOBYLAK. The mine committee met the bosses.

Commissioner LENNON. And you were one of the mine committee?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner LENNON. Were all of the checkweighmen members of the mine committee?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Not the checkweighmen.

Commissioner LENNON. But you were a checkweighman and you were a member of the mine committee?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I was a member of the mine committee before I was elected checkweighman.

Commissioner LENNON. This matter of the checkweighmen breaking contracts is something that the miners' organization has taken special pains to prevent by their unions, is it not? The mine workers are reputed not to be in the habit of breaking contracts; isn't that so?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Their intention is not to break contracts; no.

Commissioner LENNON. You were asked some questions about the honesty of checkweighmen, and whether you got into trouble because of your honesty. Every time you saw a few pounds of coal running away that was not weighed, and called attention to it and stopped the process, do you suppose that had anything to do with making the mine owners mad at you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. That was the main cause, I think—that they could not transact their business as they liked to.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Let us see if we can not get at this cause a little more definite, Mr. Kobylak. You were the one at the tippie who was supposed to watch out and see that the contracts were lived up to?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And when you discovered that the contracts were not being lived up to, you complained to the boss that there was a violation?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you also filed with the mining department at Columbus, the capital of the State of Ohio, complaints that the property was in a dangerous condition and liable to injure life and limb?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you were looked upon by the men—expected by the men to look around and see if the property was safe, in their behalf?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They looked to you to be a sort of one to watch and see that everything was sort of safe around the place?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And then you would report it to the proper officer, or proper State official?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And by that activity in discovering the possibility of accidents occurring and the violations of contract, it is not possible that the officials of the company took a dislike to you because of your activities in watching after the interests of the men, and reporting to the officials of the State that the property was in a dangerous condition, and of appearing before the officials of the company quite frequently and complaining that agreements were not being lived up to, and violations were taking place quite frequently, and by that means you brought yourself into a sort of disrepute with the officials of the company, who considered you too active in the interests of the men; and was not that the principal cause of why they persecuted you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I considered that the cause, because they went so strong after me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You were, from what I take it, intensely active in seeing that the interests of the men were taken care of, by protecting and guarding them and watching that their contracts were lived up to, and probably the company thought you were going beyond what you ought to and was seeing things that did not exist, and it was because of friction you might cause, and that you might excite the men in thinking they were not being treated fairly and honestly, and that the company thought you were an agitator among the men?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that you had a leadership and that the men would follow you because of your ability to speak different languages and get in close touch with the men because of being able to speak their languages, which their officers were not able to do, and by that means you held a sort of undue influence over the men and that you could lead them into a strike, as it were, or on your word they might stop work, feeling that their contracts were broken; in other words, the company felt you had more power over the men than they; isn't that the case?

Mr. KOBYLAK. The case, as I take it, is that when a contract is signed there is a great number of workers that can not speak the English language and they can not write and read, and they don't know what their rights are under the contract and the law, and they are cheated by the bosses of the company, and when they have a man like I was they simply go to him and say, "Here, Joe, look this over and see if there is a shortage," and if there is a grievance presented to me, I look to see about it, and I say, "You are right"; and I go to see the boss to see if he will correct it, and there was plenty of such trouble.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Every day you had some of that?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Not every day, but you can consider it nearly every day.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. A man would come to you and say he did not think his coal was weighed properly, but that it was short?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; and other things.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In these tipples, where they weigh this coal, the scales are up high where the men can not see them?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Some are on top and some are on the bottom.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Where they are up, the men can not see the coal weighed themselves; he is not permitted to go up in the tipple?

Mr. KOBYLAK. He is at quitting time, but not before.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But the coal is being weighed all the time it is coming out of the mine?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You have been been up in the tipple yourself?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And have you seen the company's men with the long beam and watched them weigh the coal?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And you have seen them hit the beam or the weight on the beam and knock it out like that [indicating] and then knock it back again, and wherever it stops when it comes back that is the amount of coal he gives the miner?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; and he watches the balance and when it strikes in the middle it is the correct weight for the coal if the construction of the scale is correct.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did you ever see him take the weight on the beam and move it backward and forward until he got the scale just to balance?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Haven't you seen him knock it out and then back again and not move it forward any more, and whatever weight it showed when it came back he gave that weight to the miner?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; but that is the thing that causes trouble.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. I have seen that myself. I have been up in the tipple and seen them weigh coal, and it is largely on the science of the man that kicks the weight back and forth and how near he comes to it; and unless the miners have a man up there to watch that they believe they are not getting the exact amount of coal they are entitled to, but that the man up there is juggling it, Mr. Kobylak?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The miner is down in the mine at work and he can not see what is going on up there, and his whole earnings depend on the man up in the tipple?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You say the mine owners made offers to you, offers, of course, to be on the side of the company?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. They indicated that they expected the man up there, where there was a question of doubt at all as to the weight of the coal, that it was to be given to the company and not to the miner; that the benefit would be given to the company and not to the miner?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I don't understand your question.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You say they wanted you to be on their side?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What did they mean by that?

Mr. KOBYLAK. To weigh coal for them; for the company, you know.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And quit the men?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And did they mean by that that you should weigh coal favorably to the company or favorably to the men?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They asked me to weigh the coal the way the coal would show.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did they think they were not getting that before?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They were getting that before, and all they can get on the side; they took it, cheating.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Did they ask you to cheat?

Mr. KOBYLAK. They did not ask me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. When they asked you to come to work for them they knew you were honest with the men; now, was there any impression that they wanted you to cheat?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I was impressed that I would not take the job.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. What was your impression that they wanted you to go to work for them for?

Mr. KOBYLAK. So they could get me off of their road; they saw I was in their road and they could not do the business they liked with me.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In other words, they could not buy you by offering you an inducement of any kind, and then they wanted to promote you from the men's side to their side, in order to get you away from the influence you had with the men?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And they could not do that, and you believe they started to persecute you in the courts?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And get you out of the territory altogether?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. And that you believe to be because of your activity in the interests of the men?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; that is my conclusion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. When did the company offer you a job?

Mr. KOBYLAK. In the year 1911—I mean in 1910, in the month of November.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. November, 1910; if I remember right, I think you said they offered you a job two or three times?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes; I was offered a job by the superintendent and then the general manager.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. When was the first time they offered you a job?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Inside of two weeks after the months of October and November, 1910.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. These three offers all came in the year 1910?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; all in the year 1910.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How long had you been checkweighman for the mine committee?

Mr. KOBYLAK. I was about three years.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, are they obliged—if the checkweighman for the company is dishonest he can swindle the company out of a great deal of money by giving the men credit for more than they are entitled to?

Mr. KOBYLAK. If they have a man on the other side not in position to see the coal weighed he can.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Therefore it is important for the company to have an honest man that will not sell out to the miners, because the company could just as well bribe the miners' checkweighman as the miners could bribe the company's checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir; but always you consider that the company has always a man on the tipple.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So the company always uses its best judgment to select an honest man that will not sell them out to men and favor the men at its expense?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Always the company are after a man who can handle the scales and is for their side, and not if he is honest. I have proof they have hired five or six day bosses during the time I was checkweighman, and they got discharged, and some of them openly told me that they ask that they shall rob, that they shall steal; and they say they will not steal, and then they quit.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. On the other hand, how could they rob, how could they steal, if the miners had a man alongside of him to watch him?

Mr. KOBYLAK. That is what caused the trouble, you know; that is what caused the trouble with me.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Caused it in what way? Explain how the trouble developed and arose.

Mr. KOBYLAK. For instance, this man that they hired last, he came into the office and said, "Good morning, I am weigh boss here to do a straight business." I say, "All right, that is the only way," and we begin to weigh coal, and weigh coal correctly, and the next day weigh the coal correctly, and then in the evening there was one car short on the sheet when we balanced the sheets, and the checker always has a witness there which proves that the car was dumped. If there is no check so you can not prove it, you take the car off. I got this, and then I began to realize that this man went so low that when the coal was not on the tippie and I went down among the boys, he went down to the check board and rubbed the car off the sheet, and so the miner lost the whole car. And when I discovered this happened on the same day, I watched him—especially whenever the car was dumped—I watched him mark it down, and when the car was dumped at 2 o'clock he marked it down and I marked it down, and he moved and took the check; but I have checked too, and I see what he is going to do with the board, and he marked it on the sheet, and there was four or five more cars dumped, and then he began to rub his board off, and I caught him and stopped him at the dump and pretty near had a fight with him; and others came, and their guard was there, and he went away, and I had to send for the mine committee and had no officer of the law, and I had to send for a constable. The guard was deputized by Jefferson County, and he knew what took place, and he ran away, and I was there when the mine committee came, and they made an investigation, and for the company to prove that I made a mistake they went and just stole a car from another man to make the figures balance with me, but when they dumped the coal off they took this car in the wrong trip. I have proof that this trip, from other miners, that is was impossible for that man to load this car, and the robbery was proven.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What was the end of it?

Mr. KOBYLAK. He was discharged.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. By whom?

Mr. KOBYLAK. By the company. The miners, when the strike—the miners went on strike, you know, and asked to remove him, and they asked for investigation and asked for the miners' officers to lay me off until the investigation is over. During that time they hired new people from Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and when they got them they know they don't want me, then the officers of the union began to realize they have called a strike, so they came and wanted a meeting, and in that meeting they have organizers, and these new people, they had a riot, and cutting; they cut each other with knives outside of the hall.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You mean the old miners and the new miners got into a riot?

Mr. KOBYLAK. The company had these new men, and excited—sent them up as guards, and there was a riot took place in that meeting. I was reelected at that meeting; it was not necessary only because the company asked for the election, and the officers have to grant to the company that right; they say they are going to ask the election. I was reelected in that meeting and got the instructions from the union officers, and then in the name of the constitution and the law and the contract I went on the tippie, and their guards attempted to arrest me.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Garretson has a question he wants to ask you.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Are not the laws of Iowa and other States creating checkweighman passed because of the almost universal practice of light weighing of miners?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Light weights?

Commissioner GARRETSON. Yes, sir; that they were given less than they had mined. Was that the reason for establishing checkweighman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Were you a mine committeeman for the one mine or for the subdistrict?

Mr. KOBYLAK. For one mine.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Just one mine?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There were none of the others that were checkweighmen and mine committeemen?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. The consequence was that you, being both the checkweighman and mine committeeman, when you found the contract unobserved, you took it up directly there and then with the officers of the company?

Mr. KOBYLAK. No, sir; I was mine committeeman, but that day I was elected checkweighman; when I was elected checkweighman another miner took my place as mine committeeman.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You ceased to be a mine committeeman?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Do you know of any other checkweighman being objected to by the company?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Oh, yes.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They usually quit when they were objected to?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Quitting, or they were so strong, the company, that they have removed him.

Commissioner GARRETSON. They laid down, in other words?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You stayed, and the company went after you?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir.

Commissioner GARRETSON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all, Mr. Kobylak; you will be excused permanently.

Mr. KOBYLAK. I have here a newspaper report about the end of the strike I desire to read to you.

Chairman WALSH. Is it a short statement?

Mr. KOBYLAK. Yes, sir [reads]:

"International Secretary-Treasurer Billy Greene, author of the antiscreen bill, briefly reviewed the strike for the News. He said, 'This agreement brings to an end a strike that in many respects is most remarkable. For 14 months 12,000 miners have been engaged in a most intense industrial struggle. Altogether, counting the striking miners and their families, more than 60,000 men, women, and children have been directly involved. During all that time not a single violation of the law has taken place nor has one dollar's worth of property been either damaged or destroyed.'"

Chairman WALSH. All right, Mr. Kobylak, you will be excused.

Mr. Gregory, will you please take the chair?

TESTIMONY OF MR. STEPHEN S. GREGORY.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name to the commission.

Mr. GREGORY. Stephen S. Gregory.

Chairman WALSH. And your residence.

Mr. GREGORY. Chicago.

Chairman WALSH. And your profession?

Mr. GREGORY. I am a lawyer.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you practiced the legal profession, please?

Mr. GREGORY. Forty-three years.

Chairman WALSH. Have you held any official position in the city of Chicago or the State of Illinois?

Mr. GREGORY. Not literally; except many years ago I was elected commissioner for a year or two. I have been president of the Chicago Bar Association, the State Bar Association of Illinois, and the American Bar Association.

Chairman WALSH. Have you been arbitrator in any cases under Federal arbitration acts, Mr. Gregory?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir; under the Erdman Act, in reference to wages of switchmen in the Chicago district.

Chairman WALSH. Would you briefly give us the circumstances under which that arbitration was had, and the result of the decision?

Mr. GREGORY. The company—the railroad company—had chosen their arbitrator, Mr. Grey, now president of the Western Maryland, and the switchmen had Mr. Heberling as their arbitrator, and I think under the provisions of the act, Dr. Neill and Mr. Knapp, then with the Interstate Commerce Commission, Judge Knapp suggested me, and it was agreed that I should act with those gentlemen. We heard the evidence for some time, and the result was an increase in wages, I think, of 3 cents an hour.

Chairman WALSH. And the report was adopted and carried out?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Gregory, I believe you have been given a few questions, or more properly speaking, a list of points that we would be glad to have you address yourself to, and the first is calling for your opinion on constitutional guaranties, personal rights, for example, trial by jury?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir. I have not prepared anything definitely, but I have examined this and made some notes. Of course, we have in the Federal, and in almost all the State constitutions, in fact, with particular unanimity, certain guaranties that were taken very largely from the Magna Charta, and the Bill of Rights, in England, by which it is sought to secure to the individual the great essential rights to life, to liberty, and property, and I will speak presently as to the difference, as it seems to me, between the Federal and State constitutions in the efficacy of those provisions. The trial by jury is, of course, perhaps in a way related to procedure, but after all it is a great essential right, in my judgment, without which none of the rights can be regarded as secured. So far as habeas corpus is concerned, that is an element available in cases of unlawful arrest. It might perhaps have been resorted to by the last witness when held upon what would appear to be like an absurd and untenable charge of high treason. It is the only remedy known to the law by which the cause of a man's detention, where he complains of illegal restraint, can be summarily and forthwith examined judiciously. I think under the provisions of the Federal and State constitutions, the statutes of both jurisdictions, that right is reasonably secured. Now, the right of free speech—

Chairman WALSH. One minute, Mr. Gregory. Has your attention been called to the decision in West Virginia and probably the Moyer case in Colorado, where it is suspended during the reign of what might be called military law, or what they call modified military law in Colorado?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir; that, of course, illustrates the old maxim that in the crush of resounding arms laws are silent, but a great chief justice once said that was a statement of fact and not a principle of law. The fundamental principle of this country is that the civil is superior to the military power. Of course, there is an inherent right in an executive commander in chief, vested with military authority in times of disturbances to establish military law. He does so at his peril, and his exercise of power is to a large extent subject to review by the authorities or by the judiciary. Shortly after the Civil War, as you probably all remember in Indiana military courts condemned to death two men, Milligan and Bowles, and they were discharged by the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that the exercise of authority of such courts, although the country was at war, in jurisdiction where the courts, the civil courts, were sitting and their proceedings were undisturbed, it was unlawful and unconstitutional.

They were charged with virtually treason and were sentenced to death. Jeremiah Black, formerly an Attorney General of the United States, and one of the greatest lawyers of this country, made an historic argument in that case, in the course of which he says, and I hesitate to quote it lest it might be attributed to me: In the palladium of trial by jury, that King Alfred was the greatest King that ever sat upon a throne; that he promised his subjects trial by jury, and that he secured it to them, although it was necessary for him in one year to hang 44 judges to do it. I have not verified the accuracy of that statement, but it will be found in the report of that case in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The right to free press is absolutely vital, and free speech. Here in this District a most remarkable statement was made by a gentleman whom I think is not now on the bench, Judge Wright, where he indicated that it might be possible, and strongly that it was probable, that a man might be enjoined from libelous statements. Of course, if he was enjoined, as I shall presently state in speaking of injunctions, and there tried for breach of that injunction by process of contempt of court, he would not be entitled to trial by jury, and would be deprived of all the constitutional guaranties, which were the subjects of a long historical contest in England, and which has been thought vital to this invaluable right in this country; but there is the fundamental error that lies at the foundation of this discussion in the minds of many estimable men, and some of my own profession, and it has been elaborately discussed recently by a committee of the National Civic Federation, and it was pointed out to those gentlemen in a very clear way by Mr. Choate, jr., that our system did not contemplate any method by which a man could be restrained in advance from speaking his sentiments.

The constitution of Illinois and most of the other States secures the right to speak freely the truth for good purposes, subject only to the right to prosecute for an abuse of that right, but that it is not possible in advance to stifle free speech; and one of the highly objectionable methods by which that is accomplished is to make the policeman the censor of public discussions. In times of great excitement, or where people publicly protest and have been aroused and sentiment runs strongly against a certain class or certain individuals in a community, there are instances of that kind which the public condone. The right to speak freely is an essential right; it is secured by our constitutions; and if a man speaks libelously—I would not say slanderously—or incites to violence, he might be answerable for that, but he nevertheless has the right to speak, and, of course, that extends to the ladies now also as well as the men. The right to freedom of the press stands on a secure foundation because the newspapers have so much power and so much influence that they are hardly likely to be very much oppressed in that regard. And possibly some may think that they at times abuse their privilege; they certainly treat us all with great freedom in discussing our conduct; but, after all, I believe with Jefferson that it would be better to have newspapers without government than government without newspapers. I feel that they secure publicity, which is invaluable.

As to free assemblage, there is, of course, this difficulty: The place of assemblage. Sometimes men desire to meet, and they desire to meet on the streets and other public places. Now, it is necessary that the control of these public places should be in the hands of public authorities, and the right to speak freely gives a man no right contrary to law or reasonable regulations to go either upon—or consent of the proper party to go either upon public or private property, and sometimes, no doubt, the authorities act partially and unfairly in giving leave to one class of men to hold meetings in public grounds or public parks and refusing it to others. That is probably, after all, one of those errors of administration which the law can not always redress.

As to freedom, free search, and unwarranted arrest, I think all our constitutions and statutes have necessary principles or provisions upon that subject. There is one thing, however, which seems like a minor matter to call to the attention of this commission, and yet I think it would relieve a great deal of hardship if everywhere for petty offenses, instead of making the first process a warrant, by which the defendant was arrested, he was summoned, as I understand, where there is no particular danger that he would run away; for instance, a teamster gets into a controversy with a policeman on the streets of a city, and I have seen it that the policeman would get on the box and drive him to the station. He is employed by a well-known employer, and there is no difficulty whatever in getting him, and he could be summoned the next day instead of him being locked up overnight and his employer having to go and give bond. There is a good deal of opposition in that way. That is a mere minor change, which I understand exists in some of the States, and certainly in England.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. That is done now in violations of speed laws, a man running an automobile; they take his number and summon him for the next day.

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir; that has become common; and one question which I was not going to discuss is—and that illustrates that sometimes it is a doubtful thing in our entire government—these wrongs that are practiced at the expense of the humble don't direct the public attention, but when men get so they own automobiles they have a way of making their complaints heard, and possibly that has done more in opening the eyes of the people to an age-old practice than much discussion on the subject would have. The law contemplates adequate protection against the exaction of excessive bail. That is frequently abused. I remember a case of my own experience, where a man was indicted on five indictments, which were never brought to trial and was discontinued without prosecution, but he was held, a stranger in Chicago, to $50,000 bail. He was not a laboring man or a miner or a victim of any prejudice at all; it was one of those miscarriages of justice which we have.

Now, the constitutional basis for these arrests is founded, of course, upon our Federal and State Constitutions, and the conditions under which they are denied are very largely cases of unwarranted and illegal interference by police and others in public authority. I am not aware of much that could be done in legislation in that regard. I was quite impressed with the statement of this witness that just left the stand as illustrating how, without any apparent—how no legislation apparently would be needed to correct everything of which he complains here. Of course, the attitude of the courts in labor and nonlabor cases is largely a matter of the temperament of the judge, which is certainly a very uncertain factor in a science which is supposed to-day to approximate the existence of a law; nevertheless, it exists. It was charged against the English judges in the time of Mansfield, and it will be found so stated in Sir Philip Mahon's History of English Law, that they were all alike to power, and that they were hostile to individual rights and to liberty. That may have been so to some extent, and I am inclined to think the charge was justified.

In many labor cases I feel, and I presume you gentlemen are fully conscious of that, that the excesses that are imputed to men on strikes, sometimes probably justly, have the effect to prejudice all sober-minded men, including judges. Crimes of violence can never become popular by any possibility. A man who strikes down another with murderous hand is not apt to be a popular man in the community, nor is murder going to be popular. But more insidious wrongs, wrongs that are hidden, that are covered up, and yet work great injury to large numbers of people, are not so striking; they do not make that impression. And I think judges sometimes are impressed by violence, and that they are prejudiced against labor on that account—against labor leaders—because they impute to every leader of a strike everything that is unlawful that is done in it. In the case of Debs, it was distinctly held by a distinguished Federal judge, for whom I have the highest respect and regard, that it was not necessary to show that he had been actually advising any violence or counseling any violence; that if he were the leader of the strike he must be held for all lawlessness in the course of it. I think that was a mistake; I think that was a mistake in principle.

Of course, as to the social and legal aspect, the consequences of the denial of these rights, they are most serious. It is a serious thing for people or any large class of people to feel they are not treated with justice by the government under which they live. Therefore I think, and I think the people of this country realize—I think the appointment and the existence of this commission recognizes the fact that these complaints must be looked into, and that if there is wrong, if there is denial of rights it ought to be corrected, so that every man in this country shall feel that he is entitled to the full measure of his rights, however humble his position, or how small and trivial may seem to be that charge, when compared with larger issues.

The Federal Constitution furnishes but limited authority for the enforcement of constitutionally guaranteed rights for the reason that the provisions in the Federal Constitution have been regarded as mostly in this regard limitations upon the power of Federal agents; and therefore they do not apply to proceedings in the State courts, where almost all these questions really arise, except in some instances of injunctions; and now, under the antitrust law, more and more they are coming under the Federal laws. But the fourteenth amendment is all that attempts to restrict the power of the States, particularly; and that has in it a provision that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. But owing partly to the very exigencies of the situation, which would enormously burden the Federal judiciary, the Supreme Court of the United States has so limited its definition of "due process of law," and have gone so far as to hold that a man may be even tried with due process of law without trial by jury, which is certainly contrary to the common law, in my judgment, and without indictment by a grand jury; and in a very able decision by Mr. Justice Harlan, they have practically held that almost anything that was directed by general law in the way of procedure in a State must be regarded as due process of law under that constitutional provision.

The State constitutions contain the most ample guaranties, but the trouble is they are not self-enforcing, and the trouble is frequently with the masses of men that work hard; they are perhaps of limited education, and they have not much influence perhaps except as they get it through organization, and frequently it seems as if public authority was more accessible to the influence of large and consolidated interests. Certainly the provisions of the State constitutions ought to be enforced by the governors and other public officers—sheriffs who are sworn to see that the laws are faithfully executed. But they are all very much burdened in our large cities and large States and large communities. They have no adequate appropriations for this. As an illustration, the supreme court of my own State, the State of Illinois, seven years ago decided that a certain corporation was an illegal trust operating in that State, and it or its successor has continued to operate still, and there has been no effort made by the public authorities to drive them from the State.

I don't know that there is any particular remedy by legislation in this regard, but it is rather a trite remark to say that we should elect no one but capable, upright, and efficient public officers; but that is the best security for the effective administration of the law in any aspect.

The status of trade-unions and labor organizations under the law is somewhat peculiar. Of course there is no doubt that it might, if they saw fit, incorporate, and I can well understand why they would object to doing that, and they would, I think, object to that for the same reason that the American Bar Association and most associations of lawyers, which certainly ought to have, and no doubt do have, a very high degree of confidence in the courts, object to incorporating. Almost all of these organizations, I suppose—these lawyers' associations—are voluntary associations. Now, the difficulty about incorporating, for instance, in the American Bar Association is that they have 10,000 members. I don't think that there would be 10,000 lawsuits if they were incorporated; but if they were incorporated, they would be liable any time to have some discontented member filing a bill and trying to have a receiver appointed and trying to regulate this—this is an age of regulation—to regulate the association. Therefore whenever it has been discussed I have always opposed it, and we have never done it—as I think, wisely. Now, I think probably a good many members of the labor unions feel the same way. I think they are wise about that.

Of course, at common law it is rather interesting at times to read the encomiums of Blackstone and Hale and others upon the common law. But it was, after all, not quite as humane as we regard it now and then. At common law an association for the purpose of increasing wages among laboring men or for the purpose of shortening the hours of labor was illegal. I know that a very learned judge, Chief Justice Daley, in New York, who had the respect and confidence and affection of the bar in his day, in one of his opinions stated the contrary; but with all due deference he was in error in that point. And in Chitty, which is a work classic among lawyers—Chitty on Criminal Law—will be found a precedent of an indictment for conspiracy among certain workers to shorten a day to less than 13 hours, which shows we have progressed some in our views on these subjects since that time. That was concluded "against the peace and dignity of the King," and not against the statutes, showing that it was a common-law indictment—an indictment on the common law. Now, of course, we have progressed so that these organizations are not now per se illegal, and under the Clayton Act, lately passed by the National Congress, that is distinctly provided.

Of course, the liability of members of a voluntary association is probably very much like that of partners or of principal and agent; and that presents a difficult question, as in the Danbury hatters' case the members of certain labor associations were held to be liable for a large sum, as I think, upon—if I may be permitted to differ from that exalted tribunal—some, I won't say unsound legal theory, but an unsound decision—from a standpoint of sociology. I will refer to that in a moment in speaking of boycotts.

Now, of course, injunctions in labor cases have been very frequently granted, and I think that probably the provisions of the Clayton bill in that regard now, if they could be followed in the States and made effective, would be about as good as anything we could get. The newspapers, and even the judges, have much to say when an employer files a bill and obtains an injunction against workmen on strike from interfering with his men that he has hired in the place of these workmen, and acts of violence, and so forth, about that injunction being granted in order to protect the right of every man to work for whom he chooses. There is really no just relation there, and no lawyer could justify it upon any such theory. I have no right to go out and file a bill to be permitted to work for whom I choose; and if I did, any one of these judges, who sometimes use that language incautiously, would laugh me out of court. Equity deals only with the rights of property. Jurisdiction of the Federal courts in equity, the exercise of which has been particularly criticized in these questions, is derived, not from the Constitution itself, but originally from the judiciary act of 1879; and by that act they invested our Federal courts, and such is also the effect of the present act of Congress in that regard, with all the jurisdiction which the English high court of chancery possessed, among those was this principle of elementary law that equity dealt only with property rights, and that a bill in equity for injunction would not be entertained except for the protection of property rights. Therefore this class of bill exhibited in the case of the United States v. Debs, which was a bill filed by the Government, and I don't think any bill has ever been filed like it since, and I think it would be exceedingly unlikely that there will be any more like it, for some time, at least. These injunctions are based upon the theory that the man carrying on a business has a certain sort of property right in the good will or the successful conduct of that business; and that when several hundred or several thousand excited men gather around his premises, where he carries his business on, and threaten everybody that comes in there to work, and possibly use violence, that that is such an unlawful interference of property right as may be the subject of protection in equity. And that view of the law has been sustained by the courts of practically all the States.

But the great difficulty about that was this, that having enjoined defendants, namely, striking workmen, perhaps from unlawful interference with the business of the employer, and that unlawful interference consisted in an attack or an assault and battery upon another man, to wit, perhaps a strike breaker, so called, or one who was hired to take the place of one of the striking workmen, that thereafter the judge who had ordered the injunction and whose authority had been thus defied was permitted to put the person charged with the breach of that injunction upon trial upon a charge of contempt really for having committed an unlawful and criminal act.

Now, the Constitution has thrown around the prosecution of criminals—the constitutions, State and Federal—a number of securities. They are entitled to trial by jury; they are entitled to be confronted by the witnesses who are to testify against them; they are entitled to be heard by counsel.

But none of those guaranties, except, perhaps, the right to be heard by counsel, is secured in contempt proceedings; and the obvious wisdom of permitting 12 men drawn from the body of the people to pass on questions of fact—men who are supposed to be prejudiced neither for nor against the parties, who know nothing about the case until they are sworn in the jury box, has so far commended itself to the wisdom of legislators and jurists to such a degree that it has become a permanent feature of our jurisprudence; and to provide that the court may proceed against them for contempt, where the conduct charged against them is criminal, is really an evasion of the constitutional guaranties and a plain attempt to commit to equity jurisdiction over matters which it has been decided over and over again by all the courts that it has no jurisdiction with respect to, namely, the administration of the criminal law.

For instance, I might receive, as I leave the room of this tribunal to-day, a threatening letter from somebody saying they were going to kill me for something I had said or had not said, in a court of equity. Now, that involves personal loss possible to my wife or those dependent upon me; but no court of equity would listen for a moment to a bill I should file, saying "A B" or some other black-hand gentleman had threatened to kill me, or if filed by anybody dependent upon me, and therefore there should be an injunction to prevent him from killing me. That would be an absurdity, a legal absurdity; and none the less is it so where a man is enjoined from committing acts of violence in a strike to try him for contempt without a trial by jury. And that has been an injustice that has rankled in the minds of everybody that has been a victim of it, and justly so.

Sir Charles Napier says: "People talk about agitators, but the only real agitator is injustice; and the only way is to correct the injustice and withdraw the agitation."

Now, that has been attempted by the Congress of the United States in Judge Clayton's bill. So that in every such case the accused, where the conduct with which he is charged under the guise of an information for contempt is criminal under the laws of the State or of the United States, he is entitled to trial by jury; and that is, I think, the best we can do.

Of course, the procedure—requiring notice now in the Federal courts particularly and in most State courts—in the Federal courts they may issue a restraining order, but they must set down the application for an injunction, and that gives notice. In the State courts the court granting the injunction may grant it in a labor case or another case without notice, but I don't think the procedure requires much modification. If you will pardon me, Mr. Chairman, I am running over this—

Chairman WALSH. Would it be asking too much of you, Mr. Gregory, to stay here until morning?

Mr. GREGORY. No.

Chairman WALSH. Well, we are all very much interested in this and would like you to take the time to go into it thoroughly. It is past our adjournment hour, and to accommodate you we will run later, but we would prefer if you will return in the morning—

Mr. GREGORY. I will be very willing to do so.

Chairman WALSH. Thank you very much.

At this point, then, we will adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

(Thereupon, at 4.35 p. m., Tuesday, May 11, 1915, an adjournment was had until Wednesday, May 12, 1915, at 10 a. m.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Wednesday, May 12, 1915—10 a. m.

Present: Chairman Walsh, Commissioners Weinstock, O'Connell, Lennon, and Garretson.

Chairman WALSH. Is Mr. Gregory here?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Now, Mr. Gregory, if you will be kind enough to resume where you left off yesterday evening?

Mr. GREGORY. Much more might be said on the subject, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, but I had not purposed at present to discuss further the question of injunctions. The next topic that I had in mind was the subject of picketing. In its essentials, without violence and disorder, it should be, I think, and generally is, considered lawful. In Chicago very recently one of our local judges, however, has enjoined picketing by waitresses of a line of restaurants. I have no familiarity with the circumstances of the case, and no knowledge as to the legal theories upon which that injunction was ordered. Of course, in the large communities, if they engage in picketing, or in any other occupation or matter that is essentially lawful, yet if they crowd the sidewalks and obstruct their free use by passers-by, there may be something in the necessity of police regulation, in the nature of police regulation, which renders that, which would not be in itself illegal, inadmissible because of these collateral consequences; but picketing without violence, which if it consists, as I understand it, merely in endeavoring by persuasion, not threats, to induce persons intending to take the place of strikers not to take them, I think it is undoubtedly lawful, and has generally been so recognized.

Of course, the only method of regulation is police regulation now, and then those injunctions, such as I spoke of. The law in itself, it would seem to me, looked at as a question of law, needs no particular amendment, but like so many other topics that we discussed here, the whole question is as to the administration of the law.

The next topic, and substantially the last one on which I intend to say anything, involves what is commonly called boycotts, and the question of how far they are legal and collateral questions. Now, I think that the spirit and genius of American institutions is founded upon the idea of liberty, just as much liberty and freedom as is possible for the individual, consistent with the general welfare, and I have never been able to satisfy myself, notwithstanding legal authorities to the contrary, that a boycott, as we understand it, in and of itself either was or ought to be illegal. A few years since I lived on a little, short street in Chicago running down to the lake, on which there were only private residences. No such incident as I am about to suppose ever occurred, but I have often thought in this connection—it was a beautiful street, shaded with trees, beautiful homes upon it—I didn't own my own home, and therefore did not have that interest, but suppose as the law then stood that a man had desired to establish a saloon in that district; there was vacant property that he might have purchased, there were no restrictions, nothing to prevent him from establishing a saloon. Without criticizing that institution in our community, at least that would have been a very undesirable adjunct to our neighborhood. Assume that my neighbors and myself, this saloon having been established there, property had depreciated, and the usual incidents following it, agreed together that we would not patronize this gentlemen, that if we bought a drink that we would buy it elsewhere, and would not buy anything at his saloon, and done so with the express purpose of driving him out of business. Now, I have never been able to understand on what theory that could be regarded as an illegal combination, and when I have presented that question I have never heard any intelligent answer to it from any source. If that is true, the object of the boycott seems to be not that it is an illegal agreement in itself, but it is an agreement to do something which the court or other body passing upon the validity of that agreement don't think ought to be done. That is another matter. If you agree to commit murder, that crime is illegal, whether it is two or two thousand. If you agree to do any other unlawful act, that agreement is illegal and constitutes in itself an illegal act. But if men combine to do that which they, each one severally, have a right to do, if after all the combined act is essentially the same as the act of the single individual, then it is very difficult to establish on any logical, legal principle that such a combination in and of itself is illegal.

Now, it is my opinion that the law should be changed by statutes, State and Federal. Some of the States hold the boycott to be, as we understand the term, illegal. So that it should be provided that a combination or agreement by two or more persons not to trade with a third person should not be unlawful nor actionable.

I know very well that portentous pictures can be drawn of these terrible possible consequences that are likely to follow if such a principle of law were adopted; but, in my judgment, none of them would follow. There are thousands of offenses—minor offenses against society—which are punished without the law; that is, not by any principle of law. There is no rule that requires a man to be a gentleman; yet if he persistently prove wanting in courtesy and consideration for others, by a kind of common consent, though not by any formal law, he will suffer from that; and it would be idle for the law to attempt to deal with those cases.

Now, while there may be occasional instances where this principle would be resorted to to the great injury and damage to people, yet in the long run, speaking largely, I believe in the interests of freedom that it ought to be admitted into our law.

Chairman WALSH. Say, Mr. Gregory, I suppose it will be somewhat disconcerting, but Commissioner Weinstock would like to ask you a few questions right there.

Mr. GREGORY. Well, it might me, but I prefer that he should do it that way.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I will be very glad to wait until you are through with what you have to say.

Mr. GREGORY. I think I have finished with that subject, and I would really prefer to be interrogated upon it right now.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I suppose you are more or less familiar, Mr. Gregory, with the report on the anthracite coal strike in 1902?

Mr. GREGORY. Well, yes; but rather less than more, Mr. Weinstock.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do you recall having read it at any time, Mr. Gregory?

Mr. GREGORY. Not in extenso; largely as it appeared in the papers at the time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The commission, as I recall it, consisted of seven men, including labor representatives, officials, and employers generally. I think the labor men on the commission were the present Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, and I think Mr. Clark, who is a railroad man now connected with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and possibly one other laboring man. The report was signed unanimously, and among other things, in dealing with the question of boycott, this is what the report has to say, and I would like to see how far you are in harmony with the position taken on boycotts by this commission. It says—

Commissioner GARRETSON. Let me interrupt here to make the point that the "Wilson" on that commission was a general of the Regular Army and not the Secretary of Labor at this time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What laboring men were on that commission?

Commissioner GARRETSON. None.

Mr. GREGORY. Perhaps the names are in there.

Commissioner GARRETSON. There was one man on the commission not appointed as a labor man, but as an eminent sociologist.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, here is a list. You are probably more familiar with their callings than I am (addressing Commissioner Garretson).

Chairman WALSH. Let me suggest that in order to let Mr. Gregory get through, suppose we drop the personnel of that board as being immaterial, and let us ask Mr. Gregory the questions—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, it might be material to see whether there were any laboring men on that commission. I think that would have its bearing. It says here, Carroll D. Wright.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Commissioner of Labor.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. John M. Wilson.

Commissioner GARRETSON. A general in the Regular Army.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. John L. Spaulding.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Bishop of Peoria, in the Catholic Church.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Edgar E. Clark.

Commissioner GARRETSON. An eminent sociologist. He was the grand chief conductor of the Order of Railway Conductors.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Thomas H. Watkins.

Commissioner GARRETSON. A coal operator of Scranton, Pa.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Edward W. Parker, Washington, D. C.

Sommissioner GARRETSON. I have forgotten his pursuit, but he was not a labor man.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, he is one of them.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. He was a college professor.

Commissioner LENNON. He was a college professor, if I remember correctly.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Well, I have forgotten his pursuit, but he was no labor man. There was only one man who might be referred to as a labor man, but he was on for another reason.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I thought that this Mr. Wilson was the Commissioner of Labor.

Commissioner GARRETSON. No; he was a general in the Regular Army.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. This is what that commission had to say on the subject of boycotts, the very subject you have been telling us about, Mr. Gregory [reading]:

"In social disturbances of the kind with which we are dealing the temptation to resort to this weapon," referring to boycott; perhaps I had better read a paragraph preceding that, which will make it till clearer. [Reading:]

"To say this is not to deny the legal right of any man or set of men voluntarily to refrain from social intercourse or business relations with any persons who he or they, with or without good reason, dislike. This may sometimes be unchristian, but it is not illegal. But when it is a concerted purpose of a number of persons, not only to abstain themselves from such intercourse, but to render the life of their victim miserable by persuading and intimidating others so to refrain, such purpose is a malicious one, and the concerted attempt to accomplish it is a conspiracy at common law and should receive the punishment due to such a crime.

"Examples of such 'secondary boycotts' are not wanting in the record of the case before the commission. A young schoolmistress of intelligence, character, and attainments was so boycotted and her dismissal from employment compelled for no other reason than that a brother, not living in her immediate family, chose to work contrary to the wishes and will of the striking miners. A lad about 15 years old, employed in a drug store, was discharged owing to threats made to his employer by a delegation of the strikers, on behalf of their organization, for the reason that his father had chosen to return to work before the strike was ended. In several instances tradesmen were threatened with a boycott—that is, that all connected with the strikers would withhold from them their custom and persuade others to do so if they continued to furnish the necessities of life to the families of certain workmen who had come under the ban of the displeasure of the striking organizations. This was carrying the boycott to an extent which was condemned by Mr. Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America, in his testimony before the commission, and which certainly deserves the reprobation of all thoughtful and law-abiding citizens. Many other instances of boycott are disclosed in the record of this case.

"In social disturbances of this kind with which we are dealing the temptation to resort to this weapon oftentimes becomes strong, but is none the less to be resisted. It is an attempt of many, by concerted action, to work their will upon another who has exercised his legal right to differ with them in opinion and in conduct. It is tyranny pure and simple, and as such is hateful, no matter whether attempted to be exercised by few or by many, by operators or by workmen, and no society that tolerates or condones it can justly call itself free.

"Some weak attempt was made at the hearings to justify the boycotts we have been describing by confusing them with what might be called, for convenience sake, the primary boycott, which consists merely in the voluntary abstention of one or many persons from social or business relations with one whom they dislike. This, indeed, might amount to a conspiracy at law if the ingredient of malicious purpose and concerted action to accomplish it were present, but whether this be so or not, the practical distinction between such a boycott and the one we have been reprobating is clear.

"It was attempted to defend the boycott by calling the contest between employers and employees a war between capital and labor, and, pursuing the analogies of the word, to justify thereby the cruelty and illegality of conduct on the part of those conducting a strike. The analogy is not apt, and the argument founded upon it is fallacious. There is only one war-making power recognized by our institutions, and that is the Government of the United States and of the States in subordination thereto, when repelling invasion or suppressing domestic violence. War between citizens is not to be tolerated, and can not, in the proper sense, exist. If attempted it is unlawful, and is to be put down by the sovereign power of the State and Nation."

Now, in how far, Mr. Gregory, are your views in harmony with the views expressed in this report?

Mr. GREGORY. Not in the slightest respect.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you point out where, in your opinion, this judgment is in error?

Mr. GREGORY. In the first place it was Sir Fitz James Stephens, the great authority on the English criminal law, who afterwards went crazy, after he had been a judge and acquired a reputation by presiding at the trial of Mrs. Maybrick, who said, in his monumental work on the criminal law of England, that industrial strife of this character was war.

In the next place, I have the highest respect for the personnel of that commission, several of whom I have met. Mr. Wright, a very excellent, painstaking man, who, however, is not a lawyer, and I should not at all be disposed to subordinate my views of the law to his judgment upon it. The chairman of that commission was a very excellent judge, but hardly entitled perhaps to such a commanding place in jurisprudence as those who happen to agree with his utterances on this occasion might be supposed to assign to him.

In the next place, the commission begins by laying down the principle and then denying its application. They were dealing, of course, in this instance with something as to which I have not said anything particularly, and that is what they classify as a "secondary boycott" and not a primary one. Now, it is very common, as lawyers always know, when courts are hard pressed with an argument that is difficult to answer, to concede the principle and deny its application, and that is exactly what, it seems to me, this commission did in this case. In addition to that—

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (interrupting). At what point did this concede the principle and deny its application?

Mr. GREGORY. In the first paragraph you read.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I repeat it?

Mr. GREGORY. Certainly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (reading): "To say this is not to deny the legal right of any man or set of men voluntarily to refrain from social intercourse or business relations with any persons whom he, or they, with or without good reasons, dislike."

That is then laying down the principle?

Mr. GREGORY. That is the principle for which I contend, and the logical application of it would have led to directly the contrary conclusion to what the commission reached.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Let us see what they say afterwards:

"This may sometimes be unchristian, but it is not illegal, but when it is a concerted purpose of a number of persons not only to abstain themselves from such intercourse, but to render the life of their victim miserable by persuading and intimidating others so to refrain, such purpose is a malicious one, and a concerted attempt to accomplish it is a conspiracy under common law, and merits and should receive the punishment due such a crime."

Otherwise, if we meet and decide not to patronize a saloon and we do it negatively we are within our rights; but if we go out aggressively and by concerted action intimidate others and do all we can to ruin the individual saloon keeper, that is in the nature of a conspiracy?

Mr. GREGORY. Undoubtedly, if we intimidate others; but the commission does not make such distinction; they do not say anything about it being negatively, but they say doing it "voluntarily," and that is what I say.

It reminds me of a story they tell in the West of an embarrassed politician out in Iowa, about a controversy which is still raging there as to the liquor question; and his constituents were demanding that he declare himself, and he hesitated a good deal. He did not want to lose the votes of liquor men and he wanted the votes of the temperance people, and they pressed him pretty hard, and he finally said he would meet the committee and make an announcement, and he did so; and stated that he had considered the matter carefully, and that he was thoroughly in favor of the enactment of a prohibition law, but absolutely opposed to its enforcement.

Now, these gentlemen lay down a principle which, if they had followed out logically and fearlessly, and which of course is often embarrassing for judges and other public officials to do, because sometimes to be logical is to be impractical, would have led directly to the opposite conclusion. I believe they were right in the principle and wrong in their conclusion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, the whole thing evidently hinges on the meaning of the word "voluntarily," and it might be well to clearly define what that word really means. I take it that if this group assembled in this room at this moment would agree among themselves not to patronize a certain concern or hotel, that that would be regarded as voluntary action, would it not?

Mr. GREGORY. It would be by me.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And suppose this group went further and sent out letters and published statements in the press that others should not patronize that certain enterprise at the risk of gaining the displeasure and the antagonism of all that are present here, and that we would use our influence to injure others that did patronize that enterprise, would that be still called voluntary?

Mr. GREGORY. I should have to see the papers first. It would be voluntary. Suppose they say: "Gentlemen, here is a man who is a disgrace to Washington City; he is a great scamp, and he is harming the city every day, and we think he is guilty of all sorts of things, but we can not prove anything; he is a neighbor of ours, but let us agree that we will not patronize him." Then suppose we should say, just stating the facts and nothing except what we can prove—nothing that is perhaps libelous—suppose we invite others to cooperate with us, the thing does not become involuntary because some one suggests to you that you should take a certain course of action; but you introduce at one time in your discussion another proposition, intimidation, by which I understand unlawful intimidation. If you say: "Here, if you do that, we will do something which the law prohibits," then you introduce another element, and that is an element so often relied upon in strike-injunction cases.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. What would you call this illustration, given in this report, of the lad employed in a drug store, who was discharged owing to threats made to the employer by a delegation of strikers, for the reason that his father had chosen to return to work before the strike ended, or the case of the young schoolmistress stated here, who was dismissed for no other reason than that her brother, not living in her immediate family, chose to work contrary to the wishes and will of striking miners; what would you call that?

Mr. GREGORY. I should say that was lawful if the only threat was, as to the druggist, that the parties would not patronize him if he continued to employ that boy. As to the school-teacher, I do not know what threats they made; they could very well threaten not to patronize the schools, and in that case I would not be able to form any opinion.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. May I ask at this point, then, Mr. Gregory, whether in the eyes of the law, as you see it, both sides should be treated equally? That is, the employer on his side, and the worker on his side?

Mr. GREGORY. Absolutely.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There should be absolute equality before the law?

Mr. GREGORY. Absolute.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And one should not be given privileges denied to the other?

Mr. GREGORY. I do not know whether that means absolute equality before the law; but there should be absolute equality before the law.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, then, if it is lawful and proper for the workers for a real or fancied grievance to do the things you say they ought to be permitted to do, as a matter of self-preservation and self-protection, because they think a certain employer is unfair and his methods inimical to the interests of labor, should not the employers, on the other hand, likewise be permitted to blacklist if they think a certain worker is doing or saying things inimical to the interests of the employer?

Mr. GREGORY. I had a note there on that subject, "black list"—unfortunate and injurious. Can the practice of blacklisting be governed by law? Not adequately in my judgment. That, perhaps, answers your question.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Will you elucidate that a little bit more?

Mr. GREGORY. I consider the question, because it operates very harshly and very injuriously, as I believe it to have been practiced. I have not been able, consistent with my views of individual liberty, to devise any scheme of a statute which would deal adequately with that situation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, are we to understand that you do or do not consider blacklisting justifiable?

Mr. GREGORY. If you ask my opinion as to that, I would say that I consider blacklisting in some instances justifiable. That is to say, I don't like to use either the term of blacklist or boycott, because they carry implications that are vague and uncertain; but if an employee is unworthy and unreliable, I consider it proper. For instance, a railroad engineer who has been repeatedly guilty of infractions of the rules—running by a signal and perhaps using intoxicating liquors and things of that kind—I would consider it wrong for the railroad company or the superintendent having knowledge of that quality on the part of the engineer not to advise somebody else, some other railroad officer, who is about to employ that man. I consider that that would be a legitimate act, perfectly.

Now, that boycotting may be abused I have not the slightest doubt, that there may be unjustifiable boycotts. I am not discussing that. There might be boycotts that would work great hardships; but I do say that the law as it exists to-day is, in my judgment, likely to work far more harm than it will good.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, briefly, the situation as it is from your point is this, as I see, that while, as you point out, the boycott is liable to abuse, you nevertheless think that it ought to be a weapon permitted to labor?

Mr. GREGORY. I prefer to say that combination by two or more persons not to trade with a third person ought not to be unlawful and ought not to be actionable, and I don't apply it to labor any more than the gentlemen in this room or a lawyer or anybody else; but I lay that down as a universal principle.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If that principle might even be subject to abuse?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir; there is nothing that can not be.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, if collective action on the part of workers along the line of so-called boycott ought to be permitted despite its occasional abuse, then I take it, from following out your logic to the end, then black listing, despite the fact that it is occasionally abused, likewise ought to be permitted?

Mr. GREGORY. I have not restricted my statement to what you term boycotting to laboring people. It also extends to employers. They should have the same right. But by blacklisting you mean keeping a record of a man's delinquencies and reporting on them, and I would say that that was a practice that might be abused, might be reprehensible, where it was unfairly used; but I have been unable to think out to my own satisfaction any concrete legislative remedy for it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Here is a definition, Mr. Gregory, that has been given to the boycott and the black list. Let us see if the definitions given here are correct as you see them:

"A boycott is the act of a combination of individuals who undertake to deprive another of benefits, business, or social intercourse for the purpose of compelling him to accept some demand of the combination."

Do you regard that as a fair definition of boycott, so-called boycott?

Mr. GREGORY. Possibly.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The definition given the black list is that—

"The black list is the effort of a combination of employers to prevent the employment of one or more individuals."

Mr. GREGORY. Perhaps, as it is generally understood, that may be regarded as a good definition.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, we see in both cases it is a question of combination, combination of workers on the one hand in the boycott and a combination of employers on the other hand under the black list, and that both involve combinations?

Mr. GREGORY. I think the employer might boycott and the labor union might blacklist under those definitions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would use those words practically as synonyms?

Mr. GREGORY. Under the definitions that you have given you will find that is not confined to one side or the other. That is to say, the laboring men, if they combine to prevent somebody being employed, they are called a black list, in accordance with that definition.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. If there is to be absolute equality before the law on both sides, then it seems to me this remains, that either the workers ought to be permitted to boycott and the employer to blacklist; or if the employer is not to be permitted to blacklist, then the worker likewise ought not to be permitted to boycott.

Mr. GREGORY. I don't know as I understand the terms as you do; I don't know that I materially disagree with that view. You would have to judge each case by itself.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. It becomes self-evident, does it not, that if one side is permitted to combine for the purpose of injuring another party, and the other side is not permitted to combine for the purpose of injuring another party, that there is no equality?

Mr. GREGORY. In a case—it is probably in the law, Mr. Commissioner, that a mere combination to injure may be unlawful, and I don't favor a mere combination to injure. I think it is not necessary to go to that extent; but if men, for the purpose of promoting their interests, combine to do something that may injure another person, then I think you have a different situation; at least it is one that the courts make a distinction of and make much of.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then that is the purpose of blacklisting, as I understand it, the employers get together and agree that they will not employ a certain worker because he is a trouble breeder. He creates dissatisfaction and dissension in the ranks of labor, and therefore he is to them, from their point of view, a detriment and an injury, and therefore they agree not to employ him. Now, then, they have exactly the same object in mind that the worker has when he boycotts? He believes that a certain employer is unfair to him, to his labor, and doesn't give him the proper working hours or conditions, and they propose to prevent him getting labor.

Mr. GREGORY. I don't see any reason why a given number of employers should oppose a man that they regard as an agitator getting employment with other employers. You get readily in these cases the lines of distinction, but they are somewhat difficult to explain. You might readily have a kind of an illegal conspiracy, if it appears that the people engaged in this effort were not trying to promote their own interest but to injure a man against whom their activity is directed. It is a question of a good deal of difficulty, and I think myself that probably, as I said to start with, the difficulties to my mind of regulating or prohibiting what is commonly called black list are such that they seem to me inseparable, as far as suggesting any adequate legislation.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There has been legislation on that?

Mr. GREGORY. Oh, yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, there are many States of the Union that have laws against black lists?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And there have been convictions under those laws, have there not?

Mr. GREGORY. I don't happen to remember any; I don't say there have not been; probably there have been.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I think there have. I think we have notations here, Kitchen v. Chicago & North Western Railroad Co., and in Handley v. L. & M. Railroad Co., Kentucky, and—

Mr. GREGORY. Those, I would judge, were actions for damages.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In this latter case an employer was held liable—

Commissioner GARRETSON. Every one is an action for damages.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In this latter case the employer was held liable by his discharged employee for writing a letter to an association of employers containing a request that he be refused employment in all association houses in which he may apply for a position. It was a rule of this association that an employee discharged by one member should be refused employment by all others.

That would indicate that there had been damages awarded.

Mr. GREGORY. I don't know whether there was any legislation there or not, and, of course, irrespective of legislation, a letter of that kind might be libelous and affect an individual cause of action without reference to combination.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the case of Kitchen v. Chicago & North Western Railroad something like $21,000 in damages was awarded to the blacklisted individual.

Commissioner GARRETSON. You had better trace the latter part of it.

Mr. GREGORY. I am not familiar with those cases, but I might say that these laws usually are a kind of a dead letter. They are incapable of efficient enforcement in the nature of things. They kind of satisfy the public, as the old saying, "throwing the sop," they pass a law and then go to sleep over it. I have no confidence in such legislation.

Chairman WALSH. You had not concluded?

Mr. GREGORY. Not quite, and perhaps I ought to have; I have taken so much time of this commission.

Now, I come to this proposition, which to a man that has been at the bar as long as I have, is always a serious one. Suppose that we had an ideal system of law prepared with the wisdom of Plato and Socrates or Aristotle, and all the great interests in America, and these lawgivers secured everybody their rights as far as legislation or code could secure it. You have heard here on the witness stand, I have heard since I have been here, testimony of witnesses that show you absolutely how these provisions fail. There is no way of enforcing the law; the man is poor and humble and one unit in the great industrial enterprise. Now, what can be done? He can hire a lawyer that charges $50 or $100 or $500 a day, if he has the money, and vindicate his rights. It is an impracticable remedy. We have tried to remedy these questions by ancient methods that are as impracticable to modern conditions as navigation by a trireme or a stagecoach would be to modern conditions. We have made a new departure. We have attempted now to enter upon a scheme of regulation by government. Where securing the rights of the general public and of great bodies of citizens has been committed to government, the men are elected executive officers and they swear them to see that the laws are favorably executed. We have, first, the railroad, with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has accomplished much, but much remains to be accomplished, and, in my opinion, the organization of that commission is absolutely inadequate; it is overburdened; it can not by these possibilities, under its present organization, do that which is expected of it. We have recently made a still more ambitious departure in the establishment of the Federal Trade Commission, charged with the important duty of regulating all institutions except railroads engaged in interstate commerce. It is apparent at once that the field there is too large for a single commission. We may have other commissions. Listening yesterday to the witness, it occurred to me that we might have a mines commission. We might have a commission as to manufacturing, and we may have more. In one State in the West I understand they have some 40 commissions now, and the people of that State are inclined to think that is too many, but at least 4 or 5 or a half dozen ought not to be out of proportion for this great country.

Now, I listened to testimony of Dr. McKelway as to child labor. I read that speech of Senator Beveridge and have quoted from it myself in public. It is certain that a national question can only be regulated by the National Government. It is perfectly certain that there can be no efficient child-labor regulation that does not emanate from the National Congress; that is, in a reasonable time. I think that one of the first things that should be done would be for Congress to pass a law providing a Federal incorporation act and also requiring every individual and every corporation engaged in interstate commerce, either to incorporate under that act or to take out a license from the Federal authorities to carry on such business. Of the constitutionality and validity of such legislation I have no doubt.

You at once nationalize all of these questions. Now, it would not be necessary, of course, for the Interstate Commerce Commission to attempt to meet this suggestion as to the railways, but it is different. It should be legalized throughout, and not on different branches throughout the country. There should not be a lawsuit every time a man feels the manufacturer or railroad company refuses to do something required by law. It should not be necessary to travel through the courts, up and down; it is a disgrace to our jurisprudence, but I don't know of any way of stopping it.

For years and years we tried to determine a simple and essential administrative question, and I believe that in time that such legislation as I have indicated, with the appointment of proper commissions, will be regulated. The courts under our constitutional system—there must be some appeal to the courts, but in practice, while there are not bureaus of conciliation and arbitration, there will be bureaus, so that if this miner desires to make a complaint as to the condition of the mines he goes to the commission—the mine committee—and calls attention to the fact, and they act promptly. I know it is attempted to be done in some States, but in a way, I think, which is rather ineffective. Of course, in order to secure compliance with Federal legislation on the subject there must always be the power in the Federal Government to either suspend or cancel the license to carry on interstate business. A power sufficiently formidable in itself, if rightfully used, and not tyrannically, to compel respect for its provisions; that is, one thing or the other, I think, should be carried out. Now, there is another thing that I think will be, perhaps, a little more practical and potent, and it is in that regard that I look upon the work of this commission as of supreme importance. In the beginning God said, "Let there be light." Why do we light the streets of our cities; why is it that crime seeks darkness and not light?

This commission was constituted and, in my judgment, its most important purpose is to turn on the light, to bring the facts as to the industrial conditions in this country to the attention of the American people. The President of the United States in one of those eloquent and felicitous addresses which he knows so well how to deliver last fall stated the opinion of the world is the mistress of the world. It is speaking largely the truth. The opinion of America is mistress of America, and no unjust, oppressive, or unlawful practice can endure, law or no law, when you turn upon them the searchlight of publicity. It is undoubtedly an important duty, as I understand it, of this commission, Mr. Chairman, to report and recommend such legislation as in the judgment of its members the necessity of the situation requires. But, in my opinion, a far higher and more important duty is to lay the entire facts of the industrial situation before the American people, and to that end you have traveled to all parts of this country, you have given everyone an opportunity to be heard, and you have collected what, in my judgment, when it is adequately published, notwithstanding the fact that many of us probably have not contributed much to this discussion, an invaluable mine of information for the American people.

And now I wish to read a brief extract which recently attracted my attention, from the remarks of a distinguished Italian statesman, Señor Pasquale Flore. He said:

"On the other hand, consider for a moment that complex and ominous question, which, day by day, in all countries, grows more demonstrative, the so-called social question. It represents the undefined but unceasing movement on the part of the workmen and the proletariat clamoring for greater comfort and better treatment, greater development of the industries and commerce, so that they may more largely participate in the profit and be able to satisfy the increasing needs of life. The religious sentiment, which urged the people to tolerate privation and actual suffering in the hope of the life that is to come, has lost much of its strength and the proletariat and the working classes demand at once more comfort and more work."

That is a statement of an undenied fact. We hear in this country on the part of large employers of labor much talk of the liquidation of labor, that there will be a fluctuation in the demands of labor, and the right of its recommendation is undoubtedly true. We think there can be or there could be any such liquidation of labor by the great reduction of its share in the depreciation of profit in industries, as is indicated, but that phase is not only impossible, I hope, but is, from their standpoint, most undesirable. Wages must be higher; they must constantly tend to increase, not because the laboring man so wills, but because of prosperity and progress of this country and of every country. Oh, well, the man says, we have done pretty well in life; I don't care what he is, whether a capitalist, lawyer, laboring man, or artisan; but my children must be content or else we must go backward, and not forward, and the moment that happens that country has entered upon a condition of decadency and decay. It is the duty of every man that labors, as the great mass of people do, and I will include in that, although perhaps Mr. Commissioner Garretson seems to indicate to the contrary, professional men—I will include professional men, lawyers—it is the duty of every man that labors to desire that those who come after him in his calling shall have better profits than he had, unless he is unusually fortunate, and that means progress, and it means increased purchasing ability on the part of the masses. Why, we hear much of the burning of gasoline and the opening of champagne on the Great White Way. What does it amount to? Nothing at all as to the prosperity of this country; but it is the ability to purchase by the great masses of people that you see every day on the streets, in which the prosperity of the country, the prosperity of its railroads and every great industrial interest itself is absolutely involved. And any idea that wages must be progressively reduced means simply national degeneration and decay.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Let me correct a word. I said labor men, not laboring men.

Mr. GREGORY. Perhaps there is a distinction sometimes.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Returning to the boycott for a minute, the impression largely prevails that it is the laboring man that is constantly boycotting. He seems to be the guilty person in connection with this boycotting.

They are lawabiding citizens in the general sense of the application. A few miles away from where we are now sitting property is sold and the deed provides that the property can not again be resold or rented to a colored person. It is found, however, that that is not held good. In a certain section not far from where we are there were no black people living in the section; it was a new section. The property was all laid out with the understanding that it would be sold only to white people. Some persons who bought property there found that they could not meet the payments, and the agent who had sold the property mysteriously found a tenant and sold the property at a large profit, it is reported. One day a colored person moved into this property, into the neighborhood, and there was great excitement. You could have bought that property that day in that neighborhood at 25 to 50 per cent off. Everybody thought the neighborhood was going to turn black instantly. There was an association of the people that owned the property in that territory, formed for the purpose of holding monthly meetings, and looking after the development of that section, and things of that sort for which such associations are organized, and immediately a boycott was placed upon this real estate man, and the sabotage that was spoken about yesterday was being carried out by the white men's children in that neighborhood, not workingmen. The windows were broken in the house and the colored children had to sneak out the back way if they got out at all, and finally the agent was compelled by force of this boycott to take the black tenant out of the house and repair the house, and there has been no attempt to put black people in the neighborhood since. Now, you cited the case of the possibility of a saloon coming into the neighborhood of which you spoke. Under those circumstances the fact that in this territory there was no black person living, and if they had come in it would have had the effect of reducing the value of property, that is the general result that has occurred. Now, is a situation of that kind justified or not?

Mr. GREGORY. Well, that is another question. Legally I say it is not. It does not justify breaking windows.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. No; that was incidental.

Mr. GREGORY. Yes; but I think legally those people should be permitted, if they saw fit, to combine. Those instances happen with us, and one more aggravated than that which you speak of where a colored man had secured a lease of property just before I left Chicago, and the assistant corporation counsel of the city was one of the alleged boycotters. I don't think human nature, Mr. Commissioner, is very different in the laboring men than it is in lawyers and doctors and employers.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In this case there were lawyers and doctors, and all very active boycotters?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. In the same neighborhood the property is built in a large square, and the lots do not run into each other. Consequently there is a sort of hollow square in this block that the owner or real estate men did not sell to the property owners. All at once, one day, a lot of wagons of rubbish of all kinds usually found around a barn landed in that hollow space, and a very cheap affair building was put up, and within a few days a lot of horses and a lot more wagons piled into this place. There was another boycott declared, and it was claimed that pestilence and flies and almost all kinds of diseases would come into the neighborhood, and another meeting was called and another boycott took place and that disappeared. Now, I cite this to show that the boycotting is not always the workingman who is boycotting to compel some one to grant him better wages or better conditions of employment.

Mr. GREGORY. Undoubtedly.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. We are a nation of boycotters. There is no one within the sound of my voice, so far as I know, that is not boycotting all the time. He tells somebody, my printer is a bum printer, or my shoemaker is no good, or my tailor is beastly in his designs, and so on; constantly boycotting.

Mr. GREGORY. We have the greatest dry goods stores in the world in Chicago, undoubtedly, if you will permit me to say that, perhaps knowing how much disposed Chicago people are to boast a little, and if you should hear the ladies, Mr. Commissioner, as they talk sometimes about their experiences and urge each other to cut this shop or that shop or the other shop you would think this boycotting was even more extensive than perhaps you have heretofore thought. It is a natural impulse.

Commissioner GARRETSON. Now, speaking of boycotting and blacklisting, wasn't the ostracism of the Greek law and banishment of the Roman law exactly in principle boycotting culminating in an individual blacklist by the entire nation?

Mr. GREGORY. Well, I think the ostracism of the Greek was.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In form?

Mr. GREGORY. Substantially.

Commissioner GARRETSON. And we have an instance in one instance where they tolerated the application of it simply because the victim was too good, Aristides, because they got tired of hearing him called "the just"?

Mr. GREGORY. Yes; after Aristides, they got tired of hearing him called "the just."

Commissioner GARRETSON. Does not equality before the law, which has been accented quite strongly, become something of a farce or become absurd when it is considered as between a man like the one who testified yesterday and his employer, when the man has only one weapon, the right not to work, and all the arsenal is in the hands of his employer?

Mr. GREGORY. It's practical accomplishment in such cases is difficult, if not impossible, under present conditions.

Commissioner GARRETSON. In your evidence yesterday, referring to the trial by jury—well, that is not germane to the matter. I will pass the question, Mr. Chairman. That is all.

Commissioner LENNON. I want to ask one question, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon has a question.

Commissioner LENNON. Mr. Gregory, is the issuance of injunctions warranted where there is other adequate remedy at law to cure that which the injunction seeks to handle?

Mr. GREGORY. It is one of the canons of the law on that subject that in such cases injunction should not issue—particularly, a preliminary injunction.

Commissioner LENNON. That is all.

Chairman WALSH. That is all. You will now be excused permanently. We thank you for your attendance.

Mr. GREGORY. Thank you, sir.

Chairman WALSH. Is Mr. Arthur Woods here?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ARTHUR WOODS.

Chairman WALSH. State your name, please.

Mr. Woods. Arthur Woods.

Chairman WALSH. Where do you live?

Mr. Woods. New York City.

Chairman WALSH. And your business, please.

Mr. Woods. Police headquarters, New York City.

Chairman WALSH. What official position do you hold?

Mr. Woods. Police commissioner.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you held that position?

Mr. Woods. A little over 13 months; since the 8th of April, 1914.

Chairman WALSH. What is your occupation—your general occupation, I don't mean now, Mr. Woods?

Mr. Woods. That is hard to state, Mr. Chairman. I have done a good many things.

Chairman WALSH. I—are you a business man or a professional man?

Mr. Woods. I have been a newspaper man, and I have been a schoolmaster, and I have been a business man. It is pretty hard to generalize from all those three.

Chairman WALSH. What police regulations are now in effect in New York with reference to free speech and free assemblage and picketing in strikes? I believe your attention has been directed to that particularly?

Mr. Woods. May I talk a little generally on the question, sir?

Chairman WALSH. Indeed, you may. We would like to have you do so.

Mr. Woods. Well, free speech and free assemblage are constitutional rights, and as I understand it, the local authorities have the right to regulate those locally, but not in such a way as to destroy them or abrogate them, and really, in effect, only in such a way as to preserve them. For instance, in New York, we not merely permit free speech and free assemblage and picketing, but we protect it. If an assemblage should assume such proportions as seriously to interfere with traffic—that is, if in the endeavor to preserve its own rights it seriously interfered with the rights of others, we should then have to take measures to stop it in that particular location; not to stop it altogether, but to remove it from the particular location and the particular circumstances in which it was overriding the rights of others.

If a free assemblage incited to immediate violence, I should then take whatever police measures might be necessary to prevent that violence. Except for those two restrictions, free speech and free assemblage are not merely permitted, but are protected in the city.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How about picketing?

Mr. Woods. Picketing, the same principle applies. We not merely permit lawful picketing, but we protect lawful pickets in the exercise of their full rights.

Chairman WALSH. You feel that that is part of the duty of the protecting authority of the law to keep those rights vindicated, and to keep the ways open to the exercise of them?

Mr. Woods. Absolutely.

Chairman WALSH. And has that been the conduct, so far as guided by you, of the New York police authorities?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir.

Chairman WALSH. How have you found it to work out? You say you speak generally; we would like to have you speak generally. You have seen the disturbances that have occurred throughout the country, and the varying views in regard to these very large questions, and they have been before us many times, and we are trying to epitomize here, through the best authority we have, what the attitude of the Government ought to be toward them, and the attitude of the people, for that matter.

Mr. Woods. Why, I see no two ways. The thing was rather strikingly brought to my attention. A year ago this last winter, as you will remember, through New York City there were a number of disturbances supposed to have been fomented by anarchists, and I. W. W.'s, etc., etc.; and there were meetings every Saturday in Union Square; strong police guards appeared at those meetings, and the result was that there was a good deal of unpleasantness. There were a number of broken heads; there was a good deal of re-crimination back and forth, and there were a number of arrests. And the Saturday before I took office—I took office, I think on Wednesday—and the Saturday before I took office there was a particularly turbulent meeting in Union Square—a good many thousands of people. A little while before that there had been a disorderly march up Fifth Avenue, where a number of persons had been arrested. And the Saturday just before I took office there was violence, and there was a certain amount of bloodshed, and the result of it was that there were loud threats as to what would happen the next Saturday if the people did not get their free rights to assemble and speak.

Well, I took office in the interim after that turbulent Saturday, and quite changed the policy, the methods, and the orders given to the police. There was on the following Saturday a very small police force evident, although there were enough police available that if violence had resulted we could have handled the situation. Very few police were there. I had personally given them their instructions, and told them that they were to afford to the assemblage its full rights; that they were to interfere only if the traffic was seriously impeded, and if incitement to immediate violence was present. They were, under no circumstances, to act, as I don't believe they had acted, in any manner that could excite resentment on the part of the assemblage. The result of it was that they had a very large gathering—a good many thousands of people were there—and they spoke all sorts of doctrines, and they went on, and there was no disturbance; there was no trouble; there was no disorder. I had been in the office all the afternoon, and at the end of the afternoon I was called up by the chief inspector, who was in charge. He told me the meeting was practically over; one or two hundred people up there. I went up and stopped in the place. I was not recognized. I went up toward the crowd of one or two hundred people, perhaps, and their orator got up on the billboards, and as I went up he called out, "Well, boys, the cops certainly have made good to-day. Three cheers for the cops." Now, that is one instance.

Now, we had another instance at the time when there was picketing in front of the building where the Standard Oil office was. There was a meeting at Bowling Green during the noon hour, and some woman was addressing the crowd, and a man who was listening to it took exception to her remarks. She got a little strong in some of her remarks, apparently, and he said he couldn't stand for that. There was one policeman at that gathering. He went up to this man and tapped him on the shoulder and said, "Here, cut that out." "But I can't stand for what she is saying. Did you hear her?" And the policeman says, "Yes; she is having her meeting here, and I am protecting her in that meeting, as long as she keeps the law. If you want to have a meeting, come over here, and I will protect you."

Now, there were several things of that kind that happened. This winter there have been meetings in various parts of the city, in the same place, in Union Square, and there has been no trouble.

Chairman WALSH. In your position as police commissioner have you given special study to the operations of so-called gunmen and professionals of that stamp?

Mr. Woods. I have.

Chairman WALSH. Have you discovered any connection between gunmen, or their employment in the large cities, and the use of such persons in industrial disturbances?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Please give us your observations upon that.

Mr. Woods. I can not speak much except for New York City; you spoke of large cities.

Chairman WALSH. I was drawing, perhaps, an illustration from that—I thought perhaps we might.

Mr. Woods. Yes. Well, by "gunmen" you do not mean simply a person who is found with a revolver on his person?

Chairman WALSH. I do not mean the person who is arrested, or ought to be arrested, for carrying concealed weapons, but what might be called one of a body of men commonly known as gunmen.

Mr. Woods. Yes. They are called "gunmen," "guerillas," "gangsters," and I might define them roughly as men who have a questionable means of livelihood and can be hired to commit crime. Does some such definition as that meet your idea?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; I think you have the idea.

Mr. Woods. There has been a great deal of crime committed in New York by these gunmen, and it is a kind of crime which is particularly intolerable, because it is crime which can be hired. There seem to be these professional criminals who are hireable to commit crime. They are an undiluted menace to the body politic. Perhaps I had better not go on; I was going to talk a little about gunmen.

Chairman WALSH. Please go ahead; your testimony applies to what the commission has in mind.

Mr. Woods. I was going to point out what they do.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

Mr. Woods. There are six or seven different methods of earning an "honest living," and the first is, I say "first," but not in order of importance, they are used at repeating and intimidating voters at election time. Second, in connection with gambling. They are the people who are the cappers for the gamblers, and do the work inside of the gambling houses, and when the town is a little bit tight, as I hope it is at the present time, they do not find such a fruitful source of employment in that particular. Another source of income is by selling and dealing in habit-forming drugs, a traffic which has grown enormously in the past few years and which is a great menace.

Again, they live off the earnings of prostitutes; they live by employment in industrial disturbances; they can be hired generally for any sort of crime, and they have a custom of holding what they call "rackets," which are balls, parties of one kind or another, and then blackmailing people into buying tickets for them. A successful ball for a gang leader with a reputation ought to net him well over $1,500 by the forced sale of tickets. That is the general character of what we call gunmen.

Chairman WALSH. How do you ascertain, Mr. Woods, the use of these men in industrial affairs, industrial disputes?

Mr. Woods. Well, it has been a matter of common police knowledge for some time that they have been used in connection with industrial disputes, in strikes; but a short time after I took office—well, not a short time—I think it was last September, when I was trying to shrink up the sources of income of these people from all points of view, and was studying out the principal gunmen, who the leaders of the gang were, to see how they were making their unlawful living, I was trying to contract their sources of income so that they might be driven out of town or behind the bars, or put to the unspeakable shame of having to earn an honest living, I happened to have an opportunity to learn of an attempt of one Dopey Benny, commonly called; he was trying, as the information went, to force the representative of some union which was having a strike to employ him, and the representative of the union did not want to employ him; he said he did not want to have that kind of strike. Benny had give him until that afternoon to give him his money, so we had detectives stationed in this man's shop on that afternoon, and one was supplied with marked money with which he was to pay Benny. The detectives overheard the conversation and made the arrest. The case was such a sure case that this man Benny began to squeal, as the common parlance goes, turned State's evidence.

Well, from September until yesterday that process has been going on. This man has been confessing, has been giving evidence as to his part in industrial disturbances, and at least 8 or 10 other persons have been doing the same thing, and the result or the beginning of the result was the filing of indictments yesterday by the grand jury of New York County—some preliminary indictments. Now, those indictments were all filed against representatives of unions. The investigation so far has shown a very large employment of gunmen by strikers; has shown a very much less employment of gunmen by employers. The cases that we have found where they have been employed by employers have been indirect, in that the employer has hired a private detective agency to protect him against alleged violence, and among the men supplied by the private detective agency have seemed to be some of those gunmen; but the great use of the gunmen in connection with strikes in New York City the past few years has been, we have been able to find out as a result of this very exhaustive investigation, has been by strikers.

Chairman WALSH. Have the indictments been announced yet?

Mr. Woods. Yes; in this morning's papers.

Chairman WALSH. How many of them were there?

Mr. Woods. I can not tell you exactly, but I think there were 12 indictments handed down yesterday afternoon.

Chairman WALSH. Is the investigation still going on?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

Chairman WALSH. Who presented them to the grand jury?

Mr. Woods. The district attorney of New York County.

Chairman WALSH. Who called attention to the matter, if you know?

Mr. Woods. I guess I did.

Chairman WALSH. Has any investigation of the use of these gunmen in connection with industrial disputes ever been made before to your knowledge in New York, Mr. Woods?

Mr. Woods. Well, I can not give you conclusively information about that, but I should say nothing like so thorough going as this.

Chairman WALSH. Has any investigation been made to ascertain whether or not they were used in other places than New York City?

Mr. Woods. I can not tell you that; there was a recent disturbance at Roosevelt, N. J., which you remember, and it was alleged that New York gunmen had been brought out there; I think probably they had, but we sent out some of our men to see the people there who were arrested, and they recognized none of them as New York gunmen. But it has been brought out in that investigation that New York gunmen have been taken to other cities; we have definite instances where they have been taken to Chicago, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other cities. One of the extraordinary features of the case is that in connection with strikes where women are employed. Women are used as "gunwomen," so to speak.

Chairman WALSH. What organizations are affected by these indictments? What labor organizations were found to have taken those men, to have used these people?

Mr. Woods. The indictments had not been found when I left the city; all I can tell you would be what is contained in the newspapers.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. Largely the east side Hebrew trades, is it not?

Mr. Woods. Yes; I think so.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The organization known on the east side as the central body of Hebrew organizations in the east side?

Mr. Woods. I could not be sure and state definitely it was Hebrews.

Chairman WALSH. What detective agencies have been found to have used these men, as you have stated?

Mr. Woods. That I should not want to give you a definite list of names about at this time. If you would like, I can send them to you.

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would, and if it is not proper to publish the names at this time, while this grand jury investigation is going on, we will withhold them, of course, until such time as they can be published, but will only use them in our report of recommendations.

(Communication containing list of names referred to will be found printed among exhibits at the end of this subject as "Woods's Exhibit.")

Chairman WALSH. Do you know by whom these New York gunmen were taken to other cities?

Mr. Woods. No; I do not know.

Chairman WALSH. By what individual or organization?

Mr. Woods. No; I do not know, but I think you could get that information; would you like to have men send you that?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; very much; please do so.

(Information referred to appears among the exhibits at the end of this subject as "Woods's Exhibit.")

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Weinstock wishes to ask some questions.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. How many police commissioners are there in New York City, Mr. Woods?

Mr. Woods. Only one, unfortunately, at the present time.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. To use a Greek expression, you are the "whole cheese"?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You were telling us about these gunmen blackmailing people by compelling them to buy tickets for alleged balls; what happens to a prospect if he declines to buy tickets?

Mr. Woods. Things are made disagreeable for him in various ways, and he may suffer violence; his windows may be broken; his customers may be kept away from his store; and various things like that may happen.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are these gunmen organized? Have they associations?

Mr. Woods. It is more or less closed; I should say as a rule it is the development of the so-called corner gang.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Do they have leaders?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And representatives?

Mr. Woods. I should think probably there is no formal meeting, and they do not have a definite organization with by-laws, and that sort of thing, but they have well-organized groups of men, and the leader is understood.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Does the group obey the leader; does he have control over them?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is it known what punishment will be inflicted on a member of the gang who does not obey the leader?

Mr. Woods. You mean, is it known to me, or is it generally known?

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is it known to the men in the group?

Mr. Woods. That has not been brought out, especially what would happen to a member that did not obey the leader; the leader is there by popular selection, and if he is not satisfactory, then he goes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. As a result of your investigation, what have you found to be the method of procedure in industrial troubles; do these gangsters offer their services to both sides, and take the highest bidder, or do they confine their operations and offer their services to one side of the labor trouble?

Mr. Woods. I should not say it was "offering their services," but the result of our investigation shows a course of procedure like this; there would be a strike and the strikers would retain some gunmen to do whatever forcible or violent work they needed. The employer, to meet this violence, would, in a comparatively small percentage of cases, and not as many cases as the gunmen were employed on the other side, would hire a private detective agency.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, when the unions employed these gunmen, what function were the gunmen expected to perform?

Mr. Woods. To intimidate workers that were hired to take the place of the strikers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is so-called scabs?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir; so-called scabs.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have there been instances where there has been violence against the so-called scabs?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. To what degree?

Mr. Woods. Oh, to very strong violence.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Have they committed murder?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir; I think that is being brought out now. As I remember it last night in the newspaper article there were three indictments for murder in the first degree.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. There is no limit then to what degree they will go to intimidate the so-called scabs?

Mr. Woods. No. Now, there was a case that was noticed a good deal in the newspapers awhile ago of an innocent man by the name of Straus, who was shot and killed on the east side. The Dopey Benny gang was employed by the strikers, and some other gangsters were employed by the employers; I can not remember which particular gang it was. One of the Dopey Benny gang had been killed by one of the other gang.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Competing gangs?

Mr. Woods. Yes; one gang employed by one side, and one gang by the other side. I may have my thing a little twisted here, but the gang that killed the member of the other gang was holding a ball, and the other gang came up to get revenge for the killing, and the man that they tried to shoot jumped behind this perfectly innocent citizen, Straus, and Straus was killed.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, are the so-called gangs of gunmen confined to the east side of New York, or are there other gangs in other parts of the city?

Mr. Woods. There are gangs in other parts of the city.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In what parts of the city, for example?

Mr. Woods. There are gangs on the west side. The gang—I think I am justified in saying that the number and virulence of gangs has been very much reduced in the past 12 months. The situation we found was a bad situation. The policy under the former administration had been to use mild methods; the whole thing has been very much reduced in the last 12 months, but you will find headquarters of gangs and places they hold out in the lower east side, and the middle west side, and in some parts of Brooklyn, on the upper east side.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is every member of the gang of one nationality usually, or are they composed of mixed groups? For instance, on the east side, are they all Jews?

Mr. Woods. No; they would be mixed groups.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Of different nationalities?

Mr. Woods. Yes; of course people are naturally nationally clanish, more or less, and you naturally have a predominance of one nationality in one group.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. For example, in the so-called "blackhand" groups, are there any members other than Italians?

Mr. Woods. The term "blackhand" is a term which is very much abused. There is no such thing as an organized "blackhand." The term "blackhand" is a pretty terrifying term when used to ignorant persons, and anyone who wants to earn an easy living can write a letter and sign it "Blackhand," and demand a certain amount of money, and sometimes have reasonable success in getting the demand. We have not found organized societies called "blackhand," as in Italy it is understood there are organized societies called the Mafia and the Camorra. We found instances of blackhand work on the part of Italian criminals who were trying to blackmail members of the Italian population.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Are gunmen natives, or chiefly foreigners?

Mr. Woods. Both.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Foreigners and natives?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And they are not confined to any one or the other?

Mr. Woods. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And they come from different nationalities?

Mr. Woods. Yes.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. No one nationality has a monopoly?

Mr. Woods. No.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Is there anything in the industrial situation, Mr. Woods, that you think is conducive to the creation of gunmen? Is one the cause and the other the effect? For instance, would you say the industrial situation is the cause and the gunmen the effect, or is the existence of the gunmen independent of industrial conditions?

Mr. Woods. I named, I think, seven different classes of income of the gunmen, and of those seven different sources, strikes were only one, so if he should no longer be able to get a living from strikes, he might from the other sources.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So, regardless of what the industrial situation might be, the gunmen would, in all likelihood, continue to exist?

Mr. Woods. When the police do their duty, as I think they are, he can be blotted out; I think he can be pretty well blotted out.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Well, the thought occurred to me that it might be held to be, according to our present industrial system, that gunmen are in all fields of our present industrial system. I want your judgment on that?

Mr. Woods. I would say not.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In relation to it?

Mr. Woods. He comes in useful in certain homes of industrial dispute, but we have minimized that very largely by affording the protection needed with the police. We try to make it clear where a strike occurs that both sides will be protected in the possession of their full legal rights by the police. It is an outrage there in a civilized community to have one side hire one kind of special and private armed guards, or the other side do the same thing, and neither side rely upon the properly constituted force of law and order.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, that neither side would come into court with clean hands?

Mr. Woods. I don't think you can say there is one side and another side. Each dispute brings in a group of persons.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And as a result of your experience you have found that employers are guilty of resorting to the methods you condemn, and likewise the labor unions have resorted to the methods that you condemn?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir; that there were two points that ought to be considered in connection with that; so far we have not found the direct employment of gunmen except by strikers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. The employment by employers has been indirect?

Mr. Woods. The employment by employers has been indirect, through private detective agencies, and we have found far more employment of gunmen by strikers than by employers.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. One other thought that is made by critics of the present industrial system is that it is conducive to prostitution. I suppose that dealing with that you have found how to minimize it, and it has led you to investigate the causes? In so far as your investigation and experience goes, would you say that the present industrial condition is largely the cause of prostitution, or have you found, as has been found by many other investigators in many cities, that the question of low wages for women is one of the remote causes, and one of the minor causes for prostitution?

Mr. Woods. Well, Mr. Weinstock, I hesitate very much about going into any definite conclusion one way or the other. It is a question that has been with us for so many centuries that I don't think we can say that any particular industrial system of to-day is the cause of it. There may be a great many things affect it one way or the other, but I should be and am very slow about letting myself come to many conclusions as to the cause of it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You are not prepared, then, to express an opinion on the matter?

Mr. Woods. I could say, not expressing at all a finished or considered conclusion, that it seems to me the question of low wages has far less to do with it than I at one time thought; but I reserve full liberty to revise my conclusion on that.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. If you revised your conclusion to any extent, what do you allege it to, on what basis it does occur?

Mr. Woods. I am at a loss—

Commissioner O'CONNELL. You just conclude that it is not a question of wages, but you have not agreed with yourself what is the cause?

Mr. Woods. No, sir; it is simply a conclusion.

Commissioner LENNON. You say these gunmen are employed by strikers; you may not be able to answer this question at present—I don't know whether you care to or not—but have you any evidence that connects this employment by strikers with direct action of the union?

Mr. Woods. You mean formal action of the union?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. Woods. No, sir; I don't know about that.

Commissioner LENNON. You have no such evidence?

Mr. Woods. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. I have been asked to ask you this question: Did your investigation bring out the fact, if it was a fact, that guards and strike breakers were recruited from the ranks of these gunmen by detective agencies, who were afterwards sent to Calumet and to West Virginia in the Cabin Creek district?

Mr. Woods. I don't think so; I can look it up if you wish?

Chairman WALSH. I wish you would.

(Information referred to is mentioned in "Woods Exhibit," which appears among the exhibits at the end of this subject.)

Chairman WALSH. And I have been asked if you have had any experience with industrial-service corporations in the city of New York that seemed to make a business of employing strike breakers and guards and the like?

Mr. Woods. I don't remember that title at all. Might I have those questions?

Chairman WALSH. Yes; just take that memoranda, it will show it.

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir; I will take that.

Chairman WALSH. And unless there is something that you have in mind that you think might enlighten us in our work you will be excused permanently. If there is any other suggestion that you think you could make we would be glad to have it.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I might ask this one question. Some one handed me a clipping from the New York Herald of the 5th. Is this the result of your investigation—this case of Dopey Benny? This article says:

"The diary which 'Dopey Benny' Fein, now in Sing Sing, but formerly leader of an east side gang of thugs, kept for five years upon his employment by labor-union leaders proved to be so accurate that yesterday an extra grand jury presented 12 indictments against 34 labor leaders to Judge Malone in the court of general sessions.

"Several of the 34 men are mentioned in each of the 12 indictments, and the charges include murder, assault, extortion, and rioting.

"No better commentary upon the reign of intimidation, backed by violence, conducted by labor unions in that section ever fell into the hands of the prosecuting officers than that unfolded by the diary of 'Dopey Benny.' He combined business ability with his leadership of a band of hired assassins and thugs. He kept accurate books, showing by whom he was employed, who was to be killed or attacked, what factories were to be besieged, where riots were to be started, the prices paid for these services, and the net result in dead and wounded, with names and other details.

"His diary, which really is a complete ledger, was placed in the hands of Lieut. Detective Clinton M. Wood"—

That is not yourself?

Mr. Woods. No, sir; that is one of my men.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK (continuing reading): "And with several aids he has been investigating the entries. Upon the proof of their accuracy the grand jury yesterday voted the indictments. 'Dopey Benny' also was presented to the grand jury, and he is said to have amplified any clouded entries which might have appeared in his ledger. This business man's document gave in each instance the identity of each member of his band who took part in the crimes and how much he was paid for his services."

Was that the outcome of your investigation?

Mr. Woods. That is what I have alluded to. That is rather picturesque, though.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. The other side has not been heard from in the matter?

Mr. Woods. Oh, yes; we have been after all the facts; we don't care who they hit.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But the defense has not been presented, has not presented its side?

Mr. Woods. No, sir; not as far as the courts go.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. There is no evidence to show you that Dopey Benny's statements are true; you have simply those statements as facts?

Mr. Woods. We, of course, would not—an indictment would not be filed, and we would not go ahead on this thing without what seemed to us sufficient corroborative evidence, because, however estimable this man may be, and how reliable his diary may be, we would not go ahead on that without investigating it.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. But the fact that the grand jury indicted is not an indication of guilt?

Mr. Woods. No, sir.

Commissioner O'CONNELL. So the defense has not had its day yet?

Mr. Woods. No, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In how far have your investigations warranted this statement that appears following:

"Several of the indictments mention assaults upon members of the union, and in this connection District Attorney Perkins said last night that the reign of lawlessness was caused by union leaders who wished to perpetuate themselves in power, who hired assassins to assault contenders in their own union for their places, and who used their union offices to extort blackmail under threats from employers.

"Seven men are indicted for assault in a riot for control of a union. Four men are indicted for hiring Dopey Benny's band to go to a nonunion factory and 'rough house' the employees as they left, and 'wreck' the plant. A dozen workers were wounded in that fight.

"Six union men are accused of extortion and assault in using violence to collect a fine of $100 upon an employer. Four others are accused of hiring the Dopey Benny band to shoot up a nonunion factory. Many shots were fired, the factory suffered a damage of $1,000, and several persons were injured. Other indictments mention cases where the band was employed by union leaders to attack nonunion workers, to wreck factories, and even to assault union men who opposed the leaders."

Does your investigation substantiate those statements here?

Mr. Woods. Yes, sir; that is the general line of things that we found. All that sort of thing.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. So that this is not mere newspaper exaggeration, to your knowledge?

Mr. Woods. No, sir.

Chairman WALSH. That is all; we thank you very much.

Mr. Seager.

TESTIMONY OF DR. HENRY R. SEAGER.

Chairman WALSH. Please state your name, Doctor.

Dr. SEAGER. Henry R. Seager.

Chairman WALSH. Your residence?

Dr. SEAGER. New York.

Chairman WALSH. Your profession, please?

Dr. SEAGER. Professor of political economy at Columbia University.

Chairman WALSH. How long have you occupied that position?

Dr. SEAGER. Fourteen years.

Chairman WALSH. And I wish you would please tell us, Doctor, the course of your studies and other means of information which you might have, touching upon the question of the disposition of production in industry.

Dr. SEAGER. My special interest, ever since I began to specialize in political economy, has been the labor problem, and of late years, for several years, I have been president of the American Association for Labor Legislation, and in that connection I have not only been interested in the theoretical aspects of the matter, but have been concerned with the practical aspects of the matter, particularly in New York. That experience has impressed me with the truth of statements that have been made before your commission in the last two days, perhaps more than would have been the case if I had been a mere closet student of economics.

To follow the questionnaire that has been prepared as the basis for my remarks, I don't see how any fairminded person can question the fact that our judges have shown a decided bias in favor of employers. I would not be inclined to ascribe this so much to class bias, although I think that is a factor, as to the antecedent training of our judges.

Under our legal system the principal task of the lawyer is to protect property rights, and property rights have come to be concentrated more and more into the hands of corporations, so that the successful lawyer of to-day, in a great majority of cases, is the corporation lawyer. His business is to protect the rights of employers and corporations. It is from the ranks of successful lawyers, for the most part, that our judges are selected, and from that results inevitably a certain angle on the part of a majority of our judges when they become judges. Personally I have the highest respect for our judges, I believe that they strive to be judicious in connection with cases that come before them; but coming to the bench after having represented employers for such a long time, they are then removed from their class contact with labor struggles, and the bias, usually the unconscious bias, that they bring with them to their judicial position often persists and influences their judicial decisions. I believe that is shown in connection with any one of the different groups of decisions involving labor issues that one might study. Decisions relating to issues that have arisen in connection with labor disputes show it, and decisions in connection with the constitutionality of labor laws show it, and so with reference to other groups of decisions in labor cases. As to the possible remedy for that situation I myself am inclined to be optimistic, because I believe the criticism of this bias that is more and more common in the discussion of labor cases on the part of many students of the matter is having marked influence on the attitude of judges. It has made them more conscious of this danger and more conscientious in trying to overcome such a predisposition in favor of the employer by studying the other side of the labor problem.

It is quite evident in jurisdictions where judges are elected that there is more or less selection against judges whose reputation is based on eminence attained in defending the interests of corporations, and therefore I believe an historical review of decisions would show that the trend of decisions is toward a more and more fair-minded attitude toward both sides. I think that is conspicuously shown in the case of the United States Supreme Court, and it is certainly very markedly shown in the case of our New York Court of Appeals. From a court which until recently has rendered decisions which seem to me to show a clear lack of understanding of the labor side of the problem, we have had within the last few months as broad and liberal decisions as sympathizers with that aspect of the question could desire.

In the State of New York, as the members of this commission doubtless know, we are in process of amending our constitution, and some of us who are impressed with the unsatisfactory results of the decisions in some of these labor cases are urging in our constitutional convention a change which shall free the hands of the legislators in the field of labor legislation, so far as the State constitution is concerned. The argument that we are presenting to the constitutional convention is that under our system of government we now have protection through the due-process clause of the State constitution, and also through the due-process clause of the Federal Constitution. That the result of this is that a State court may hold a labor law unconstitutional, at the same time that the Federal Supreme Court is declaring constitutional the same sort of legislation. Or a labor law may be held constitutional in one jurisdiction by one State court, while a State court in another jurisdiction takes the contrary view and holds it unconstitutional. We submit that the simplest and most logical and most effective way to avoid this conflict of decisions, and at the same time to preserve the right of the courts to pass upon these issues, is to remove the limitation of the State constitution on the right of the State legislature, with reference to labor legislation, so that the only issue before the State court would be does this violate the due-process limitation of the Federal Constitution, an issue which under the changed system resulting from legislation last winter, if decided against the labor law, might be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there passed upon by that tribunal in such a way that the decision would apply uniformly to the whole country. We feel that this plan offers a needed remedy for the evil of conflicting decisions as to what may be done under the police power. To be more concrete, in New York we passed a workmen's compensation law. Our court of appeals unanimously held that that involved violation of the "due-process" provision of our State constitution, and that the compensation principle was unconstitutional. A little later Washington passed a law not dissimilar in principle to the New York law, and the Supreme Court of Washington unanimously held it constitutional—that it conformed with the requirements of the "due process of law" provision. We feel that if we could get away from this anomalous situation, if all these issues could finally be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it could lay down the rule as to what "due process" requires for the whole country it would be well. Whether that view will be taken by our constitutional convention remains to be seen; but at any rate the matter is going to be urged upon the consideration of our constitutional convention.

Chairman WALSH. Is it your organization that is doing that? That is, the American Association for Labor Legislation?

Dr. SEAGER. It is a committee organized by the Association for Labor Legislation; but the individuals are from a number of other organizations active in New York, and from labor organization, and in that way representing broadly the interests of labor, of social workers, and of students of the problem.

The next question on the memorandum that was given to me was as to whether the poor man was at a disadvantage under our legal system—whether he enjoys equal rights with the rich man. The poor man is at a disadvantage in almost every direction, and I feel clear that he is at a decided disadvantage as our laws operate. The limitations on his ability to enjoy the equal protection of the laws are so obvious that perhaps it would be a waste of your time to go into them. At the outset he may be accused of an offense in connection with which bail would be accepted. He may not be in a position to provide bail. That means that he must languish in prison. Or the penalty may be a fine or imprisonment. In every jurisdiction, so far as I know, the equivalent in a fine for a day in jail is preposterously low under modern conditions. I noticed the other day in the papers that an offender was given imprisonment for 20 days or $30 fine. The man did not have the $30 and so had to spend the 20 days in jail. Then, in reference to the ability to command the best legal advice the poor man is at an obvious disadvantage.

Then, in connection with litigation involving the wage earner there is, as I have indicated, in my opinion, an unconscious bias on the part of the judges—their failure to enter into his situation and to feel or see just the limitations under which he labors. In those various ways and others I fear that there is inevitably a handicap on the poor man—a handicap that probably can not be removed except by helping the poor man not to be a poor man any longer.

The next question refers to the basis of the reluctance of labor organizations and individual workers to present their cases for judicial determination. "How far do you consider that the existing attitude is justified? In what way can the existing attitude best be modified?"

I think the existing attitude is justified to a certain extent, as I have indicated. I think, however, that it is exaggerated because of the lack of acquaintance of wage earners with judicial procedure. In my contact with wage earners I am impressed by the fact that many of them do not discriminate between the different kind of actions and are as frightened by a summons to court as they would be by a criminal indictment. That results from an ignorance of just what a particular order of a court may involve. I see no way to correct that situation other than by education, including education that will make our judges more clearly aware of the interests of both sides, and possibly the provision of machinery for looking after the interests of wage earners—a suggestion that I will come back to in a moment.

The last question asks for recommendations that would tend to modify the present situation in the right direction.

Chairman WALSH. Pardon me, before we get to that, Doctor, have you made any particular study of the methods of selecting jurors so as to—

Dr. SEAGER (interrupting). No; I have not. I have no knowledge, or even impression, on that.

Chairman WALSH. If there is a feeling on the part of workers and a fear of the court which has been expressed before to us many times, that is the reason we are calling your attention, as well as that of some other citizens, to it. If that is true, might it not result from the method of obtaining jurors? Might not the workingman, when he looks at the jury situation, conclude that possibly its organization has something to do with the fact that he does not get justice from his standpoint?

Dr. SEAGER. I have no knowledge on that point. As a teacher I am exempt from jury duty, and perhaps for that reason I have not given attention to that phase of it.

The recommendations I would like to submit for your consideration are three in number. The first one I have already outlined; that is, a change in our State constitutions that would bring about, as a result, final or authoritative decisions as to the scope of the police power by the Supreme Court of the United States, so that as time went on there should be but one controlling view of what is reasonable labor legislation within the police power, and that the view laid down by the United States Supreme Court. That would have the advantage of simplifying the situation and avoiding the absurd result that in New York a law is unanimously held unconstitutional, while practically the same law, or a law presenting the same principle, out in Washington is held to be constitutional. It would concentrate also the responsibility for deciding wisely these labor cases on the court in which I think all of us are inclined to have the greatest confidence and would bring about in the course of time such special knowledge of the issues involved in these cases that the decisions, I believe, would be in harmony with the interests of both sides.

The second suggestion relates to a phase of the law that has already been discussed before you this week; that is, the view taken by the courts that legislation making it a misdemeanor for the employer to discharge a worker because of membership in a labor organization is not constitutional. That view has been uniformly taken by the State courts and by the United States Supreme Court, and it would probably be idle to argue against it, because it is now so well established. It seems to me, however, that legislation of this character is required if we are going to have real equality before the law between employers and wage earners. My suggestion is that the justification of this legislation would probably be recognized by the courts if the legislation were enacted in a slightly different form. At it has been enacted it has seemed to impose upon the employer a limitation from which the employee is exempt. It says an employer may not discharge a workman because he is a member of a labor organization, and it says nothing about a reciprocal obligation on the part of an employee. My suggestion is that the law ought also to make it a misdemeanor for the employee to give up his employment on the ground that an employer belongs to an employers' association. Practically, that is innocuous. No one ever heard of an employee giving up his employment because he did not like the employers' association to which the employer belonged. The idea that the employee should concern himself about that aspect of the situation is absurd on the face of it. He is not yet strong enough to exert adequate pressure in connection with wages and hours and things of that sort that concern him more directly and is far from ever thinking of trying to dictate to his employer the sort of association he shall belong to. But if that addition was made to this type of statute, it would then be free from the objection that it does not apply equally to both sides; and I am inclined to think, from the reasoning of the courts, which always makes prominent the view that there ought to be equality before the law, that both sides ought to be treated equally, that this legislation against the employers is class legislation, and so on—I am inclined to think that this simple modification, though it would have little practical effect, because it would make this legislation formally reciprocal, would lead the courts to uphold it as constitutional.

I have no illusions as to the benefits that would result from such legislation, however, even if it were upheld, from the point of view that it would make it easier for workers to get together in labor organizations. Employers almost certainly would be able to urge other reasons for discharging employees than membership in a labor organization, and therefore, perhaps, there would be no definite result in that respect; but I think from the point of view of clear thinking on labor issues a great deal would be accomplished, and it would register the conviction of the community that under our system of free government and in a democratic country it is an unbearable condition that employers can organize associations and pride themselves on the fact that through those associations they can prevent their employees from organizing.

I noticed in one of the newspapers recently a rather satirical article in relation to this commission—in one of the Detroit papers—suggesting that it would be a good thing for this commission to come out to Detroit and see the blessings of the open shop as exemplified there, and going on to say that the Detroit employers are organized into an association that maintains the open shop, and admitting that this is the means in that locality by which they have escaped trouble with labor organizations. In other words, the open shop means practically a situation where the labor organization can not exist. Now, I submit that that is an intolerable situation—that employers should organize to prevent their employees from organizing—and that in that situation a change in our law that would formally protect the right of the employee to organize and making it a misdemeanor for the employer to discharge the employee for organizing, and putting the same obligation on the employee with reference to the employees' association, be a step forward in connection with clear thinking on the issue, and would be a moral advance even if practically it did not amount to a great deal.

My last suggestion is along the line of the suggestion made in such an interesting way by Mr. Gregory. I was very much struck by the similarity of the conclusions which he had come to and the conclusions which I wished to submit as a suggestion.

Formal changes in the law will not, so far as I can see, help the situation very greatly; but that conclusion is one that we have come to, not merely in the field of labor legislation, but in many fields, and, as Mr. Gregory pointed out, the other field, the alternative on which we are coming to place more and more reliance, is the creation of commissions that shall not so much penalize citizens for noncompliance with the law as cooperate with them to develop more just and harmonious relations.

The trade-commission act includes that very significant section penalizing "unfair competition." It delegates to this new body the task of deciding what unfair competition is and of directing employers, if they find them guilty of unfair methods, to desist from those methods and play the game fairly.

I believe that the way out for us in this country with reference to labor problems will be found along the same line; that is, the creation of a permanent commission on industrial relations to take up the work that this commission is performing, on the basis of the reports that this commission will make, and to carry on continuously the efforts to bring about more harmonious relations between employers and employees.

All of us recognize, whether we are employers or employees, the lamentable results of the present situation, the terrible waste, from the point of view of production, of this friction between employers and employees that is so evident on every hand. Unless in some way we can develop more harmonious relations we are bound to suffer all along the line, employees as well as employers. I believe that we shall have a permanent commission on industrial relations which will have as its function the exercise of a certain amount of supervision for the purpose of enforcing publicity on all manufacturers' associations, employers' associations, and labor organizations, and the promotion of collective bargaining and more harmonious relations between the two and preparation for the work of the Board of Mediation and Arbitration that we already have when for any reason it is necessary to resort to some outside agency for maintaining industrial peace.

I believe that a commission of that sort could gradually accomplish, with reference to the relations between employers and employees, what we hope the trade commission may gradually accomplish with reference to the relations between industrial combinations and consumers—bring about fairer conditions and more harmonious relations and an opportunity to enjoy more fully the advantages we have by lessening the frequency of strikes, and lessening what is even more serious, the waste due to the constant friction between employers and employees, which shows itself in so many different ways and which hampers so much industrial enterprises in this country.

Chairman WALSH. At this point, Doctor, we will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock. Some of the commissioners—

Dr. SEAGER. I had almost finished.

Chairman WALSH. Some of the commissioners may have some questions to ask you, Doctor, and we will try not to detain you.

(Thereupon, at 12.30 o'clock, Wednesday, May 12, 1915, a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS—2 P. M.

STATEMENT OF MR. S. C. LONG.

Chairman WALSH. We will be in order. I have been requested by the commission to read publicly into the record two additional letters from Mr. S. C. Long, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co.

In the letter read the other day, naming four men who were said to have received $300 each under circumstances detailed in that letter, was mentioned Mr. William Park, general chairman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and we have these two further communications from Mr. Long:

PHILADELPHIA, May 11, 1915.

Hon. F. P. WALSH,

Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We desire to make a correction in our letter of May 7, mailed to you after the hearing before the commission closed on that date.

We find after reaching home that the amount given Mr. William Park, general chairman, B. of L. E., Pennsylvania Railroad, was $200 instead of $300.

This money was paid Mr. Park after the strike was over and everything cleared up, and was to cover expenses and compensation in connection with his efforts during the shopmen's strike at Pittsburgh in 1911 to prevent employees, and particularly engineers, from leaving the company's service, urging them to remain at work and maintain our contractual relations.

We also desire to say that this money was returned to us by Mr. Park with the verbal statement that the men he represented had paid him his expenses.

You understand that the total number of employees receiving payments after the strike was over was 511, while 295 other employees were given letters of commendation.

Yours, very truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager.

And also the following letter:

PHILADELPHIA, May 11, 1915.

Hon. F. P. WALSH,

*Chairman United States Commission on Industrial Relations,
Washington, D. C.*

DEAR SIR: In connection with our letter to you of this date requesting to be permitted to correct statement in our letter to you of May 7 regarding payment of $200 to Mr. William Park, general chairman, B. of L. E., Pennsylvania Railroad, to cover expenses and compensation in connection with service rendered during the shopmen's strike at Pittsburgh in 1911:

As an act of fairness and justice to Mr. Park, may we suggest that you send a copy of our letter, or have its contents conveyed in your own language, to Mr. Warren S. Stone, grand chief engineer, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Cleveland, Ohio?

Yours, very truly,

S. C. LONG,
General Manager.

TESTIMONY OF DR. HENRY R. SEAGER—continued.

Chairman WALSH. Now, please resume, Dr. Seager.

Dr. SEAGER. I have concluded my statement.

Chairman WALSH. Commissioner Lennon has some questions.

Commissioner LENNON. Have you given any study to the subject of the assumption of power or the granting of power by legislative enactment to courts, principally United States courts, to declare unconstitutional acts of Congress or laws passed by Congress?

Dr. SEAGER. I am not familiar with any legislation. Do you refer to legislation giving that power to the courts?

Commissioner LENNON. Yes.

Dr. SEAGER. No; my impression is that that power has been inferred from the nature of the Federal Government, created by the Constitution, and has been exercised by the courts without any legislative grant.

Commissioner LENNON. Do you believe that it is proper for courts to assume such an important function as this without having been authorized so to do by legislative enactment?

Dr. SEAGER. I am unable to see just how our Federal system of government could operate unless there was some authority that would mark the line between the jurisdiction of the States and the jurisdiction of Congress, and that authority has proved to be the courts.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, have you observed in your study personally as to whether the exercise of this power by the courts has been a cause of industrial or social unrest?

Dr. SEAGER. I think it has, decidedly; I think the exercise that has been most complained of has been under the fourteenth amendment, that was added to the Constitution for a very definite purpose, and without any thought that it would be applied to labor disputes, in connection with which the race issue did not enter, and I think the way in which that due-process clause in the fourteenth amendment has been interpreted has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction and has had a great deal to do with the feeling on the part of wage earners that the courts are not only hostile to them but are disposed to stretch their powers to show that hostility.

Commissioner LENNON. Well, from your observation and knowledge of the matter, if you were a member of this commission, would you favor suggesting that by act of Congress that this power be either taken away entirely—if they are entitled to it, as you understand it—or limited in some way?

Mr. SEAGER. No; I do not think I would be disposed to take that position, because I think as time has gone on that the United States Supreme Court has taken a broader and broader view of the scope of the police power. In nearly all of the cases I have had in mind, and to which I referred this morning, there have been strong dissenting opinions representing the views of individual judges; Justice Holmes, for example, in line with the views I imagine most wage earners would take of what might be properly done under the police power. Those dissenting opinions have come to be the dominating opinions of the Supreme Court, so I have very little misgiving myself as to the position the Supreme Court is likely to take on most of these issues. And in connection with issues where I think the court might hold an act unconstitutional, as, for example, it did in the act making it a misdemeanor for railroads to debar from employment members of trade unions; that it would take a different position if the legislation were drawn in a little different way; that is, if I indicated if it applied the same way to the employer and employee, then I think the Supreme Court would withdraw its objection. Even in that case Justices McKenna and Holmes handed in strong dissenting opinions, taking the view that that sort of restriction of railroad corporations was entirely proper and should be upheld as constitutional.

Commissioner LENNON. You feel that with all educational processes we are making progress as rapidly as we can either toward the elimination of this exercise of power by the courts or to their action being in conformity with social ideas as they prevail?

Dr. SEAGER. I think we are, and I think that the progress will be facilitated if we center the matter in the Supreme Court of the United States, as I intimated, by taking that power away from the State courts, except as they exercise it in applying the fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution on labor legislation. These decisions could then all be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I believe we have now reached a point when that tribunal is disposed to take very broad views of those matters.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I am not altogether sure whether it was you or some earlier witness who took the stand that a worker comes into court seriously handicapped as compared with the employer? Was that in your testimony, Professor?

Dr. SEAGER. I don't know that I would phrase it in that way, but I think he is at a distinct disadvantage in comparison with the employer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would make that as a general statement, including union workers or nonunion workers coming into court?

Dr. SEAGER. I would put it in this way, that the judges are very much alive to the property interests at stake. Their whole training has led them to think out very clearly the measures necessary to protect property interests. Their training has not kept them equally alive to the human interests, the other human interests at stake, which is usually the interest in which the wage earner most relies, because usually he is not a person of property, and if he has any standing in court it is not because of property rights to be protected but some other right, and in that sense I believe the attitude of the courts is more favorable to the employer than the employee. Not consciously, but as a result of their antecedent training.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Was it you, Professor, or some other prior witness who pointed out that the wage earner is handicapped in coming into court by virtue of the fact that employers as a rule can hire better and more capable and higher-priced attorneys, for example, to defend him or to prosecute the case?

Dr. SEAGER. The question that I was discussing related to poor people as compared with rich people; not employers as compared with employees, but I think that inference from what I said would be justified, except in the case of a wage earner who was a member of a well-organized trade, where the organization had means to command the highest type of legal ability.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In the case of a union worker, he is a member of the organization, and has as high legal talent as possible; in that circumstance he is on a parity with the employer?

Dr. SEAGER. I think so.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That while the worker could not afford to employ a Parker, for example, who commands $2,000 a day to appear in court, yet a union like the Hatters' Union could?

Dr. SEAGER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. And so far as that circumstance is concerned the worker is on a parity with the employer? Now, you pointed out that courts are likely to be hostile in their attitude toward workers because of their previous training and the environment of the judges; that their sympathy was bound to be with property more than with human rights. Now, is it not a fact, Professor, that charge has been made by employers frequently, and with a good deal of justice, perhaps, that they can not get a square deal in the lower courts?

Dr. SEAGER. Especially in lower courts; yes, sir; I have heard that.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That police judges, where the case was first brought up, when violence has been used, to-day to labor in order to get votes, and that the employer is placed at a very serious disadvantage in those cases? Instances have been cited and come before this commission where in Philadelphia, for example, where some strike occurred in the textile industry where some 400-odd arrests were made for violence, and they had only been able to secure 3 convictions, and I presume that that experiment has been repeated very, very many times. Would that not lend color to the fact that the employer likewise has a grievance along that line?

Dr. SEAGER. I will agree with you in reference to that and go further and say that most people who have had the misfortune to come into contact with the police courts are likely to have a grievance. That is my impression of the operation of justice in New York City, that our police magistrates, as a rule, have not a very high reputation for impartiality. We are not particularly proud of that part of our judicial system.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Then, if there was criticism to be leveled against our judicial system, it is not one sided; both sides have grievances?

Dr. SEAGER. I would say that is true in the way you have indicated, but the grievance on the side of the wage earner is decidedly stronger, because appeal may be taken to the higher courts, and the issue finally rests with the higher courts, and it is their attitude that is the more important.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, will that hold in all cases? Here are men that are brought into a lower court charged with a criminal assault, say, on some so-called scabs, and they are discharged, and it is not possible under the law, as I understand it, to bring that question to a higher court. I don't know the legal phrase, not being an attorney, but it would be twice in jeopardy?

Dr. SEAGER. I would agree as to that class of cases. I thought your question perhaps referred to employers' liability cases, where very often the result of a jury trial is less favorable to the employer than the facts warranted. These cases can usually be appealed to the higher court, and this is not to the disadvantage of the employer.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. I take it you agree that the rights to quit and discharge rest on the same basis, do they not?

Dr. SEAGER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. That is, if you as an employer have a right to discharge me, I as a worker have the right to quit you at any time and for any reason or for no reason?

Dr. SEAGER. Yes, sir.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. Now, would you regard it fair to all parties, then, to make it illegal or criminal to discriminate against men because they did or did not belong to a union?

Dr. SEAGER. Yes, sir; I should. I don't know that I should make it criminal, at any rate, not very criminal, but I think it would be desirable to make it unlawful.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, it would be unlawful to discriminate against a man because he belongs to a union or does not belong?

Dr. SEAGER. Yes, sir; that was the view taken by one of our judges of New York, Judge Bartlett, in a dissenting opinion, insisting that that was the form it ought to take.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. In other words, if I as a worker have the right to refuse to work, that you, because you are not what is called an employer of union labor, that you, on the other hand, have a perfect right to dismiss me because I was a union worker?

Dr. SEAGER. I would put it the other way around, and not give either one the right.

Commissioner WEINSTOCK. You would put both on an absolute parity?

Dr. SEAGER. Yes, sir.
